Forward in '48

Bishop Sturtevant of the Episcopal Diocese of Fond du Lac, some time ago summoned his people to go forward in ten simple ways.

MOVE FORWARD your seat at worship. Don't be a back seat Christian.

MOVE FORWARD your time of arrival for service to permit a few minutes of quiet prayer and meditation, of self-examination and intention, before the service begins.

MOVE FORWARD your singing and responding from the inner recesses of your throat and soul to the open space of God's world, sharing audibly and joyously in the praises of heaven.

MOVE FORWARD your thinking from the dim caves of tradition to the open court of vision, overcoming inertia to come to grips with your need of personal religion.

MOVE FORWARD after worship to greet your fellow Christians warmly.

MOVE FORWARD your giving to the plane of regularity in the use of your envelopes weekly.

MOVE FORWARD the spirit of religion in your home by giving prayer an earlier place in the day, and not just the tired end. Try a few prayers in addition to grace at supper table with the family.

MOVE FORWARD the daily meditation or reading from the Forward Movement booklet to a fresher, brighter place in the day's program. A page a day, two minutes: an enduring, dividend-paying investment.

MOVE FORWARD your Christian love and forbearance to replace family argument and bickering, and move your household forward in the realm of conscious solidarity as an essential unit in God's Family.

MOVE FORWARD your charity to include all humanity, combating selfish aloofness with real concern for your neighbor—wherever he is.

NEWS AND VIEWS

We are rerunning the Christmas subscription blank in this issue. If you failed to use it before Christmas, why not use it now?

Dean Luther Weigle of the Yale Divinity School has been invited to give the Cole Lectures at Vanderbilt University in April of 1948.

Dr. W. M. Jay, who served churches in North Carolina and Virginia, has retired from the active ministry and is living at Aspers, Pa.

The church at Eaton, Ohio, has celebrated its fiftieth year by redecorating the interior of the entire building. Appropriate anniversary events included a dinner followed by a service conducted by a former pastor, the Rev. E. T. Cotton of Plymouth Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. Other improvements have been made at both the church and the manse. A new pipe organ, as a memorial to the veterans of World War II, is being subscribed to generously.

DR. J. R. MOTT TO LECTURE AT ASHLAND, VA.

Dr. John R. Mott, Nobel Prize for Peace winner for 1947, will deliver the Brown Lectures at Randolph-Macon College February 18-20. Dr. J. Earl Moreland, president of Randolph-Macon has announced.

Awarded the Nobel Prize for Peace on behalf of world peace, Dr. Mott, in addition to his other duties, is at present serving as president of the World Alliance of the YMCA.

Dr. Mott, born in New York in 1865, holds a Ph.B. degree from Cornell University; M. A. degree from Yale, and honorary degrees from Princeton University, Brown University, the University of Edinburgh, and Toronto University. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographic Society, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, and a member of the Yale, Princeton, and Cornell Clubs in New York City.

He began his world travels even before his election as secretary of the international committee of YMCA in 1915. He has made two trips to Europe during the past twelve months, one on behalf of the YMCA and the Christian churches, and the other under the joint direction of the YMCA and government authorities.

ROSEMONT RECEIVES CARILLON AS CHRISTMAS GIFT.

Rev. H. G. Council, Jr., has announced the Christmas gift of Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Smith to the Rosemont Christian Church a 34-note, 4-Octave Liberty Carillon, given in memory of Mrs. B. F. (Aunt Betty) Gibson.

The formal presentation was made by Mr. Smith at the morning worship service December 21. The gift was accepted on behalf of the church by Mr. H. R. Morrison, deacon and member of the Official Board. Mr. Council then led the congregation in a special service of dedication. The service of dedication was closed by Mrs. F. A. Goforth, church organist and granddaughter of Mrs. B. F. Gibson, playing the carillon for the first time two selections of dedicatory music: "Holy, Holy, Holy" and "The Church's One Foundation."

Mr. J. Austin Smith, President of Liberty Carillons, Inc., says of the carillon, "Here is a spiritual power, as one listener said, 'which can light a thousand candles with one crashing chord.' For it can lift the spirit and meaning of the sanctuary from cloistered halls out into the world—into the community, into the streets, into the homes. No door can be locked against it. And no mind can be closed to it, for its eloquent deluge can break through preoccupation; demand that it be heard, nudge conscience, and plow soil in preparation for what it may receive once this pull has brought that person across the threshold of a church. In short it can help do outside the church—in the streets and out in the community—what choirs and ministers do inside the church."

Mr. O. F. Smith said in part, "Mrs. Smith and I want to present this Carillon to Rosemont Church at this Christmas time in loving memory of one whose steadfast Christian character and loyal devotion to her church made her one of the guiding spirit of this congregation in years gone by, and also made such a deep and lasting impression upon our lives by her great example—Aunt Betty Gibson."

The people of Rosemont Christian Church have wanted a bell for a long time to sound the call to worship; and when they were presented with a carillon they were overjoyed.

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

C. W. V. R. CONTRIBUTIONS.

Dear Friends:

Below is a report of funds received from the churches of The Southern Convention for relief of suffering little babies, boys, girl, men and women in lands torn by war and destruction. There are millions who are cold, hungry, and sick. Our churches' National Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction—in His Name—is dreadfully in need of funds with which to carry on our share in the relief of our brethren in Christ overseas.

The year is almost gone. Any funds received by us up to January 12 may be counted in 1947 totals. The quota set by The Southern Convention is $7,000 for the year. You will see that only $5,217.62 has been paid by our churches to date. We are short $1,782.38 of our goal. We must not fail to pay the full quota.

Perhaps your church or Sunday School has funds for C.W.V.R. on hand. If so, please send them to The Convention Office at once and if you have not received an offering for World Relief during 1947, won't you do so and send us the contributions by January 12?

Our quota of $7,000 is woefully small as compared to other Conferences and Convention of the denomination.

The national goal is $2.00 per member. We have 33,000 members in The Southern Convention and at $2.00 per member, our quota should be $66,000 for 1947! So you see how far we will fall below the national goal if we don't contribute at least $7,000 for the year. Surely we don't love the Lord less than others!

Please send your gifts for C.W.V.R. at once.

W. T. SCOTT, Supt.

MOMENTOUS MEETINGS.

The New Year will bring within our reach an imposing list of significant meetings. Hearty and intelligent participation by many of our people should greatly strengthen and advance the cause of righteousness.

Delegates from the United States and foreign countries are meeting currently in Richmond, Va., for a Moral Re-Armament Assembly. Dr. Frank Buchman is the leader of this dynamic group which has attained world-wide attention. . . . Representatives of our churches will gather at Elon on January 5 to chart a program of Evangelism for the Southern Convention.

How science can save this nation from the fate of older civilizations which misused their resources and starved themselves to death will be outlined at a Conservation Conference, January 11-13 at Old Point. Professor Cecil F. De La Barre of V.P.I. will be chairman, and some of the nation's leading scientists, agriculturalists and sociological experts will participate. Professor De La Barre has issued this statement: "By using the knowledge available to us, we can maintain and even increase the fertility of our soils, the productivity of our waters and woodlands, and we can find adequate substitutes for, and better ways of, using our fast-diminishing mineral resources."

A Protestant Church Convocation will be held in Atlanta January 13 through 15. Invitations have been extended to more than one thousand chosen delegates from all departments of church life, from councils of churches and ministerial associations, YW and YMCA's, church related colleges and theological seminaries to attend what is characterized as "the most significant church gathering ever to assemble in the Southeast." The theme for the Convocation program is "Protestantism faces its task in the Southeast." The Virginia Convocation of Churches will be held in Richmond January 20, 21, with Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison as the feature speaker.

The Mid-Winter Meeting of our Home Boards will be in session at Grand Rapids the last week in January. . . . Nationally known speakers will appear on the program of the Richmond Preaching Mission February 1-8. . . . The meetings of the Southern Convention and the General Council should bring our people to a spiritual climax. Pray for God's blessings and guidance as we plan for and participate in these momentous meetings.

JESUS AFTER NINETEEN CENTURIES.

We hear two typical comments concerning Jesus and his way of life. One naively claims that all we need to do is to "come to Jesus" and all will be well. . . . The other blandly announces that "Christianity has not failed: it has not been tried." Both are examples of oversimplification.

Many came to Jesus in his days of the fish; but life's problems and difficulties were not removed. He helped them in the solution of their problems, but he himself created for them other problems so that, for instance, members of the same household were set at variance one with another. The oft-repeated statement that Christianity has never been tried is an arresting half-truth, but taken at its face value, is sheer nonsense. While it is true that it has never been tried to the limit of its beneficence in individual and corporate life in particular, it has been tried in countless lives and situations with untold advantages.

Harris Franklin Rall, one of our contemporary theologians, has given this estimate: "Jesus set before men the ways of life: to fear God, to hold all men sacred without distinction, to know that we are all joined for good or ill, to unite in common effort for common weal, to live by love and keep aflame the passion for truth and justice and peace. Despite her defects, the church through the centuries, by her prophets and saints, by the gospel she preached and the gospels which she gave men to read, has kept this way of life before men. Increasingly Christ has become the conscience of humanity, even when men do not name his name. Through the years there has been a growing company of men who have been witnesses to those truths by their life, men of faith and good will. The Christian fellowship has been a fact. There are changes which stand out when you compare 46 A.D. with 1947. Then Rome's imperialism, now the acceptance of the ideal of democracy and its growing practices. Slavery is banished or disguised and furtive, never defended. Racism stands condemned. Woman is no more the chattel of man. Childhood's rights are defended. Hospitals dot the land. And back of all this is Christ and the power of his spirit."

The letters A.D. which appear on our coins and calendars remind us that the life and influence of Jesus must be multiplied by 1948. Is it possible that our lives may bless humanity in such multiples? Yes, if our lives are ranked to his; for his is an ongoing influence.

It is heartening to read again the brief biography which was written by Bishop Brooks: "Here is a man who was born in an obscure village, the child of a peasant woman. He grew up in another obscure village. He worked in a carpenter shop until He was thirty, and then for three years He was an itinerant preacher. He never wrote a book. He never held an office. He never owned a home. He never had a family. He never went to college. He never travelled two hundred miles from the place where He was born. He never did one of the things that usually accompany greatness. He had no credentials but Himself.

"While still a young man the tide of popular opinion turned against Him. His friends ran away. One of them denied Him. He was turned over to His enemies.

"He went through a mockery of a trial. He was nailed upon a cross between two thieves. While He was dyling His executioners gambled for the only piece of property He had on earth—His coat. When He was dead He was taken down and laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend.

"Nineteen wide centuries have come and gone and today He is the centerpiece of the human race and the leader of the column of progress. I am far within the mark when I say that not all the armies that ever marched, and all the navies that ever were built, and all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have ever affected the life of man upon this earth as powerfully as has this one solitary LIFE."

Christ's Churches Must Unite

By REV. G. BROMLEY OXNAM.*

I have a radical proposal to make: I suggest that we of the churches of Christ begin now to practice what we preach. I believe that the Christian churches should, must, and can unite into a world-wide Church of Christ.

It is not new, of course, to assert that the churches which Christ bequeathed to us as one church should re-unite. For many centuries, men of Godly spirit have talked of union. Men of perhaps equally good intentions but certainly of less Godly spirit have even tortured and murdered other men in the effort to compel union. Between the day of Luther and our own time, tens of thousands of delegates to thousands of conferences, conventions, convocations, and congresses have talked the desirability of union into a mere truism.

Wonderfully have we preached!

But too often sinfully have we practiced!

While we have talked of union, our church, more like the unadmirable amoeba than like the House of God, has continued to divide. We have spawned sects, cults, and schisms in quantities that rival the mass production feats of Detroit. In the United States alone, we now have 256 divisions of what we like to call, in wonderful disregard of what we have made of it, "the holy catholic church."

If it weren't sacrilege, such contrast between preachment and practice could be seen as funny.

No, I am by no means the first to say that the segments of the Christian church should re-unite. And neither am I first to say that the church must unite. Many men have seen, before, the handwriting on the wall. The necessity to unite is obvious. Even if we could ignore Christ's own clear command to unity, the work a day world history relentlessly drives us.

In this day, with the mushroom-clouds that rose over Hiroshima and Nagasaki darkening the spirit and the minds of all mankind, the absolute necessity of unity among the followers of Christ is as inescapable as the very burden of life itself.

We know that only if the peoples of the world now translate into material codes the Christian law of universal brotherhood can we escape the atomic holocaust which we have prepared for ourselves. With a certainty that needs no argument, we know that both governments and the men who live under governments must live as our Lord commanded—or perish.

Yet, at this juncture, our church can speak about unity with but little effect. How can we preach brotherhood to secular governments while among ourselves we divide, quarrel, and bicker? How can we effectively urge the relative unimportance of worldly "spheres of influence" while our own church still subdivides in disagreement as to whether baptism should be by immersion face down or face up?

The answer is, of course, that we cannot.

We cannot preach with power, either to men who already accept Christ or to men who follow other faiths, when our consciences condemn the contradiction between a gospel that unites and our practice of a polity that divides.

We can no longer ask God to bless us in wasting wealth and talent in useless duplication, not to say downright competition. Blind nationalism and chauvinism are many times more sinful within Christ's church than even within the United Nations.

We cannot win the world for Christ with the tactics of guerilla warfare. We are not a resistance movement. We hold that Christ is to conquer, and that before His name every knee shall bow.

This calls for general staff, grand strategy, and an army.

This means union!

But if I am not first in proclaiming that our church should and must re-unite then, one might ask, wherein lies my present special point. And I answer: now, today, let us stop merely preaching of union; let us practice it. I believe that we not only should, and must, but that we can!

Let us now consider what we like to call "practical" matters.

The church is divided into many churches. There are Protestant churches, the Eastern Orthodox churches, and the Roman Catholic church.

Union of Christendom can never be achieved, of course, if one part of the universal church insists that all other parts shall discard their creative contributions and deny their convictions. Rather, all things that are good must be absorbed into all parts of the church.

It is unfortunate but true that, at present, the Roman Catholic church refuses to consider union except if all other churches repudiate their own contributions and convictions and return to Rome. The first steps toward union, therefore, must be taken by the Protestant communions.

The Protestant churches and the Eastern Orthodox churches already have instituted a brotherly and inspiring cooperation. The Protestant churches must continue and extend this material and spiritual communion with the Eastern churches. There are many ways in which this course can be pursued.

In the meantime, the Protestant churches must and can unite their own house.

I believe that union of the larger Protestant denominations can—if we have the will—be effected within a decade.

Basically, we already are one in a common loyalty to Jesus Christ. In the field of the spirit we never have broken our union.

In material fields we prove every day the possibility and practicability of physical union.

There are, as I have said, 256 Christian religious bodies in the United States. Eighty-two per cent of the members of all of these, however, are included in only 13 organizations. The 55 largest bodies include 96.4 per cent of all the membership of all the churches. The remaining 201 bodies have but 3.6 per cent of the membership. In these figures there is proof of an encouraging degree of unity already existing.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On the 5th and 6th of January ministers of the Southern Convention will meet at Elon for a conference on winning others to Christ. I hope we shall have every pastor present, and all others of our ministers who can possibly attend. We need to plan our work. The records are discouraging. And the work has not been done as well as it should have been. If we all realize that, and seek the divine direction and help for the coming year, and then set ourselves to the task of building up our churches in the spirit of winning others we shall be able to rejoice in the results.

The difficulties are many. The claims on the time of both ministers and their memberships have a tendency to get us running here and there with the lesser things, and leave the larger thing behind. We need to keep close to the Christ in daily morning prayer and Bible study. We need to ask Him what He would have us do, and to wait long enough to have some idea at least of what His reply was. And then we should pray for strength and courage to carry out His command. To hurry to the task of a day without waiting in prayer and meditation in the morning is to lose time.

Perhaps, too, we need in winning others to Christ to do what He told His disciples to do, "Lift up your eyes, and look . . ." Have we truly looked for the prospective members? Have we gone about it in a systematic, or any other, way? Do we know who is unchurched in our community, and why? Is there a definiteness in the searching or "looking" anyways near comparable with that of the world? Say the tax collector, or the insurance man, or the postman? The children of this world find the folks. They look unto the fields. Are we letting them be wiser than we are? Such a planning conference as we are having at Elon should help us to search ourselves, and ask ourselves if we really did seriously go out to "see" what the "fields" were.

But this is not all. The Master asked His followers to get help. To have others with us as we go into the fields for the harvest. I believe we have missed this directive farther than the one just mentioned, as poorly as we have, many of us, done the "looking" unto the fields, we have done less well in organizing or securing and organizing helpers. We are not to do this work alone. We are to have God's help as expressed through the help of His servants, and through the direction of His Holy Spirit. How can a crew of workmen be directed if there are not workmen? God is in need of our bringing into willingness to serve Him in winning others a goodly number of our members. They need the joy and thrill of it. We need the joy and thrill of securing their help with us. We all need the fellowship of this kind of definite, constructive work for our churches.

Let's hear Him saying: "Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields . . . the laborers are few, pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth laborers into His harvest."

JOHN G. TRUITT.

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

Dear Editor:

From many quarters in the Southern Convention, and the Southland, the sentiment is being vocally uttered and verbally printed by many that the merger will not receive their approbation unless the proposed name is changed. Two, at least, have openly avowed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that they will vote against "The Basis of Union" unless the name is changed to The United Christian Church. These two argue for "Christian" because, they say, this appellation is the only "God-Given" name for a United Church. They base such an argument primarily on four verses of Scripture: Isaiah 62:2, Acts 11:26, Acts 26:28 and I Peter 4:16.

Let us take each verse in order and see how "God-Given" the name that is a requisite—or prerequisite—to get some to vote approval of the Union:

1. Isaiah 62:2—"And thou shalt be called by a new name." This verse is taken right out of its context and is construed as predicting that the followers of Christ are to be called "Christians." But what did Deutero—or Trito—Isaiah really have in mind when he made such a statement? This portion of Scripture was written sometime after 586 B. C. when Jerusalem was destroyed and the bulk of the Hebrews was carried into captivity in Mesopotamia, and before many of them had returned to Palestine under the leadership of Ezra and Nehemiah, 400-300 B. C. The writer is proclaiming better times for Zion. And here is the clue of the context, Isaiah 62:4: "Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Hepsibah (My - delight - is - in her), and thy land Beulah (Married); for Jehovah delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married." That is the new name for Zion: from "Forsaken" to "My - delight - is - in her;" from "Desolate" to "Married." The new name has nothing whatsoever to do with the followers of Christ.

2. Acts 11:26—"And that the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." Notice that it does not say the followers of Christ called themselves "Christians." The form of Luke's statement, "were called," shows that the name was first applied to the company of disciples by non-Christian outsiders or neighbors. (The Greek word translated "were called" is used in different senses in the New Testament. Translated literally it could mean "transacted business" under the name of Christians, that is, they were commonly known as such.)

The word "Christians" means "Messianists," or the followers of Jesus, who held that he was the Messiah. As such it would not have been coined by non-Christian Jews because they did not hold Jesus to be the Messiah; but it could have been coined by non-Christian Gentiles who were familiar with only one sect of "Messianists" (for there were other groups that held that their leader was the Messiah), the followers of Jesus, which held that the Messiah had appeared.

The Greek word chrestos ("good, useful") was pronounced almost like Christos ("Christ"). "Christians" is found in inscriptions and elsewhere spelled "Chrestians;" and one cannot overlook the fact that Emperor Claudius is said to have expelled the Jews for their constant tumults about Chrestos. Possibly originally the name was one of derision, a bit of slang. The "Christians" were not merely those who proclaimed Jesus as the "Christ," but they may also have been the "goody-goodies" of the wags of Antioch. There is nothing "Heaven-born" in the name; it was coined by those who hated the Christians, perhaps with a hatred as great as have those who call Japanese, "Japs," and Negroes, "Niggers."

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

WHEN THE STUDENTS ARE HOME FOR CHRISTMAS.

A strange quiet, to which we are unaccustomed, prevails on the campus. The students are home for Christmas! How different to all the hustle and hum of the past months. The biggest enrollment in the history of Elon fills her classrooms, and her halls are jammed as classes change. The rumble of conversation and the happy laughter of youth brings an unconscious smile to one's face and the bracing experience of being so completely surrounded by the youth of our generation as they look toward the future and endure the grind of four years of preparation for it is an experience which lends hope for the future and the world.

These young people are not fickle, but firm and serious. To watch young men as they come back from service with the Armed Forces of our country—come back literally from all over the world—and swing into the routine of college classes and fifty-minute lectures, gives one a new sense of their ability to adjust themselves to whatever they may need to face to get the job done, whether it be fighting a war or pursuing the courses laid down for their study. It is amazing how quickly they can adjust themselves! It is equally amazing that so very few of them fail in their studies.

But everything will not stop because the students are away. There is much preparation for their return January 5. Already hammers and saws are ringing and swishing through the timber used to make amends for the much use the property is seeing. Strange, too, that there can be so much needing constant attention, and of course many things must be done while the buildings can be closed. Then there are the men who must stay close by our heating system to keep it going. Now that the boilers can cool off, they must be gone over carefully and put into the best possible condition for the strain of the winter months after Christmas. What a tragedy it would be if these boilers should fail before the new heating plant is ready for use—and we are constantly faced with that possibility. To think of the consequences of the failure of this heating equipment with eight hundred students and faculty depending upon it to keep them warm while they do their work—and what would happen, and how tragic, if Elon had to close, as she most certainly would have to do if the heating plant failed! These considerations, and possibilities make those of us who are close to the scene realize that Dr. Smith has not been speaking idle words in his appeals to our pastors and churches to come through with the payments of their necessary share to rush the new heating plant to a finish. (And lest you should think I am talking for Dr. Smith I should like to say that he has no more idea I am writing this than you do.)

Though I have always loved Elon, being here every day with the men and women who are guiding the minds and influencing the lives of our young people, mixing as I do with the students constantly, hearing them think out loud about life and the world they face, gives me a deeper sense of the importance of Elon College to our churches and to the Kingdom of God. What she has been to many of us for long years she is becoming to hundreds of young men and women every day. We salute the Elon of the past! Out of our love and devotion to the Elon of today we shall make it possible for her to become the Elon which coming generations must have if they are to take over and carry on the work of the Kingdom of God through the churches out of which they shall surely find their way into her sacred walls of learning. She deserves our love, our loyalty, and our prayers and our support.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

Our Church in the Southern Convention needs to keep before it the needs of the College in the present emergency. Each week some church or churches endeavor to do something about this obligation. It is an obligation placed upon every church in the Convention. Many of our churches have accepted this obligation and have done something about it. Many others are either indifferent or feel that they have such great responsibilities at home that they feel they cannot do anything about the needs of their College. If the churches of the Convention could realize the actual needs and the seriousness of the present emergency, I am sure that they would lose no time in endeavoring to meet their responsibilities.

During the week our Greensboro Church has completed its quota and gone beyond a few dollars. This certainly is encouraging and it is hoped that many of our other delinquent churches will do as Greensboro has done.

The power plant is progressing slowly but surely. We are finding it difficult to get some necessary materials. We still hope that the present heating plant will continue to operate until we are able to complete the new one. We are grateful for every contribution and assistance.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is always a challenge to support a worthwhile institution, an institution that is making a worthwhile contribution. Not in the history of our church was the College needed any more than it is needed today. We need to be reminded of the conditions under which the College was founded, the hopes and aspirations of its founders. Those early pioneers were thinking not of themselves nor of the immediate needs of their local churches, but they were thinking of their denomination, of its responsibilities, problems, and future. They knew full well that their church could not take its place in an intelligent society without an informed and trained leadership. They were willing to pay the price that their Church might be able to render the service that it should and cooperate with other denominations in an effort to carry the gospel to the whole world. They did a splendid job. They built well and for the future. It now becomes our responsibility to take up where they left off and see that their hopes and ambitions are realized as completely as possible. It meant sacrifice to build the College; it will certainly mean sacrifice to keep it.

Elon College is now facing its most serious emergency. Tax-supported schools are not only receiving support from their respective states but they have entered the field of be-

A LETTER FROM SHAOWU.

November 30, 1947.

(Excerpts from Dr. Edward Riggs' letter to Rev. James E. Walter of the American Board.)

I wrote you last summer, telling of our success in getting so many of our material needs filled by CNRRA, and asking that further things be held up, pending our finding out more clearly what we will still be able to get from that source, and mentioning the difficulties in getting shipments through Customs without excessive trouble and expense. As further progress noted on those matters, I might say that although CNRRA has theoretically folded up, the supply of goods from that source has not yet ceased, although it may do so any time now. As for Customs, the situation is worse than ever. I suggest that no packages or groups of packages be mailed from any one place with a declaration valuation of over $50. Or, if they are strictly medical and hospital supplies, they can be sent to Mr. Meeken, who has a system for getting them in duty-free.

Dorothy Jackson suggests that folks at home might be interested in giving cash to help pay for lots of the new anti-malarial medicine, Paludrine, which I am buying in Hongkong (because it is cheaper there than its equivalents in America). I am planning a drive to distribute it in fairly large amounts all over this area and put over the idea of its use, taken in regular doses of one tablet a week, to prevent malaria, which takes such a terrific toll in lost time from illness, and lost energy and morale from the debilitating effect of the disease on the body. I am ordering this drug, as fast as I get the money to pay for it, in lots of 8,000 tablets for $50. Eight thousand tablets will cure two or three thousand attacks of malaria, or will prevent 400 people from coming down with the disease for a whole season. Actually the money will go much further, because a good proportion of the people are willing and able to pay a little bit themselves. This is one medical matter which is simple enough for them to understand and accept, so money spent for such a purpose will probably go a lot farther than for almost anything else I can think of now.

Another thing which might be feasible to send out would be quantities of old, discarded X-ray film, preferably the largest size of 14 x 17. When I first arrived in Fukien, I heard that there was no glass left in the hospital. Union Hospital gave me a fairly large supply of old films to take up with me. We found a way to wash off the silver deposit so that the films were rendered transparent, then we inserted them in window frames and they do perfectly well as glass. This store of old films was all they had in Foochow; they were the old files of pre-war X-rays, which were no longer of any use because all the accompanying records had been destroyed by the Japanese. Ordinarily, hospitals file their old films for several years at least before throwing them away. I had not previously considered such a thing worth the effort of packing up and shipping across the ocean from America. But we still have nearly half our windows uncovered, which we will have to board up this winter. Several hundred sheets of some American hospitals discarded film would make an awfully bulky and heavy package, but infinitely less heavy and expensive than a similar amount of glass. So if anybody has access to such discarded film and is interested, we would appreciate its being sent along—in care of Mr. Meeken, so that he can get it through Customs for us.

One more item we could use, if any person or group is rich enough to afford it, would be a set of testing lenses for eye refraction (the kit of trial lenses and accessory instruments which oculists use to test the eyes for glasses). Plenty of people here need glasses desperately, but there is no way to prescribe for them.

FILL A SHIP WITH FRIENDSHIP.

By RUTH ELLIOTT, Overseas Relief Consultant, North Carolina Council of Churches, College Station, Durham.

A shipload of clothing, shoes and bedding is the goal of the state-wide drive for overseas relief, January 25-

31. Sponsored by the North Carolina Council of Churches, the aim of the drive is to reach every household in the state in an effort to "Fill a Ship with Friendship." With a ship's cargo estimated at three and one-half million pounds, that means an average of one pound of goods from everyone in the state is needed to reach the goal.

Organized on a county basis, chairmen have been sought in each of the state's one hundred counties from among church and lay leaders. Representatives of almost all denominations are among the leaders of the drive. Throughout the state, plans are made for house-to-house collections.

All materials contributed will be sent overseas through interdenominational church relief organization, Church World Service. They will go to the Church World Service Center located at New Windsor, Maryland, for sorting and packing. Shipment through this church agency guarantees that all goods will be packed and shipped promptly, that overhead costs will be at a minimum and that distribution will be made abroad on the basis of need alone.

Through the new Church World Service film, This Road We Walk, a vivid picture of needs and work overseas is given. There are fifty prints of the motion picture in North Carolina for the drive. The film is 16 mm. sound and about twenty minutes in length.

Contributions asked are: good used clothing, shoes (tied in pairs), bedding, linens, kitchenware, silverware, soap and candles.

Remember the dates: January 25-31. Remember the goal: "Fill a Ship with Friendship." Give through your local drive.

WOMAN'S SOCIETY OF BEREA CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Berea Christian Church held their December meeting and Christmas party combined with Rev. and Mrs. Clyde L. Fields at their home in Reidsville, N. C., on December 4, 1947. Guests for the evening were the husbands of each member present. An enjoyable and appropriate program with the Christmas Spirit prevailing, was rendered by Mrs. Fields. A short business session preceded the program. A short recording of each one present was made by Rev. Fields and the exchange of Pollyanna gifts climaxed the evening.

The Rural Church

An Address by DR. MARK RICH, Secretary of the Town and Country Committee of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, N.Y.C., Delivered at the Fourth National Convocation on the Church in Town and Country, Rochester, New York, Thursday, November 6, 1947

The rural church movement has a constant concern that the church as an institution be vigorous and strong. Significant as the church as an institution is, it is vulnerable to devastating influences. Witness old Russia to see a church gone corrupt with power. The church may enslave people more than it frees them. See our own country-side to discover churches ossified in the midst of change. See churches in growing communities, blind and obstinate in the face of imperative need for outreach. Churches may become cold and old, narrow and restricted, broad and directionless, dying and dead.

There are discoverable factors making for successful churches. On the other hand, the deadly virus which weakens and kills churches can be discovered and described.

Many pastors now do not inaugurate a significant program of church action without first making a survey. Objectives and scientific studies are widely advocated. They are as necessary to growth and progress in church work as scientific investigation is to advance in medicine.

Facts are the rule against which a strong rural church will be built. Guesswork must be kept to a minimum. The stake is too great for the churches to take chances on not knowing the situation in which they work. Facts to the movement are like a light which helps a man walk in the dark.

The rural church movement needs to discover an adequate way of getting to the people an understanding of what a vital rural church can mean in the life of the community and the nation. The rural churches of America, by and large, would be helped immeasurably by regular doses of spiritual vitamin complex.

They think too little of themselves in terms of potential strength. Their task is conceived on too small a scale. They have too little understanding of Christianity as a dynamic force in all areas of life. Some see what a spiritual force it can be to the individual. Fewer see that it can give color, character and power to the community.

Without discounting spirit, prayer, and belief, I am compelled to put in a strong plea that the country church adopt more effective techniques for work,

There should be an extensive survey program in the area of testing rural church programs and methods. Such survey efforts would augment those of a general nature now made by national agencies.

We need better-trained ministers for our rural churches. It is pointed out that too many pastors are (1) untrained and uninterested in progressive methods, (2) trained but not interested in the rural church, and (3) short-term pastorates who remain too short a time to influence a church. From available information one might estimate that at least one-half of rural Protestant ministers are giving only part-time to the pastorate. The remainder are attending school, working at secular occupations or living in semi-retirement.

A significant and extensive training program has been developed during the past twenty-five years. Many seminaries have added to the staff a specialist in rural church work. Colleges of Agriculture have sponsored short-term schools and conferences. The home mission boards have established or encouraged schools. Regional, state and local conferences have been held. The training of the rural ministry has become one of the most widely discussed themes, yet only a beginning has been made, if we want adequately trained ministers.

Has the time not come when there should be a school or schools for the training of rural ministers? Such a school should be staffed by corps of trained teachers who give full time to observation and study of the rural church, who become thoroughly familiar with the various aspects of a minister's duties and of the function of the rural church in the world, and who are competent teachers. This school might compare to a school of medicine, or to a well-developed department of rural sociology, offering a minimum of one year of specialized training.

If the movement is to go forward in strength the leadership must have those qualities which mark the able leaders of our time and of the past times. These are men who are challenged by Christian work in the country, men who are creative in meeting the needs of country people, men who have an adequate understanding of a comprehensive program, men who understand and love rural people, men who see their tasks as having primary significance, men who are first and foremost seeking to live the Christian life in contemporary society.

WORLD CHURCH LEADERS TO BROADCAST ON CHRISTIAN UNITY.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and a recently-elected Bishop of the newly-formed United Church of South India are among the speakers to be heard during January in a four-week CBS "Church of the Air" series devoted to the theme of Christian Unity.

The Rev. Dr. Truman Douglass, executive vice-president of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches, will conduct the series and also speak on each of the broadcasts, January 4, 11, 18 and 25 (CBS, 10:00-10:30 A. M., EST).

Bishop Sabapathy Kulandran, who prior to his recent elevation, was a minister of the South India United Church, opens the series on January 4. His address, transcribed in Colombo, Ceylon, will be broadcast from London.

The Most Rev. and Rt. Hon. Geoffrey Francis Fisher, Archbishop of Canterbury, will talk from the CBS headquarters in London, on January 11.

The remaining two speakers are Dr. T. W. Jones, Moderator of the United Church of Canada, speaking from Canada on January 18; and Wilbur LaRoe, Jr., of Washington, D. C., lay Moderator of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., heard from San Francisco, January 25.

With Christian Unity as the overall theme of the four broadcasts, each program has been individually themed to inspirational phrases from the hymn, "Onward Christian Soldiers," as follows: January 4, "Like a Mighty Army;" January 11, "We Are Not Divided;" January 18, "All One Body We;" January 25, "Onward Then, Ye People."

Dr. Douglass will speak on each broadcast, on the following topics: January 4, "Your Stake in Christian Unity;" January 11, "The Unity We Have;" January 18, "The Unity We Can Have;" January 25, "What You Can Do for Unity."

This special group of "Church of the Air" programs has been arranged in cooperation with the Rev. Everett C. Parker, Director of the Joint Religious Radio Committee, and member of the CBS Board of Consultants for the Church of the Air.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. House, Editor

Dear Friends:

Happy New Year! This is the 104th year that THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been published and it doesn't look so old, does it? This is the time of year that older people make what they call "New Year's Resolutions." We sometimes hear them say, too, "Going to turn over a new leaf." Those are good things to do, but rather foolish because they usually don't keep their resolutions. Any time of the year is a good time to change or break bad habits. The idea is of course, that with a new year, one may make a new beginning. If you decide to make some resolutions I hope you will keep them.

Next Tuesday will be Twelfth Night," or as it was sometimes called long ago, "Old Christmas." Traditionally this is the time that the Wise Men were supposed to have visited the Christ Child and carried their gifts. In the language of the church it is called Epiphany and is observed with the burning of many candles. The name "Twelfth Night" comes from the fact that the days are counted from Christmas and there are exactly twelve.

During the holidays I had a very nice letter from Mrs. Todd who was editor of this page for a long time. She and her family are living in Missouri now and like it very much. She promises to write for us soon and I hope she will!

Back to resolutions—I wish some of you would resolve to write a letter for this page, or send us a story, or poem that you have written. It would be nice to hear from some of the ministerial children in our Convention family.

ANN KEEPS CHRISTMAS.

On New Year's Day Ann sat in the big armchair by the window and felt very sad. A tear rolled down her face and splashed on her arm. Ann's mother was very busy taking down the Christmas decorations. She looked at Ann and stopped.

"Honey, what's the matter?"

"Oh, Mommy, I want Christmas to last forever and ever and ever."

"I see," said mother, "maybe we can find ways to make it last for a long time."

"How?"

"Well, let's see," said mother, as she sat on the arm of Ann's chair.

"We can put our tree in the back yard for the birds—we can put on bits of suet, raisins and toast crumbs."

Ann interrupted, "Mother, we can send our cards to a missionary who can use them."

"Yes," said mother, "Dorothy Jackson can use old Christmas and greeting cards. I read about it in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Then, we can remember to be cheerful and happy throughout the year. We can begin to buy presents now for next year, too."

"Yes," said Ann, "I think we can make Christmas stretch."

DEVELOPING THE SPIRIT OF GENEROSITY.

By ANNIE L. GAETZ.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

We are inclined to consider generosity a natural trait, but as a rule, children are not born generous. It is a virtue needing much cultivation, and the more cultivation it has, the more beautiful it becomes—as is the case with a plant that bears beautiful flowers. If children are not taught to be generous, they miss much of the joy of life.

I once had a dear little boy visiting me, the only child of unusually fine parents. It surprised me that he simply would not divide his candy or anything of that sort with others, and yet he would gather armfuls of wild flowers for me and seem to derive the greatest pleasure in doing this. The fact was that he had a generous spirit, but he had never been taught the full joy of giving. It was no sacrifice on his part to give me the flowers; he could go back and pick as many more as he liked for himself. How much pleasure he was missing every day because he had never been taught to make small sacrifices for others.

Two sisters, the only children of well-to-do farmers, attended the higher grades of our public school. The parents were good, honest people, but very careful of this world's possessions. The girls had been taught to divide with each other, and in this respect they were very generous. The thought never seemed to occur to them that they might share with others, or that theirs was a limited generosity.

When we are giving presents to friends, we should take those opportunities to teach our children, not only the joy, but the art of giving, for there is a real art in it. They must learn that we should not give thoughtlessly—as a mere matter of form. Let us talk over our giving with our children, and let them help to decide just what gifts would be most appreciated in each case. We should teach them that we give, not because a gift will be expected from us, but to bring real pleasure to the recipient, and teach them also that in giving we, too, derive a real pleasure.

In one family, the children, on Christmas Eve, always prepare a plate of refreshments to be left on the table for Santa Claus. They take just as much delight in preparing this plate of goodies as in hanging up their stockings. I believe Santa thoroughly enjoys it, too, for I understand that not a crumb is ever left on Christmas morning.

Giving, and sharing with others, is a pleasure which many people never appreciate, because in childhood their parents did not teach them the art or the joy of giving.

The giving of money should not be haphazard, but should be as carefully considered as any other part of the budget.

To many persons of moderate circumstances an increase in income is followed by a large increase in spending, a small increase in saving, and no increase at all in sharing. There are others to whom more money always means more to save—that's all. Neither of these procedures will bring the greatest possible happiness. Sharing should be in proportion to ability to share.

Parents ought to explain to their children the work done by some of the charitable organizations to which they themselves contribute, so that the entire family can take pleasure in each gift. Then those old enough to be receiving an allowance will, each one, be likely to enjoy adding a little to the home charity chest or sending individual gifts to chosen organizations.

"I was able to give a whole dollar to our church for 'Baskets to Europe!'" cried John exultingly. "That was on account of the extra job I had at the store last week."

I sure don't want to like anything so much that it's going to be denied me all the time.

FAR EAST DEPUTATION.

Everett C. Parker, Director of the Joint Religious Radio Committee and S. Franklin Mack, Chairman of the World Radio Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America will leave January 26 for a tour of the Orient and Middle East to study Christian radio broadcasting and the use of audio-visual aids in Christian teaching.

They will travel under the auspices of the Foreign Missions Conference and will visit China, Japan, Korea, the Philippines, Siam, Burma, India and Egypt.

The deputation will study current use of radio and audio-visual aids and will help Christian nationals prepare long range plans for the improvement of their use of these media. Conferences will be held in key cities in each country visited.

The deputation's plan of action will be: (1) Survey what is now being done and what is actually being planned in the field of radio and audio-visual education and evangelism in the fields stated. (2) In conference with missionaries and nationals in the field, open up possibilities and work out plans for further development with and for leaders in the field. (4) Explore government policy, secular enterprise, and relations of proposed programs to establish institutions such as universities. (5) Find out the needs for cooperative participation in program development on the part of the home churches. (6) Work out tentative recommendations in the light of what is learned, suggesting specific emphases in program development and underwriting with full regard for what the home church may be able to support.

INTRODUCING MISS ELLIOTT.

Miss Ruth Elliott, writer of the appeal for overseas relief on page 8, is the Overseas Consultant for the North Carolina Council of Churches, with headquarters at Durham, North Carolina. In response to a request by the Editor, she gives the following biographical information:

"My home is now in Boston, but I always hasten to assure people that I was born in Connecticut. I grew up in Westport, Connecticut, where my father was minister of the Congregational Church. He died there in 1943. My mother is now a social worker for the Boston City Missionary Society, a Congregational agency. I am a graduate of Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio ('44), and had a year of graduate work at Radcliffe.

"My first job was with the Edwards (Congregational) Church in Northampton, Mass., where I was Assistant to the minister. The following year I went to the Church World Service Center at New Windsor where I worked in the Promotion Office. I guess I still work for Church World Service, since I am the staff representative for North Carolina, working through the Council.

"My interest in relief work seems to have come naturally. For one thing, I think human suffering around the world is the great challenge to Christianity and especially to Protestantism in the United States. Like most really great opportunities, it carries with it great possibilities for disaster, if we fail. Along the same line, more or less, it seems to be one place where I can make a worthwhile contribution to world peace."

MISS RUTH ELLIOTT.

The collection of "Grease for Peace" is an effort to supply at least some of the millions of helpless folk overseas with soap. With the present food situation in the war ravaged countries, every fat that can be used for food is eaten. That means there is nothing left over to be turned into this most necessary of household supplies. What soap there is, costs $10 a pound. To most families that means that all washing and bathing must be done without benefit of soap, often in cold water.

Visitors tell of meeting office workers abroad whose hands were as black as if they had been working with mud. Months of inadequate washing was the cause. Clothing, scarce as it is, should have special care, but without soap it can rarely be washed clean. Americans have only to imagine one soapless week to realize how great is the need for soap.

According to UNRRA estimates, the world needs 90 thousand tons of soap a year. Contributing to that, in a small but important way, is the plant set up last year in Nappanee, Indiana, by the Church of the Brethren to make soap for relief. Running at capacity the plant can produce a ton a day, 6,000 bars of soap for 6,000 families. The cost varies: 3c a pound if the grease is donated, 19c a pound if the grease must be bought. Unless fats are given, the plant cannot continue to run at full capacity. Five-gallon collection cans to be used in homes, on farms, in church kitchens for saving waste fats for relief soap are available from the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland. These may be easily shipped back and forth. Write for one, fill it and ship it back. For every pound of fat contributed a pound of soap can be made for overseas.

RUTH ELLIOTT.

... AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

My presence shall go with thee.—Exodus 33:14. Read John 14:1-27.

Before us stretches the New Year with its untrodden path. On this unknown way there is no turning back. How shall we face the future? The first requirement is to refuse to be filled with fear and doubt. Looking straight into the future Christ said, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid . . . Lo, I am with you."

Foreknowledge of the future is not the important thing. The perception of companionship on the road is what matters. It is not the changing road but the unchanging presence that makes for a Happy New Year. It is God on the road that enables us to go on. It is God in the heart that makes it sing. It is God in human society that lifts it up and redeems it. "Draw nigh unto God and he will draw nigh unto you." Face the future with faith in a Companion who leads and sustains. Then your heart will not be troubled and you need not be afraid.

Let Us Pray—O thou who art the Unseen Guardian of our days and nights, the Unseen Guide of all our ways, make us to know thy presence and be unafraid. Illumine the dark places with thy brightness, strengthen us for the hard places, and where the way is easy suffer us not to forget thee. And to the end of the journey may we love and trust thee, in the spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—From Daily Devotions.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

BELIEFS THAT MATTER.

LESSON I—JANUARY 4, 1948.

LESSON: John 20:30-31; Acts 16:11-15; I Tim. 4:16; I John 5:1-5.

Beliefs Do Matter.

"It does not make any difference what you believe as long as you are honest in believing it"—that is what people used to say, and what they still say. And it sounds like a fine spirit of tolerance. To be sure such people would say that it did make some difference in the field of science or medicine, or industry, or many other fields of practical affairs. But it does not make much if any difference what folks believe in the field of theology or religion. But to say that is not only not tolerance, it is untrue and dangerous. Beliefs do matter, and they matter much. As a matter of fact what a man believes is one of the most important factors in a man's life. The world recently went through a bath of blood because the leaders of three great nations taught their people to believe certain things about life and the mission and destiny of their nations. Hitler, Mussolini and the military leaders of Japan carefully and diabolically taught their people what to believe as a means of getting them to do what they wanted them to do. These monstrous men made it clear that we can have the kind of world we want by teaching men to believe those things which will produce that kind of world. Beliefs do matter. It makes a difference, it makes all the difference, what men and nations believe.

Beliefs That Matter.

To be sure there are some beliefs that do not matter much. Even some religious beliefs. People sometimes become all too excited and heated about the jots and tittles of the law which really do not matter. But there are beliefs that matter. It makes a difference what a man thinks about God, about the nature of man, about the dignity and worth and meaning of human life, about the moral law, about the person and work of Christ. As a man thinketh in his heart so is he—the things that he really believes in his heart have a way of working out into character and conduct. A man had better be careful about what he believes. Beliefs determine action here, and destiny hereafter, that is the things we really believe.

That Ye Might Believe The Things That Matter Most.

The apostle John wrote a letter or a gospel to Christians in order that they might know about the beliefs that mattered most, and that through those beliefs they might find a new quality of life. "These things are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing ye might have life through his name." What things did he write? The things that Jesus said, the things that Jesus did, the things that Jesus was. Not all of them—he said the world would hardly hold the books if everything was written about Jesus. But he did write enough to give men a firm basis for belief in Jesus as the Son of God, and through that faith to find life through His name.

WHAT WE KNOW ABOUT GOD.

LESSON II—JANUARY 11, 1948.

LESSON: Isa. 40:28-31; Jno. 14:8-14.

Man's Search For The Invisible God.

After Jesus had healed the man born blind and had found him in the temple area he said to him, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" The man replied, "Who is he Lord that I might believe on him?" He was simply giving expressions to the plaintive cry of Job when he said "O that I knew where I might find him." In other words the search for God is the oldest quest of the human soul or mind. And in large measure the history of religion is simply the story of man's search for God.

God's Response To Man's Search.

Even as man has been searching for God, God has been searching for man. Indeed, God took the initiative. He sought man before man sought him. Through the centuries, through history and the prophets and saints and the law, God was trying to make himself known. But no man had seen God at any time. God had not been known in his fullness and his power and his love.

God Made Flesh.

Then Jesus came. At first men did not see him as God. But as they accompanied with him they gradually saw that he was more than man even though he was man. And when later one of his most intimate disciples wrote the story of his Masters life he wrote simply and sincerely these words "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth . . . for the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." He remembered that night when the Master himself had said: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." "I and the Father are one." And another of his devoted followers put it in another way when he said that God had shined into the hearts of his children, "to give the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Here then is where we see God. The invisible, infinite, eternal God was made flesh and dwelt among men. He was called "Emmanuel" which means "God with us." That is the message of Christmas, although it is all too often smothered over or eliminated even at the Christmas season. We do not know all about God—He is infinite and we are finite. But we can know a great deal about God, and better still, we can know God, through Jesus Christ. Christ is like God and God is like Christ. We know that.

What We Know About God.

Well, if God is like Christ, we have a God we can worship, one altogether lovely, the fairest among ten thousand. Worship is worthship. No man need have any hesitancy in worshipping God if God is like Jesus Christ. And we have a God we can trust. Christ never let his followers down. He kept his word at all points, even rising again from the dead as He said He would. If God is like Christ God can be trusted. We can stake all on His word. And if God is like Christ we have a God we can love. We believe God is love because of the loving spirit of Christ. We can love him with all our mind and our heart and our soul and our strength.

Resolved, to live with all my might while I do live. Resolved, never to lose one moment of time, to improve it in the most profitable way I possibly can. Resolved, never to do anything which I should despise or think meanly of in another. Resolved, never to do anything out of revenge. Resolved, never to do anything which I should be afraid to do if it were the last hour of my life.

—Jonathan Edwards.

CHURCHES MUST UNITE.

More than 100 churches, with congregations and communicants in almost every country of the globe, belong to and work together within the World Council of Churches. The World Council is not and does not seek to be a church. Like the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, it is a federation of churches. Notably, however, it has proved possible for all denominations and sects of Protestantism to unite, through these organizations, in works of many kinds.

I do not seek here to formulate a detailed plan for a union of Protestantism. That must come of a common decision in democratic conference. But the plan should not be difficult of formulation.

There need be no regimentation, in a united Protestant church, of forms or rites. Unity will be in the spirit, not form. There may be unity in faith, variety in order. Within the united church there may and must be freedom for the Quaker to await the moving of the spirit in silence, and freedom for the Anglican to experience spiritual ecstasy in the beauty and the glory of the liturgy and the sacraments.

The Sacraments of Baptisms and of Holy Communion may be administered according to the differing rites but, as the years come and go, the practices may become similar as the blessings of each are brought together for the blessing of all.

Achievement of such unity in Protestantism would literally electrify a weary and despairing world. The torch which we have allowed to burn dangerously low would illuminate the lives of all men. The tendency to unity and brotherhood in all spheres of human life would be many times strengthened.

When the full union of the Protestant and Eastern churches has been accomplished it may then be possible that the Roman Catholic church would join in finding a way to make the union of the universal, holy, Catholic church complete. The same spiritual and material forces which compel us toward the union of Protestantism will operate as powerfully toward the bearing fruit as toward the sprouting of the seed.

The difficulties, so frightening if viewed only in the light of our past failures, melt away like muddled snow under a spring sun when we seize and hold fast to the truth that the Spirit that unites us is infinitely greater than the petty, man-created differences that divide us.

It is not impractical or visionary, I contend, to see the possibilities of union so simply. It is, rather, the only practical course before us. Nothing conceivable could be so impractical as to continue, while we still bury the bodies of the victims of World War II and the awful forces of bigotry, hate and fear visibly gather new strength, to preach brotherhood and practice division. The mere thought of the probable consequences of continued disunity is horrible.

But if we unite—how wonderful this world could be!

Our church, in the first place, would be such a spiritual and moral force as it never yet has been. Our missionary work in America would be immediately relieved of the sinful waste of duplication. Our overseas missions could be united.

To even the strictly "practical" man, oblivious to the new spiritual and moral strength which would be ours, the potential increase in the church's efficiency is obvious.

We could immensely improve and extend our use of the radio and of the techniques of visual education. We could broaden and strengthen a system of higher education in which we might train lay leadership of the church and the nation, teachers for our colleges and universities, and in united theological seminaries, the ministers of our church.

We could meet dynamic atheism and materialism unitedly and triumphantly.

Our sons sleep beneath crosses on all the continents of the globe because we have not united ourselves and mankind the way of the Cross.

I repeat: we should, we must, and we can unite the church.—Reprint from Reader's Scope, January, 1948.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

followers of Jesus adopt the name "Christians" for themselves; it was after New Testament times that they adopted the name that had been originally one of derision. The word "Christian" is mentioned in the New Testament only twice more—Acts 26:28 and I Peter 4:16.

3. Acts 26:28—"And Agrippa said unto Paul, With but little persuasion thou wouldst fain make me a Christian." Here Agrippa II is speaking half-jesting words to Paul, and is "making fun" of the name "Christian" as Moffatt's translation indicates: "'At this rate,' Agrippa remarked, 'it won't be long before you believe you have made a Christian of me!'" And the Revised Standard Version (1946) presents the same idea: "And Agrippa said to Paul, 'In a short time you think to make me a Christian!'"

4. I Peter 4:15, 16—"For let none of you suffer as a murderer, or a thief, or an evil-doer, or as a meddler in other men's matters: but if a man suffers as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God in this name." What the writer means here, as is clear in the Greek text, is: "If any of you suffer as (on the charge of being) a Christian" (here the writer uses the word from the standpoint of the Roman Law). Peter does not say or imply that the followers of Christ have yet adopted the name "Christian," but what he does say is that if you suffer as being suspected a Christian, make the most of it. Peter is thinking primarily of the sneers and taunts and slanders from pagans which were apt to make the Christians feel depressed and uneasy. As Tacitus implies, the name of Christian had already become a nickname on the lips of the Roman mob.

"Christian" is not a fulfilment of an Old Testament prediction of a "new name," and the appellation was not "coined in heaven;" it was coined in the hatreds and prejudices of non-Christian Gentiles, Roman officials, and Roman Emperors.

I, for one, will vote and will urge my four churches to vote for the "Basis of Union," with its proposed church name: "The United Church of Christ." Personally, though, if I were to suggest another name it would be "The United Church in Christ." If there are those who would like to know why I prefer this, I would gladly state my case for them.

May we never be so provincial or narrow-minded as to kill the "baby" just before it is born because the "parents" can't agree on a name.

A NEW YEAR PRAYER.

Most merciful Father, who art from everlasting, without beginning or end of days, we pray for thy richest blessing upon all men of every land or tongue. May the new year soften every sorrow and deepen every hope. May it further the cause of international peace, and strengthen the bonds of friendship. May we remember that we are all children of a common Father, and so live and think as brethren should, traveling in the pathways of friendliness to the portals of a common country. Amen.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supi.

Dear Friends:

On Sunday afternoon, December 14, thirty-five of our smallest children had the thrill of their lives. The Phi Chi Fraternity of the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C., invited thirty-five of our smallest children to come to their fraternity house to be entertained for two hours with a Christmas program. Our good neighbors offered to furnish cars to carry the children down there. The children were met at the front door with open arms by the fraternity boys, and some young ladies, whom they had invited to assist them in entertaining the children. They made friends with the children at once. Each boy and girl took charge of one or more children and they started the entertainment. They made them feel perfectly at ease and at home, and they sang a number of Christmas carols.

The children were invited to the dining room and given ice cream and cake. They were then invited back to the reception room, and each child received a stocking filled with a little present and candy.

The Carolina Athletic Club had a representative to come in and present to one of the little boys a football engraved with the names of the Athletic Club, which was a thing to be proud of.

Then a beautiful Christmas tree had been placed in the corner of the room and "Old Santa" walked in and after appropriate remarks, gave out the presents which had been arranged around the tree. Dr. House was invited over and also the Mayor of the city. We had the pleasure of meeting these fine Christian gentlemen, and also had the honor of having our pictures made together. In all of our experiences, we have never had the pleasure of meeting a finer group of young men and women than we met here. Each one did their best to make the little children happy, and they certainly gave them a happy afternoon.

On Sunday, December 21, the Junior Baracca Class of our Reidsville Church came and put on a program of Christmas carols and then invited our children to sing for them. They sang "Jingle Bells" and made it ring with a Christmas spirit. Then they gave a bag of candy, oranges, apples, and nuts to each child. The children were happy to be so remembered.

A fine group from New Hope Church, Eastern North Carolina Conference, visited us last week looking over our buildings, and were highly pleased with what they saw. They, too, brought a treat for the children.

Then, we had visitors from our Bethlehem Church, and they brought white gifts to the Orphanage. We were happy to have all these good people to visit the Orphanage and see what the churches have here.

Then on December 17, the Orphanage children were all invited over to the little Chapel at the College to a Christmas entertainment with "Old Santa" again acting his part. This was put on by the student body and faculty at the College. Each child received a beautiful present. None cost less than $5.00 and some cost as much as $12.00. Also, they presented the most worthy boy and girl a bicycle each, and then they presented another bicycle for the use of all. The children enjoyed it immensely, and I believe the student body enjoyed it as much as the children. This is the finest thing that the student body has ever done for the Orphanage children.

And then, on the night of December 23, our Burlington Church invited all of our children down to Burlington for a Christmas entertainment. We asked some of our neighbors to again assist us by furnishing cars to take the children down to Burlington, which they gladly did. All except two children went to this program. Each child received a present and even the Superintendent was remembered, also. Th children had a delightful evening and came back very happy. Our Burlington people are very much interested in our work here and show their interest by the things they do for us.

ANTIOCH CHRISTIANS.

[Excerpts from devotional address by Dr. F. Gerald Ensley, pastor of the North Broadway Methodist Church, Columbus, Ohio, at the Conference on Community and Religious Education, Tuesday morning, December 2.]

TEXT: "The disciples were called Christians first in Antioch."

The Christian church got its start in one of the toughest spots in the Roman Empire; for Antioch was a place of low morals, crass paganism, unstable politics.

The modern church has to do its business in Antioch, too; for the contemporary world is largely pagan. The fact that the ancient Christians triumphed over their environment should hearten us as we face our task.

There were three qualities which enabled them to triumph—three virtues that are needed today; they were narrow in their loyalties, refusing to compromise with the the idols of their world; they were broad in their loves, showing good will even to those whose principles they could not accept; they were flexible in their methods.

There is no reason why we cannot reproduce their triumph in the day on which we have fallen.

Theres nothing like self-support to bring on self-respect.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP SONGS.

We have had several inquiries concerning the "Pilgrim Fellowship Songbooks" used at camps and rallies. Just recently I received a letter advising that after January 15, 1948, the price of the songbooks will be 11c per copy. However, if your group has been wanting to order a number of these books, it will be well to place your order immediately, before January 15, as the price, up to that date, is 9c per copy.

In ordering these songbooks, send the order and the money to:

Lynn Rohrbaugh,
Cooperative Recreational Service,
Delaware, Ohio.

Remember, your order, plus payment in advance, must be in before January 15 to take advantage of the lower cost.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF A SMALL CHURCH.

Indeed, this would suit most of our churches in the Southern Convention. Consequently, the young people's groups are small in attendance and in numbers enrolled. From a recent joint meeting of the young people of our United Congregational Christian Church and the Wentz Memorial Congregational Christian Church, both of Winston-Salem, N. C., came the following suggestion: That a small group of young people may be eminently better fitted to do some things that a large group cannot do. Each of these above groups is small but they function effectively. The above churches are of similar strength and both are struggling to take their respective places in their community.

Here are some suggestions for small groups (also could be used by large groups, but small groups can possibly do a more effective job): Recreation—Folk games work better with small groups, and other types of play may be used here. The Wentz Memorial is building an outdoor basketball court; the Pfafftown young people play volley ball, and the Winston-Salem group has done many folk games. Monthly socials can easily be had. Arts and Crafts work better in a small group. Helen Jackson of the Winston-Salem group suggests the following as a starter: A Christmas paper mache stage set; the melting of old candles into various shapes (John raves and his young people of our Burlington group have done much with candles); the making of your own Christmas cards with show-card paint, a stencil, and a dry brush. Small groups can do much with movies or slides. The camera is becoming a fascinating instrument. Take pictures of your own group at meetings, use an 8 mm. camera and projector that aren't too expensive. Young adults often use this as the children are born into the home and this pictorial review of the children's growth will always be interesting.

Small groups should secure a project or a goal and work with this in mind.

Development of public speaking of young people in the conducting of business meetings and the programs and other fine qualities come from a small group of young people working continually at their job. Never despair of small numbers.

LODI GIVES $700.

On Friday night, October 3, Lodi Congregational Church gave a meal, the funds raised going to Meals for Millions. The money raised is being counted in on our C.W.V.R. pledge earmarked Meals for Millions. Your group can do the same thing, get information from Lodi or write Meals for Millions, Inc., 48 South Broadway, Los Angeles, California.

The group sent posters around advertising the dinner, and local merchants contributed goods to go with the meal, which consisted of the identical 3c meal to be fed to the starving. Food was from 5 to 8, and every penny contributed went entirely to Meals for Millions. Over three hundred meals were served and contributions amounted to $700.

The amount raised will feed over 20 starving people at the rate of three meals a day for a solid year.

Get your group together and give a meal soon.—The Light (publication of the Northern California Pilgrim Fellowship).

NEWS FROM ELON COLLEGE.

nevolence with an organization and determination unequaled in the history of this country. They have the prestige, the alumni, the political influence, and they are in a position to put on economic pressure to see that they receive the funds—not that they need them necessarily but that they want them to carry out the program that they have for the future. This is done certainly without any consideration of the needs and position of the church college. It will be necessary for the church to make up its mind whether or not a church college is needed and if so, it will be necessary to make up its purse of sufficient size to meet its needs that it may cope with a program of higher education as formulated and promoted by institutions where financial support is not a question for the institution itself, but for the state that stands back of it. I am not criticizing the state schools, but I am trying to stress the importance of needed financial support for our church colleges if they are to continue.

Elon College is grateful for every generous thought and every contribution given by the Church and the friends of the College.

I Believe and I Resolve

I Believe: That my church is essential to the welfare of my community.

Resolved: That I will earnestly endeavor to promote the efficiency of my church.

I Believe: That there is encouragement in numbers.

Resolved: That I will be in my place at the service of my church and invite friends to come with me, that others may be encouraged.

I Believe: That friendship and fellowship are an important part of Christianity.

Resolved: That in my church I will not wait to be greeted, but will myself greet others. I will not wait to be welcomed, but will myself make others welcome. I will not wait to be visited, but will myself become a visitor, thus helping to make my church homelike and friendly.

I Believe: That money is necessary in all business enterprises.

Resolved: That I will practice tithing and contribute to the work of my church in proportion to my means; that I will keep my financial obligations paid in full or in advance, that the work of my church may not be crippled through my neglect.

I Believe: That religious liberty and freedom of thought and speech are essential to truest worship and service.

Resolved: That I will not be irritated when the pastor or others in my church differ from me, nor will I insist upon making my opinion paramount. I will gladly abide by the rule of the majority.

I Believe: That brotherly love, sympathy and forgiveness are the evidences of a Christ-like spirit.

Resolved: That I will cultivate Christian sympathy in feeling and courtesy in speech and manner; be slow to take offense, always ready for reconciliation, and mindful of the rules of our Saviour, seek to secure it without delay.

I Believe: That Jesus came to "seek and to save the lost" and that He commanded me to follow Him.

Resolved: That I will earnestly endeavor to prepare myself through Bible study and prayer to be a soul winner and to win at least one soul to Christ and the church this year.

I Believe: That the past history of my church is sacred.

Resolved: That I will do all in my power to maintain the unity of the spirit and the peace and good will of my church. I will try to make the present history of my church as sacred as the past.

I Believe: That the best life is a helpful, cheerful Christian life.

Resolved: That I will try to live such a life, that through me my church may become a blessing to the whole world.—Selected.

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 8, 1948.

Mayflower Church MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA

The Mayflower Church may appear white and cold but a richness and warmth are provided by the Communion Table with its white cross and candlesticks and dossal cloth behind it. The Rood beam holding the Cross is an unusual feature in present day churches but goes back hundreds of years in Christian tradition.

The Rev. Silas A. Meckel, minister of the church, has given this brief historical sketch:

"The organization of the church was accomplished in 1924. It functioned as a Church School until 1928. A tiny chapel was erected in 1924 which served to house the children who attended Church School. In 1928, I was called as the first pastor of the church. That fall we enlarged the original chapel building, adding a chancel and an office. By 1934 the membership had grown to approximately 400. We began to make plans for the erection of a larger building. In 1936 the main portion of the new building was erected. The former small chapel stood adjacent to the new building until 1940. By that time the membership had grown to 1,500, and our Church School had expanded to 500 children. We then gave away the original chapel to the "Neighborhood Congregational" of St. Paul, and erected a three-story educational building.

"I was absent from the church from 1943 to 1947, during which time I served as a Chaplain in the Army Air Forces. The Rev. Julian J. Keiser, now of Chicago, served as interim pastor. My present associate is the Rev. Paul Dahlstrom, and our Director of Christian Education is Mrs. Kenneth Burley. The membership of the church is now approximately 2,000 adults, with a Church School of 750 children."

The UN Works for Human Rights

By DR. O. FREDERICK NOLDE, Dean, Graduate School, Lutheran Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, Pa.

Protestants throughout the world are recognizing, with increasing clarity, that there are times and places where Christians must speak with a firm, united voice, or they will not be heard. In the United States, the effect of such a united voice upon our government's foreign policy has at various times been influential. We now face the necessity of uniting the Christian forces throughout the world in promoting peaceful and cooperative relations among the nations. That necessity led the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council to form the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs—an agency through which Protestant and Orthodox Christendom can, if it will, speak with a single united voice.

It is fitting that the Commission should do all in its power to assist the United Nations in the creation of a moral world order. Regardless of the shouts and alarms that came out of the Security Council and occasionally the General Assembly, that moral order, in quieter conference rooms is being sought.

I had the privilege of representing the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs at the Second Session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights which met at Geneva in December of 1947, under the Chairmanship of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. Prior to that time the Church Commission had submitted memoranda to the Secretariat of the United Nations making clear the position of the churches on matters of human rights in general and religious liberty in particular. The Church Commission had also distributed the drafts of the Declaration on Human Rights and of the Convention to church leaders in over forty countries with a request for critical reactions.

Because of this preparation it was possible for me to lay before the delegates at the Second Session of the Commission on Human Rights certain specific requests which represented with reasonable accuracy the united thinking of Christians in many parts of the world. The changes which were suggested referred to the two parts of the International Bill of Human Rights, the Declaration and the Covenant. Here are some of the matters which the Church Commission urged upon the delegates. Expressions of conscience and belief should include worship, observance, teaching, community or association, and practice. The limitations to which the exercise of religious freedom shall be subject (such as public order and morality, and the rights and freedoms of others) ought to be specified by law and not left to capricious administration. The right of religious teaching ought to be corporate as well as individual, since merely individual right of religious teaching might prohibit the right of man to so elementary an organization as the Sunday School. The Church Commission also urged that the Declaration and the Covenant should recognize the relation of religious liberty to other human freedoms such as the right of expression, assembly, and association.

The delegates gave careful attention to the recommendations offered in behalf of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs. When the work of drafting a Declaration and a more binding Covenant was finished, it was possible to see the thinking of church leaders throughout the world reflected in the words of both documents. I believe the Articles on religious freedom are worth quoting in full.

Declaration: The individual freedom of thought and conscience, to hold and thought and conscience, to hold and change beliefs, is an absolute and sacred right. Every person has the right, either alone or in community with other persons of like mind and in public or private, to manifest his beliefs in worship, observance, teaching and practice.

Covenant: Every person shall have the right to freedom of religion, conscience and belief, including the right, either alone or in community with other persons of like mind, to hold and manifest any religious or other belief, to change his belief, and to practice any form of religious worship and observance, and he shall not be required to do any act which is contrary to such worship and observance.

Every person of full age and sound mind shall be free, either alone or in community with other persons of like mind, to give and receive any form of religious teaching, and in the case of a minor the parent or guardian shall be free to determine what religious teaching he shall receive.

The above rights and freedoms shall be subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public order and welfare, morals and the rights and freedoms of others.

These two articles take an added significance when interpreted in their relation to other articles. Promising as the present drafts are, let me emphasize that they are not final. They will be criticized by the Member States. They must then be reconsidered by the Human Rights Commission, sent to the Economic and Social Council, and finally to the General Assembly.

We are also faced with the grave problem of making these Articles, once they are established in final form, an actuality the world over, or at least in those nations which put their pledge to the final draft of the Covenant. Should individuals and groups have the right of petition to

ARCHITECTURE IN 'FORTY-EIGHT.

One way to demonstrate the fact that this is the year of our Lord is to build or renovate houses of worship. Many congregations will have their dreams come true in the construction of new churches. Visions and dreams will harden into stone. Remember, those of you who build, that generations will be blessed or penalized by the measure of your wisdom. Some churches will receive alterations or improvements long past due. Sanctuaries will be made more worshipful.

This and forthcoming issues will feature architectural designs in a variety of our churches. These pictures appear through the courtesy of William K. Newman of our Church Building Department.

EVANGELISM IN 'FORTY-EIGHT.

There is hope in the fact that the first convention-wide meeting of the year was a Conference on Evangelism. Approximately fifty ministers from the five conferences of our convention met at Elon Monday and Tuesday of this week for a planning conference. Their consciences were stung by the realization that our convention has realized a net gain of only 2,217 members during the past nine years.

Superintendent W. Ernest Collins of Minnesota was the chaplain. He spoke concerning the vitality of members, the areas of personal evangelism which are vital today, of the many gates into the New Jerusalem, and the "trophies of grace" which should crown our efforts. Dr. Frank H. Lewis challenged the Conference to "make belief in Christ a thrilling experience."

Illuminating and stimulating discussion on the first day was centered on the reaching and re-enlisting of marginal and absentee members, the conversion and conservation of youth, the discovery and development of evangelistic potential in every local church. A more ample report of this conference, which is still in session at this writing, will be given in a later issue.

Let this be a year of evangelism. You who read these lines are called upon to follow the leadership of the pastors who return with a passion and a program for evangelism. Without your prayerful support, these plans will come to naught.

The conference was arranged by Dr. Wofford C. Timmons, secretary of the General Council's Commission on Evangelism, Dr. John G. Truitt, chairman of the Convention's Committee on Evangelism, and Superintendent W. T. Scott.

THE RABBINATE.

The Ladies Home Journal continues its series of studies on "How America Lives" with the presentation of an American rabbi and his family. Joshua Loth Liebman, Boston rabbi and author of a popular book, "Peace of Mind," is featured in the January issue. It is interesting to know how one American rabbi lives.

Doctor Liebman preaches to approximately a thousand people on Friday nights at his synagogue on Commonwealth Avenue, has professorships in two Boston colleges, and carries a heavy load of speaking engagements. Two months' vacation provide time for intensive study and writing. The Boston rabbinate pays $14,000 a year (one contributing factor to peace of mind!). The rabbi refused a call to the famous Temple Emanuel in New York because of convincing evidence that the members of his congregation loved him. The Liebmans avoid the tyranny of household drudgery by living in a hotel. This arrangement enables Mrs. Liebman to pursue her doctor's degree at Simmons College of Social Work and enter a career all her own. Both have maximum time and means for creative work.

Dr. Liebman is no ordinary rabbi; neither does he serve an ordinary synagogue. Yet both are instructive. The spiritual leader of a congregation must have time in order to do creative work. Ministerial families can do fully the jobs for which they are equipped only when they are relieved of many routine services which require time and energy, but no exceptional ability. The congregation which desires exceptional leadership must be willing to create the conditions of affluence and affection in which such influence may grow and flourish.

INTERNATIONAL FELLOWSHIP.

The recommendation to establish a permanent headquarters for the International Congregational Council, which is being made by a group of thirty-seven Congregational leaders from fourteen countries, will open a new era in Congregationalism if accepted at the next International Council meeting, to be held at Wellesley, Mass., in June, 1949.

Dr. Douglas Horton, Executive Secretary of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches in the U. S. A., states that a new constitution embodying the permanent world organization will be submitted to the delegates from the constituent bodies when they meet in Wellesley.

It is being recommended, states Dr. Horton, that the headquarters be in London, England, and that Dr. Sidney M. Berry, present Moderator of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, be Secretary of the International Council under this new plan.

Among the chief functions of the permanent office of the International Congregational Council will be the maintenance of close and more frequent contacts with Congregational churches around the world and with the national unions.

The formation of such a permanent organization and the closer knitting together of the churches of the Congregational Fellowship in no sense indicates a lessening of the traditional interest of these free churches in Christian unity and the World Church. Rather, it will increase the value of their already vigorous support of the ecumenical movement.—The Ohio News.

Pastoral Counseling Education in Army

By SEWARD HILTNER, Executive Secretary, Federal Council's Department of Pastoral Services

One of the notable advances made by chaplains of the Army, Navy and Air Forces during the recent war was in the services of individual counseling to men and women in uniform. Chaplains estimated that between one-third and two-thirds of their time, depending upon assignment and inclination, was devoted to the personal ministry. They dealt with religious problems and perplexities, but always there were associated questions of family relationships, of loneliness and fear and anxiety, of future vocational uncertainty, and of the many kinds of psychological and spiritual difficulty that are entirely natural in the armed forces in wartime.

Not all chaplains were equally helpful to their men. Some had had intensive training in pastoral counseling; others, little or none. The great majority, with or without special training, did an effective job in mediating personal help to men under their spiritual care. The brief counseling courses given at the Chaplains' schools during the war, the seminars on personal counseling sponsored by the Federal Council, and other educational activities helped to give some training on the job.

The seriousness with which the armed forces are taking these twin lessons of wartime—the importance of pastoral counseling, and the need for more training in it—are demonstrated in the courses on counseling now being taught at the various chaplains' schools, and graphically in the recently completed extension course on counseling prepared by the Chaplain Board of the Army under the general direction of the office of the Chief of Chaplains. It was written by Chaplain Rowland C. Adams, a minister of the Congregational Christian Churches. The forward-looking viewpoint of the Army chaplaincy service on pastoral counseling is well illustrated in the following quotations.

"No service that a chaplain gives requires more technical skill, judgment, and common sense than individual counseling. . . . It is essentially helping an individual to help himself. . . . A person usually has to take one step, and then another, rather than suddenly to leap across many steps. . . . Counseling helps a person's direction. . . . The primary reason why the chaplain functions as a counselor is that he can supply the motivation and the ethics based on faith.

"The prime necessity in every interview is to establish real trust . . . trust is the assurance that one is understood, that he is not condemned for being what he is with all his difficulties . . . the counselor listens . . . good listening involves being attentive, alert and selective, an attitude which is far from passive. The chaplain can aid the soldier to reach the best possible solution only after he has listened with genuine interest and aided him to clarify points of conflict.

"Responsive listening aims directly at the growth of the individual, as his increased independence and integration, and is centered on the individual rather than the problem. The following methods are unsatisfactory . . . ordering and forbidding, exhortation . . . suggestion . . . or urging, advice and persuasion . . . intellectual interpretation. Analysis shows the following principles to be workable: establish a relationship of confidence . . . understanding of the feelings of the man . . . follow the leads . . . neither condemn nor approve . . . neither orate nor philosophise . . . encourage . . . to analyze the situation for himself.

"The chaplain as counselor has some important opportunities and resources in the religious faith which he proclaims, the religious practices which he directs, and the religious fellowship. Perhaps the most important is the central doctrine—that God is love, active, forgiving, redeeming love. A particular mark of religion is the proclamation of a cause to which men are asked to commit their lives. Finally, is the conviction that, in our moral struggles, we work together with God.

"In all his ministrations the chaplain must work cooperatively with others, yet on the basis of knowing the very great resources which he has at his command. The chaplain plays a very special role in the eyes of his men, despite much good-natured banter. It is to him that they should turn in times of emotional stress, and he should know and practice all the resources of religion."

There is far too much talk about making life easy. It is all right to take the pain and bitterness out of struggle; but were you to take the struggle out, there would be no adequate chance for young Americans.

THE FUNCTION OF RELIGION IN THE COMMUNITY.

[Excerpts from an address by Dr. Dwight E. Stevenson, Professor of Practical Theology at the College of the Bible, Lexington, Kentucky, delivered at the Conference on the Community and Religious Education, Columbus, Ohio, December 2, 1947.]

What is it that religion does in the community?

First of all, it personalizes group life. It teaches man two facts about himself: He is infinitely precious and he lives in mutual interaction with other selves who are also infinitely precious.

. . . it is possible for him to fall from this high estate and in the modern associations of group life he often does. This child of God, this member of the family of humanity, is behaving toward more and more human beings these days, not as persons but as tools and as objects. He de-personalizes others and is depersonalized by them.

Religion exists in society to teach us and keep on teaching us that persons are more than tools or objects, that they are even more than individuals. They are persons—which is to say that they are offspring of God and children of his family. If the first function of religion is to personalize group life and so supply it an inward cohesive principle, the second function is to supply social perspective. Religion is God taking his disciples up to a high mountain and teaching them truth and an ethic that rise far above the plane of human mediocrity. . . .

One result of religious perspective—particularly of Christian perspective—is an extending of the area of human sympathy. Sympathy untutored by religious insight is often as quick and as generous as the sympathy of religious people. . . . But untutored sympathy is both more spasmodic and more narrowly confined than religious sympathy. It is more dependent upon direct personal contact—upon the absence of distance both geographic and social.

The demand today for sympathy is both wider and more constant than anything our spontaneous feelings can supply. Natural emotion must be reenforced by religious emotion. It is religion and religion alone which gives an adequate contemporary answer to the question, "Who is my neighbor?" The sympathy which it elicits is no spasmodic, narrowly restricted emotional response to dramatic disaster. It is a habitual brotherhood which is as much concerned to

DR. DAWBER REPORTS ON MISSIONS.

"New York City presents the greatest missionary challenge of any city or territory in America or the world." This was the statement made by Dr. Mark A. Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions Council of North America, speaking before the 200 delegates assembled at Buck Hill Falls for the society's 40th annual meeting.

This church leader claimed that of the 7,908,000 people in New York City, at least 3,500,000—a population equal to that of the city of Chicago—are without active membership in any Protestant or Catholic church or Jewish congregation. He continued: "New York City is now approaching the point in its history where secularism is destined to become the majority faith." Describing the recent history of Protestantism in New York City as "one of retreat and retrenchment," the church official urged delegates from the 23 home mission boards to pool their resources in a "carefully planned, courageous program to win the multitudes from paganism to Christ." He classified all three major faiths "as minority groups in New York City."

Dr. Dawber said: The vast influx of Puerto Ricans and other language and nationality groups, and the mushrooming of new housing developments in New York City combine "to present an unprecedented challenge to the missionary spirit of the Christian church."

In reviewing the work of the Home Missions Council during the past year, Dr. Dawber called attention to the missionary projects being conducted among the Navajo Indians, the tribe recently granted a $2,000,000 Congressional authorization to relieve economic hardship. He reported that in order to help overcome the high illiteracy rate among the Navajos—less than 10 per cent of whom speak English—a full time worker has been appointed to promote literacy education. He also announced the establishment of a social center in Phoenix, Arizona, to provide religious and recreational facilities for the Indians who migrated to the city during the war.

His annual report presented a picture of increased cooperation among Protestant denominations working in the home mission field. The report also noted the joint missionary projects being undertaken in behalf of Negro sharecroppers, agricultural migrants, Eskimos, rural Puerto Ricans, and other under-privileged groups.

In summarizing his views on the present outlook of home and foreign missions, Dr. Dawber said: "The time has arrived when home missions must assert itself in the total missionary enterprise. We must insist that we do not propose to be sidetracked and that we consider home missions an important part of world missions. We are hearing much about this being one world; if so, then it is one mission in one world. The time is here, now, in which home and foreign missions should look at their task co-operatively and unitedly. The fact of the presence of the United Nations, planning to establish its permanent home in New York, thus placing America in a strategic position of opportunity and responsibility, would also seem to underscore the new significance of the unity of our missionary endeavor."

A PASTORAL PRAYER.

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

Thou God of the ancient prophets and of Jesus—Thou God of our fathers and of all mankind, we would worship Thee in spirit and in truth.

We thank Thee for the glorious gift of Thy divine Son Jesus, the Christ, who is the way, the truth and the life. We pray that Thou wilt show us the way, that Thou wilt lead us into the truth, and that Thou wilt help us to live the life that pleases Thee. Create a right spirit within us. Make known Thy thoughts to us. Inspire and empower us to be and to do—to live, to think and to act in accordance with Thy Holy Will. Grant that we may ever walk in the light of the truth.

Thou who art life that never ends, love that never fails, and light that never fades, we pray for an impartation of Thy life into the life of these troublous days in which we now live; we pray for a baptisms of Thy love upon humanity everywhere; we pray for the bestowal of Thy light throughout our darkened world. And we pray for Thy life, Thy love and Thy light to possess our individual lives.

We pray for the redemption of the world—for the peace and salvation of all mankind. We pray that by Thy divine power Thou wilt help the leaders of men to bring order out of the chaos that now obtains in every realm of human relationships; that Thou wilt bring light upon earth's way which has become so darkened by man's selfishness, sin and hate; and that Thou wilt inspire and help mankind everywhere to change these times of suffering, sorrow, uncertainty and woe into times of rejoicing, confidence, cooperation and brotherhood; and that Thy will may be done upon earth in our generation as it is now done in heaven. In Jesus' name we pray. Amen.

RICHMOND PREACHING MISSION.

With "spiritual awakening" as a theme, members and leaders of 125 Richmond churches, of ten denominations, will take part in a program of area meetings and services leading up to the Richmond Preaching Mission to be held at the Mosque February 1-8. Announcement of the plans was made today by the Rev. Dr. Garis T. Long, pastor of Grace Baptist Church and chairman of a special committee of the Ministerial Union, directing these pre-mission activities.

Simultaneous services will be held twice daily at 2 and 8 P. M. in the five major areas of the city, from Monday, January 26, through Friday, January 30. They will be led by local ministers as guest speakers. The emphasis will be largely on prayer, with topics centering around the place of the Bible, prayer, the Holy Ghost, Christian living, and witnessing in a spiritual awakening.

Cottage prayer meetings on Saturday night, January 31, will also be organized within the various congregations on the eve of the Preaching Mission.

The mission itself, while set for daily afternoon and night meetings at the Mosque for the first eight days in February, will also fan out over the city. There will be special addresses by nationally known speakers in the schools and colleges, and at club and group meetings during the mornings. Each major section of the city will also have a union church service daily at noon, which will be addressed by one of these visiting speakers.

Sponsored by the Richmond Ministerial Union, of which the Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, is president, the mission has as its general chairman, the Rev. Dr. J. Blanton Belk, pastor of St. Giles Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Dr. William E. Hudson of Staunton is the director. Others active in the planning and staging are: J. Joseph May, financial RESOLUTIONS.

Any day is a good day for making resolutions. Resolutions should lead you to nobler purposes and richer experiences. Our people have gotten in the habit of thinking of the New Year as the time for making resolutions. Some favor the practice and others oppose it. Benjamin Franklin said, "I spend New Year's Day making resolutions and the rest of the year breaking them." It is worthwhile, however, to think of the days that are passed, the failures and successes, and determine that henceforth you will evade conditions and practices that lead to failure and unpleasantness, and that you will give yourself to principles and practices that will be of assistance to causes and institutions ment for the betterment of mankind.

We are concerned for the advancement of the Church and her institutions. In the Southern Convention we have had a very good year—excellent from the standpoint of mechanics, plans, organization, and finances. But there are certain vital fields in which we have not succeeded so well. No one among us, I think, could be proud of our record in the Southern Convention in the field of evangelism or church building. These are the fields in which we should be succeeding. If we succeed here, other interests will take care of themselves. If we fail in evangelism and church building, successes in other interests of the Church will eventually be erased.

At the beginning of this another New Year could we as a church determine to give ourselves to evangelism and church expansion? Some of us seem to be afraid of the word "evangelism." We seem to think that to evangelize means to become over-emotional and unstable. Preaching missions and spiritual emphasis periods have supplanted revivals and evangelistic meetings. Whatever we call these special undertaking is non-sequential. Results are the things that count. Too many of our churches have become static and non-productive. We seem to be content if we gain as many members as we lose and not greatly alarmed if our losses exceed our gains. We usually have explanations that are satisfactory to us. Could something happen within us that would make us who constitute the membership of the church realize that we are responsible for those who are out of the church, that if we do not win them to Christ and the Church, they will not be won, that if they are not won, they are lost and that God is holding us responsible? These facts should be enough to stir our souls, to arouse our emotions if you please, and send us forth to reap the fields that are white already unto the harvest.

The question is, do we look upon the Gospel as the instrument of God, to save men from their sins or to placate God's elect in their dignified indifference? Is the Church the Church of God, or is the Church a club of sedateness? May God help us to realize to evangelize simply means to instruct in the Gospel, to convert men to Christ. New Testament evangelism simply means the winning of men, women, and children to Christ. The results of such an effort will mean new life, new power, new organizations, new buildings, for the Church.

As we face the New Year, could we resolve in our hearts to evangelize and build for the Kingdom of God on earth?

THE POWER PLANT.

Many of our friends and patrons are greatly concerned for the comfort of our students. Their interest, however, is exceeded by our anxiety. Ordinary building operations progress slowly today. When mechanical equipment is involved progress seems even slower. The building itself is about completed. The boilers are in place. Now we are held up with certain parts of the stokers. We shall not be able to put the new plant in operation before February. We trust that the present old heating plant will continue to serve us until the new plant is completed.

While building operations move slowly, collections to pay for the building seem to be moving even more slowly. Some of our friends are greatly concerned and exceedingly generous. I wish that they all were. The following letter was received from a good friend of the College in the morning mail.

Dear Dr. Smith:

As we come to the close of the eventful year of 1947 I am deeply concerned over the failure of some of our people to rally to the support of Elon in its building program. I am herewith enclosing my check to the amount of $100 for Elon. Wish it could be much more.

With best wishes to you, yours and Elon for a good and prosperous New Year, I am,

Sincerely yours,
Cyrus Shonffer.

Mr. Shoffner is a recent member of the Board of Trustees of Elon College. For years he has been a good supporter of the College. This is not the first contribution he has made to the heating plant. Mr. Shoffner is not a wealthy man but he is a good Christian man and greatly interested in his church and her institutions. There are certainly 500 in the membership of our church in the Southern Convention who are as able to contribute $100 as Mr. Shoffner is. That would mean $50,000; $50,000 would finish paying for our heating plant. Perhaps you could send more than $100, or maybe you could not send as much, but certainly you could make a contribution to help with the emergency that the College is now experiencing. Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

In our efforts to secure the College's full apportionment of $12,500 we failed. It is regrettable to fail in any worthwhile undertaking, but more distressing to be compelled to acknowledge that failure.

We are getting a new start for the new conference year. Many of our regular supporters are beginning early with their contributions. We trust that some who have not contributed to the support of the College through the year will join with others who have and encourage the College in its efforts to do a good job for the Church and society.

Our report today includes two weeks. We are most grateful for the assistance of our Sunday schools and churches.

THE WORLD DAY OF PRAYER AND THE CHRISTIAN LEADER.

By LOUISA R. SHOTWELL, Ass't Sec'y,
Home Missions Council of North America.

If Christian women of many denominations the world around did not gather on the first Friday of Lent to pray, and if by their prayers of praise and thanksgiving and intercession they were not moved to give, then the cause of Christian leadership the world over would suffer the consequence.

World Day of Prayer offerings make a difference—to Christian college students in India and China and Japan; to foreign students in the United States, who must be guided to seek out the best in American culture and American Christian family life in order to serve in their own countries; to masses of people in the Orient, in Africa, in the Near East who hunger to read of Christ and His message in words that they can understand.

World Day of Prayer offerings make a difference—to the American Indian in government school or hospital; to Negro sharecroppers of the South; to migrant families following crops around the calendar and around the country.

All of these six projects derive a substantial share of their support from annual World Day of Prayer Offerings. If a blizzard on the eastern seaboard on the first Friday in Lent or a torrential rain in the South keeps women away from worship on the World Day of Prayer, the far-reaching results may be that when the sugar beets are ready for blocking in Minnesota next summer, a thousand migrant families will find no Home Missions Council minister ready to serve them, and when colleges open in the fall, a hundred earnest Chinese Christian students may be unable to continue their training in preparation for ministering to their own people.

The philosophy underlying World Day of Prayer projects is one of training people to help themselves and their neighbors. The most casual reader of the daily news can scarcely remain unaware of the crucial need of wise and dedicated national Christian leadership in an Indian torn with political and religious strife; in a post-war Japan seeking to establish economic and spiritual equilibrium; in a China beset with poverty and ideological turmoil.

Eight interdenominational Christian colleges for women, four in India, one in Japan, and three in China are gradually shifting faculty and staff responsibilities from missionary to national leadership. Mrs. Prem Nath Dass, recently in America, was the first Indian principal of a women's college in India, Isabella Thoburn College at Lucknow, North India. Miss Elizabeth George, who last May received an honorary degree from Mt. Holyoke, has become the first Indian to head Mt. Holyoke's sister college in India, the Women's Christian College of Madras. An Indian Christian physician, Dr. Hilda Lazarus, is principal of the Christian Medical College at Vellore, which is training doctors and nurses in a country where the medical needs are very great. India has only one doctor for every 10,000 and one trained nurse for every 43,000 persons.

Similarly national leadership is finding its place in the Christian literature program. Mary Liu, Chinese, who studied last year at Union Seminary in New York, is now back in China, again editing a Chinese Christian magazine, The Woman's Messenger. An Indian woman, Miss Vimola Rajamanickman, B.A., B.T., has just been made associate editor of The Terasure Chest, the Christian magazine read widely in India by high school students of all faiths. An Egyptian woman, Miss Minerva Ebeid, edits El Taliba, a magazine in Arabic. In addition, all the Christian magazines solicit contributions from nationals, seeking to discover and develop writing ability among their subscribers.

The 18,000 foreign students in the United States today are engaged chiefly in graduate study. Opportunity for a year or more of residence in American colleges has come to them because they have shown exceptional promise for leadership in their own countries. Their interpretation of America on their return is important for the peace of the world. The Committee on Friendly Relations Among Foreign Students helps these "unofficial ambassadors" to become orientated in our communities and church fellowships, and to see and approach the best values in American Christian life and democracy.

In the home field, American Indians in government schools and those who are patients in government hospitals would have little or no religious instruction and guidance were it not for the Home Missions Council religious work directors whom World Day of Prayer offerings help to maintain. Some of these Indians return to the reservation to carry the Christian message to their own people; others work in business or industry in white communities and use their Christian training as a foundation for participation and leadership in local church and community enterprises. Another phase of the Home Missions Council interdenominational ministry for Indians is Cook Christian Training School in Phoenix, Arizona, to which many denominations send their Indian students in preparation for positions of leadership in Indian missions.

That the agricultural migrant problem in America is heading toward a crisis becomes evident to any reader of Heartless Harvest, Howard Whitman's article in Collier's Magazine, September 13 and 20. The newest development in the Home Missions Council migrant program is the inauguration of three mobile units, "The Eastern Harvester," "The Midwestern Harvester," and "The Western Harvester." Equipped to serve as a worship center, a library, a school, an emergency hospital, a play-ground and a recreational center for all ages; the Harvester stands to the migrant as the symbol of Christian friendship and ministry. The staff worker who takes it from camp to camp, following the migrant families who follow the crops, needs helpers in planning and organizing his program; these helpers he finds largely among the migrants themselves. Through a migrant camp council, guided by the Home Missions Council minister or community worker, the migrants plan their own worship programs and recreation nights, organize their committees and mothers' clubs, and develop among themselves and their fellow workers a sense of responsibility toward their families and their jobs and a realization of their own dignity as children of God.

In the deep South, the Negro sharecropper from the depth of his misery looks to his minister for counsel and comfort; and his minister, many times no better educated than he, has little to offer in spiritual or practical

CHRISTIAN COLLEGES IN CHINA.

More than $500,000 worth of equipment has been sent to the thirteen Christian colleges in China during 1947, according to an announcement on the year's accomplishments just made by the United Board for Christian Colleges in China, American headquarters for these mission-supported institutions. The equipment sent included beds, laboratory instruments and chemicals, veterinary supplies, medical drugs, horticultural supplies and garden seeds, and hospital, engineering and machine shop equipment.

Plans for 1948, says Dr. Robert J. McMullen, executive secretary of the United Board, include "providing more adequate equipment, limiting enrollment, raising standards, and increasing the emphasis on the development of Christian character." The key to all this, Dr. McMullen declared, is the faculty. "Every effort will be made to give further training to our present staff, secure other well-prepared professors, and pay all a more suitable salary."

Because of China's steadily mounting inflation, the report says, salaries paid professors during 1947 had approximately only twenty per cent of their pre-war buying power. To provide for their families on this meager pay, many faculty members (after using up all their savings) have been forced to sell their ancestral property, family heirlooms, and such prized possessions as their professional libraries, wedding jewelry, and stamp collections. Some sold all their clothing, except one suit, and did without heat in their houses even in the coldest weather.

Students, too, have had to face almost insurmountable odds, according to the report. With such food items as eggs selling for $600 a piece and simple meat dishes for $1,200, many students unable to pay these fantastically inflated prices subsisted on only one main meal a day.

Despite lack of food, inadequate equipment, and the colleges' overcrowded dormitories, however, in the fall of 1947 more than 11,000 students enrolled in the thirteen Christian colleges. And this number was only about one-tenth of the approximately 100,000 who applied for admission. During the year most of the colleges in an effort to regain their pre-war standards, accepted fewer students than they had in the previous year.

In 1947 more than 100 Chinese staff members from the colleges came to the United States, as well as approximately 400 alumni who pursued advanced studies in American universities and colleges.

Reviewing the accomplishments of the past year, Dr. McMullen declared that in spite of indescribable difficulties, surprising progress has been made. "This is due," he said, "to the faithful work of our seriously underpaid faculties and to the loyal support of the friends of these colleges in China and in America."

COORDINATED CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

At a recent meeting of the North American Administrative Committee of the World Council of Christian Education at 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, on December 17, a far reaching plan of cooperation with the Foreign Missions Conference was proposed and adopted by the committee. The plan will eliminate duplication of effort and provide for more coordinated and effective work in the field of Christian education. Dr. Joseph Krenek, religious leader of Czechoslovakia, spoke and stated that in his country there was perfect freedom of religion with no interference from the State. The Rev. K. Mathew Simon of the Syrian Orthodox Church of India said that the young people of his country are as much afraid of American capitalism as they are of Russian communism.

D. Erich F. Voehringer, Associate Secretary of the World Council of Christian Education, announced that an international conference of those organizations interested in religious motion pictures would be held under the auspices of the World Council of Christian Education next spring. Judge Lewis L. Fawcett, retired Justice of the New York State Supreme Court, was reelected Chairman of the guidance that has meaning for his parishoners. Under the leadership of Dr. Harry V. Richardson, formerly Chaplain of Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, the Home Missions Council offers training institutes for the sharecropper minister, and has established Rural Church Departments in ten Negro seminaries. Similar institutes for Negro church women in the South develop leaders who will aid the minister in his administration of a well-rounded parish program of rural life improvement.

All this and more does the World Day of Prayer mean to the Interdenominational Christian missionary enterprise. The cause of Christian cooperation can have no finer witness than increased interdenominational effort on the mission field.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

When I see boys and girls eating candy it makes me think of when I was their (and your) age. My grandfather had a grocery store and one of my pet pastimes was to go and lean longingly against the candy counter hoping (and knowing) that I would get a piece or two.

You folk live in the day of 5 and 10 cent candy, but then there were the most wonderful candies for a penny or two. I like to recall some of them. There were marvelous creamy sugar candies, colored and shaped like clover leaves, frogs, pumpkins, and birds. The frogs were my favorite. There were long, black juicy licorice whips, little tin pans with sugar fried egg, pink and white ice cream cones, coconut and sugar affairs shaped into American flags, grand colors and good for a big tummy ache. Wax bottles contained "drinks."

There were maple sugar goodies shaped like Uncle Sam, or rosettes, vanilla drops covered with rich chocolate, bolsters of chocolate and peanut butter; and clusters of raisins and peanuts dipped in bitter chocolate. There were hard candies of solid colors with flower designs in the ends and always a little jar containing hoarhound candy which was a remedy for coughs and one that I disliked.

Sometimes we went visiting in a neighboring town and nearby was a candy kitchen. The smell was enough even if there was no money to buy a single piece of candy. Sugar coated apples were very good and there were endless rows of caramel rolls, orange and lemon slices of jelly, plus big round, shiny butterscotch patties, too.

I always think about a German bakery not far from my home that not only had wonderful candies but cookies that were long to be remembered. Spice cookies rolled in powdered sugar were good but best of all were the St. Nick's with frosted bodies and a seal of Santa stuck on the head for his face. They also made melt-in-the-mouth candy canes with zig-zaggy red stripes.

Even though we must pay a nickel for our candy today, we have plenty, more than we really need. There are boys and girls in Europe who wish they could have one piece. Let us remember them.

He is a great man who can turn his reverses to account.—N. P. Willis.

UNDERSTANDING THE SITUATION.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Did you know Jack marked three words wrong on Ellen's spelling paper today? That'll put her down a little."

Nine-year-old Mary Lou giggled. She was telephoning to Jane while waiting to help with the dishes; Mother was putting the baby to bed. The little girls were evidently ridiculing their schoolmate.

"Do you think they'll chose her for class monitor?... She thinks she has the most on her.... Let's ask the girls to skate with us tomorrow; then they won't vote for Ellen. And listen, I've thought of a trick we can play on her—right before the class. My, but she'll be fussed."

There was more giggling at the thought of embarrassing Ellen, and then Mother called. Mary Lou hung up the receiver and went to the kitchen.

"Ellen has a new dress," said Mary Lou, as she polished the baby's silver cup. "Some of the girls think it's very pretty."

"What is it like?" asked her Mother.

It's a bought dress—plain with red on it and has gold buttons. She wears a white collar and cuffs with it. But it's down to her knees—can you imagine? Yesterday, Jane drew a picture of Ellen with her dress to the floor. She wrote under it, 'Miss Lady Long Dress.' We passed it around at recess, and all the girls laughed at it. Then Ellen got angry, and when we went in the teacher asked her what was the matter; but Ellen wouldn't tell."

"That was fine, wasn't it?—her not telling."

"Well, she wouldn't want to talk about her dress being too long," said Mary Lou.

"I think she is a nice little girl. I must call her mother."

"Oh yes, she's a goody-goody all right," and Mary Lou's lips curled in scorn.

"Why are you against Ellen?" Mother inquired.

"I'm not against her; only it isn't fair for her to be the whole thing."

"I see," said Mother looking thoughtful. Until Ellen had moved into the district, Mary Lou had always received the highest grades in her class and was also the acknowledged leader on the playground. Now Ellen was a real competitor for honors, and Mary Lou was evidently finding it hard to take second place sometimes. "But don't you think this looks like jealousy?"

"No, what makes you say that?" Mary Lou was taken by surprise.

"Because it seems to me you behave as though you were jealous."

Then Mother, in an understanding and sympathetic manner, went on to explain. She spoke of the different ways in which jealousy is shown."

"Well, maybe I am jealous," said Mary Lou, "but, even if I am, I have good cause."

"No. Ellen has as much right to be first as you have, and don't you see how bad it makes her feel when you treat her this way? Put yourself in her place. And what about being a good loser, Mary Lou?"

There was no answer, and Mary Lou was glad when the subject was changed. But she began to feel sorry that she had treated Ellen unkindly to consider how she could make amend.

The next day her mother called on Ellen's mother; later she lent her a new book. A week or two after that Ellen brought the book back. Mary Lou met her at the door. The girls talked awhile on the porch and then went to the garage to see the kittens. Soon they were in the playhouse under the big tree happily washing little dishes in preparation for a dolls' tea party.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

YOUTH WEEK.

"Jesus Christ Is Lord," the theme of the recent Second World Conference of Christian Youth, has been selected for the theme of Youth Week in 1948, it was announced here at the headquarters of the United Christian Youth Movement, which sponsors this annual all-Protestant youth observance.

Set for the week of January 25-February 1, 1948, Youth Week will be celebrated by some four or five million youth of the United States and Canada, according to Miss Helen Spaulding, associate executive secretary of U.C.Y.M. and associate director of youth work for the International Council of Religious Education, which administers the U.C.Y.M. The movement includes the youth of forty denominations, thirty-four state councils, and sixteen national youth-serving agencies such as the International Society of Christian Endeavor, the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A.

Sunday, January 25, will be observed as Denominational Day with the theme "Jesus Christ—Lord of My Life," the emphasis will be on the principle that a personal relationship to Christ is basic to a well-developed personality.

The closing Sunday will be Interdenominational Day, and the theme will be "Jesus Christ—Lord of All" with emphasis on the need for a great ecumenical church and the belief in the growing cooperation that is developing among Christians.

Miss Spaulding urges church youth to work cooperatively in their communities in planning and celebrating Youth Week. The emphases during the week will be on the following areas: local church, community, fellowship, preparation for leadership, and world outreach. Wide use of the public schools, newspapers, and radio in publicity and observances is encouraged.

As in other years the Parshad Youth Week Awards granting college scholarships to outstanding Christian youth will be continued.

Youth Week had its beginning more than thirty years ago in the annual celebration of the birthday of the International Society of Christian Endeavor. In recent years Youth Sunday and Youth Week have been celebrated widely. This year's Youth Week is the fifth observance of a more inclusive united celebration.

OUR RELATIONSHIP TO GOD.

LESSON III—JANUARY 18, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: It is the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit that we are the children of God.—Romans 8:16.

LESSON: John 4:5-26; Romans 8:12-17; 31-39.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 103.

The lesson for today deals with our relationship to God. It does not deal with all of them, but it deals with several of them that are fundamental. The teacher of this lesson might use three simple headings around which to build his lesson—Worshippers of God, Children of God, Conquerors Through God.

Worshippers of God.

During his immortal interview with the woman of Samaria at Jacobs Well at Sychar, Jesus spoke these simple but profound words: God is Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. He thereby announced the spirit which should characterize the worship of God—simplicity and sincerity.

Man is, of course, a worshipper. He will worship something, he cannot help it. This does not mean that he will consciously bow down and worship at stated times or even before stated objects. But worship comes from two words which really mean "worth-ship." There is always something to which men attribute supreme worth, something which claims their highest admiration and their reverence and their devotion. It may be a material object, it may be pleasure, it may be another person, it may be an ideal, but men worship, all men attribute worth-ship to something.

And worship results in something. In the long run a man tends to become like unto that which he worships. For this reason men ought to take heed unto what they worship. And it is for this same reason that the Bible insists again and again that the supreme object of worship should be God. "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God"—this is the first and great (and also the greatest commandment), said Jesus. One of man's relationships to God is that of a worshipper.

The essential factor in worship is the spirit of worship. It is not primarily a matter of where men worship, or when they worship, or how they worship so far as the form of service they use, or the clothes they wear when they worship, but the spirit in which they worship. Men can worship God anywhere and at any time, although stated times and stated places help in worship. We ought to worship God, and if we worship Him acceptably we must worship Him in spirit and in truth—this is the first emphasis in today's lesson concerning our relationship to God.

Children of God.

The eighth chapter of Romans is one of the world's greatest pieces of literature. It reaches heights and plumbs depths of human life under God. And one of its central themes is the fact that we are the children of God. And we are children of God by a divine act through faith. The Spirit of God himself bears witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. And the basic factor in this new relationship is filial and not servile. We are sons, not slaves. And as sons of God, we are also heirs of God, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ—these are Paul's words, and grand words they are. We do not believe them, or at least, we do not act as if we believe them. Think how a person feels when he learns that he has inherited a large estate, or great wealth. Well as children of God we are joint heirs with Christ of all the riches of grace from God. As Paul says, "All things are yours." We Christians just do not get the joy out of life that we ought to get, we just do not realize what it can mean to be a Christian.

Conquerors Through God.

"Nay in all these things we are more than conquerors through Christ who loved us." "These things" we include a lot of things: tribulation, anguish, persecution, famine, nakedness, peril, even the sword, death itself or war. But none of these things can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus. And more: neither death, nor life, nor angels nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height nor depth, and lest he has left something out Paul adds, "Nor any other creature" shall be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord. "More than conquerors." Alas, that so few of us learn the secret of the overcoming life, the life of victory, the life of conquerors. We are all too often and too consistently beaten in this thing called life. But the men of the New Testament found the secret of victorious living. Religion for them was not a form but a power. Religion was not a weight, it was wings. Religion was not a matter of mechanics, but of dynamics. These men had found an inner freedom from the bondage of evil habits and the tyranny of sin. They stood forth in their liberty in Christ. They found that faith in Christ really helped them in a practical way in everyday living.

One suspects that too few of us, ministers and laymen alike, are getting from our religion what we ought to be getting. It is not an inner, vital force, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness. We sometimes fool ourselves by thinking that activity is in itself a sign of spiritual life, when as a matter of fact it may be a substitute for it. Many of us need to go much deeper before we can effectively go much farther. One has only to read Romans 8 to see that he has not outgrown the Christian faith or the Christian way of life. Jesus Christ came to save His people from their sins. If he sets us free we are free indeed. And in him alone is there true freedom. In the long run life will not work any way except Christ's way. "Be of good cheer," he said, "I have overcome the world." And through him we, too, can overcome the world and be more than conquerors.

prevent evil and to bind the wounds which it inflicts.

There is another religious perspective. As we stand upon the high mountain of religious values, God shows us the kingdoms of the world and the evil of them. He does not need to show us their glory, for we are already too enamored with that. Lifted out of our immersion in them, we are able for the first time really to see the moral quality of the human grouping to which we belong. Slums are revealed, not as geographic areas of our cities, but as human greed and fear made concrete. Jim Crow segregation is not mere difference of separate doors and fountains and cars boldly marked "White" and "Colored;" it is un-neighborliness sanctioned by law and propped by prejudice.

It is religion, and religion alone, which will create social conscience, lift societies off their idol thrones,

THE EPIPHANY.

FESTIVAL OF THE THREE KINGS.

A Sermon

By REV. JOHN F. C. GREEN.

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the King, behold Wise Men from the East came to Jerusalem saying, Where is He that is born King of the Jews? for we saw his star in the East, and are come to worship him. And when Herod the king heard it, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him. And gathering together all the chief priests and scribes of the people, he inquired of them where the Christ should be born. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written through the prophet, And thou Bethlehem, land of Judah, art in no wise least among the princes of Judah: for out of thee shall come forth a governor, who shall be the shepherd of my people Israel. Then Herod privily called the Wise Men and learned of them exactly what time the star appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search out exactly concerning the child; and when ye have found him, bring me word, that I also may come and worship him. And they, having heard the king, went their way, and lo, the star, which they saw in the East, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. And when they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And they came into the house and saw the young child with Mary his mother; and they fell down and worshipped him; opening their treasures they offered unto him gifts, gold, frankincense and myrrh. And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way."—St. Matthew 2:1-12.

Sacred tradition has placed the coming of the Wise Men kings to the Bethlehem manger twelve days after the story had been told by angel-song to the shepherds in the field. This is the Epiphany, the appearing of the strangers afar, to pay homage to the Messiah of the world, who could not be confined to one people.

Sacred lore would have it that these three men came from three diverse points of the compass, from as many different countries, thus signifying the loyalty of all the world to the Saviour King. One—Gasper, "the old king," hoary under the passing of the years, and wise in tempered experience, came from Arabia; Belthasar, the Negro, had come from fabled Ethiopia, where even now is the home of the oldest group of Christians, the Copts. And Melchoir, "the young king," came from distant and eastward Mesopotamia. So far apart they lived, but they were called together in this sacred mission by the revelations of the star.

But first they had to find the child-divine. And for this they sought King Herod of Judea, who, as ruler, should have known. He, a worldling, a tyrant and murederer, whose throne had been won and was maintained by the slaughter of the innocents, consulted the religious leaders for advice and learned that Bethlehem, rich in religious tradition, had been divinely appointed to be the earthly scene of the divine appearance of the Messiah. And how different, ever, is the Epiphany, the appearing of the divine, for the pictures that men make concerning it:

They were all looking for a king;
To smite their foes and set them high;
Thou camst a little baby-thing,
That made a woman cry.

It was in the story of St. Luke that the angel-song was related, with "Peace on earth, good will toward men." This evangelist, the apostle of the common people, ever exalts the divine in the humble. For the shepherds were the despised of men—in the sight of the aristocratic priests and lawyers of religion, of whom later as their class plotted the crucifixion of the Messiah, one said: "The common people who know not the law—they are accursed." The shepherds were poor. Their presents were of meager intrinsic worth. So that when Mary and Joseph brought the baby to the temple for the dedication according to the law, when "the eight days were fulfilled," the parents, of necessity, made the smallest sacrifice permitted, the least costly—a pair of turtle doves. In our money they were worth, perhaps, no more than thirty cents. That was given to the temple treasury, by the infinitely happy parents. They had no more to give. And the priests—finally—paid thirty pieces of silver for his betrayal, while the King sought his death as a babe. Into such a world of hatred toward the Spirit and the Spirit's work did Christ come. Into such a world He brought His Evangel: "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

Having completed their mission of the loving-quest, having made their devotions to the King of Kings in the form of a babe, the Wise Men Kings departed from the scene. But their rich gifts, worthy of their station—we may assume to have preserved the life of the Saviour. For how else could the parents, who a few days since had been too poor to give more than a pair of turtle doves, have borne the cost of a journey to Egypt? How could they have maintained themselves, strangers in a strange land, there, until Herod had died? Thus strangers from afar came to worship at the lowly manger, in fulfilment of the word that a prophet is not without honor except in his own land and among his own people.

Again, let us turn our eyes briefly to the manger scene. Here God had chosen the humble things of the world for exaltation by the revelation of His Son. For the manger, in the stable, was perhaps the crib for the babies of the family, who before and after the Christ guest, had lain there, according to the custom of the people of that country. Said Brother John, a Monk, a few years ago, as he was showing the traditional stable of the Holy Birth: "A peasant's family, by our custom shares its home with the animals of the household—in a living room which is also a sleeping room. And the manger had been worn smooth by the cradling of generations of babies. Don't you see?" he asked, "it means that some poor family in Bethlehem did its best to be kind to Mary and her Babe. Yes, they made up a bed in the manger, as the poor among us often do. Just the Babe shows the tender love of God, the manger is the token of the sympathy and love which is in human hearts."

All the universe united in the worship of the Child Messiah: the stars showed forth His coming; the angels sang the birth; the shepherds, the poor and humble, were first to pray at the manger; the animals were companions of the devout; and the rich and wise from afar came to worship Him. And a foreign land became His refuge during the persecution of the tyrant ruler.

And all the world unites, two thousand year later, in repeating its homage to the Saviour of the World: the Christ.

If Christ a thousand times
In Bethlehem be born,
And not in thee
Thy soul were still forlorn.

Amen

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt

Dear Friends:

The old year had many blessings for us. Our children at the Christian Orphanage had splendid health. We had no serious sickness and no deaths. We had food to eat and clothes to wear. Our biggest drawback was the extreme drought from early April until September 24, with only one light season during that length of time. Our gardens were practically a failure. But to make up for it, the good Lord put it into the hearts of the people to send us the largest Thanksgiving offering we have ever received. The year, 1946, was our best year financially up to that time, but the year, 1947, has gone past 1946, which makes it the best year financially we have ever had.

We have never had so many friends at the Christmas season as we had this past one. The children were invited to several Christmas parties where "Old Santa" played Santa Claus to them. We have never received so much candy, oranges, apples, tangerines, etc., as we have this past Christmas. Then, toys by the box came in, besides the toys sent by the churches. The children received six bicycles and two tricycles, and they have been very busy every minute on the outside when the weather was fit to be outside. The special ones who got bicycles have been kind and considerate of those who had none, and share their bicycles with the others. They are glad to share their blessing with others. It has been the most joyful Christmas we have ever had, and we are very grateful and thankful, too.

We are very much in need of a matron in the "White Building" known as the Christian Orphanage building. We need a matron to take charge of the kitchen and dining room. It would be a god opportunity for a widow lady even with one or two children. When you read this letter, see if you can think of a good woman whom you think would suit this position, and give me her name and address. I am compelled to find someone right away, so see if you can come to my rescue. The matron who has held this position for ten years has been very ill in the hospital for weeks and seems to improve very little. The position pays a fair salary.

Our next letter and financial report will close up the year, 1947.

FUNCTION OF RELIGION IN THE COMMUNITY.

shatter a static order, and make way for the dynamic influx of a better society.

Not only does religion personalize group life and supply the perspective from which enlarging sympathy and a social conscience spring; it also brings social redemption.

The path of private salvation is a highway of faith, repentance, and reconciliation. But how can a whole society believe, repent, and be reconciled? The answer is that it cannot do so as a whole, nor for itself. Redemption is not a matter that can be settled by a majority vote. If a society is to have saving faith and to repent and to be converted, it will be through its moral aristocracy—its saints. There is no social vision, no reform of injustice, no growth in community ever achieved on earth that has not first the passion of a prophet and his fervent disciples.

But social redemption is the work of something more than God's angry men. It comes about when men aroused and strengthened by God not only see social evil as sin but go on the second mile to accept the sin as their own. The force that makes the minority strong enough to withstand the majority is the conscious companionship and mandate of God. It is then that social redemption begins to work, and not before. Occasionally there is a man—one man—who is so deeply moved by the spirit of God that he joins a minority of two—God and himself.

The disease of expediency and impersonalism with which our community life is afflicted is not a skin rash; it is heart disease. And it will not be cured with moral poultices.

The cure will be costly.

"Give me your life," says God, "and I will make it a spade to dig the foundations of a new world, a crowbar to pry loose the rocks, a hoe to mix sand and cement, a trowel to bind stone and stone and make them a wall."

We are now at the time when it is no longer a question whether religion can graft the fruit of human kindness on the old tree of a flourishing society, but it is whether religion can renew the roots and give back the inward life. Civilization is dying and this civilization is not something abstract and far away; it is our way of behaving toward one another in village and neighborhood, in home and mart, in the smallest associations or the largest city. To personalize group life, to give the perspective for wide brotherhood and a more sensitive social conscience, to redeem groups and to reconcile them to one another, Christianity awaits a new incarnation. Then the social salvation can go forward.

But it will not go forward until a few persons accept the challenge of the whole society as their very own. As we hope for the saving formula, our eyes may be upon Wall Street, or Washington, or Lake Success, upon others, especially those in power; but the eyes of God—where do they look? I seem to see them looking straight at us and I hear his voice saying, "I know all about one hundred and thirty five million others, but I don't at the moment seem to see anybody but you."

The Norfolk Preaching Mission begins Sunday with a message by Dr. Walter Judd on the subject, "Christ or Chaos."

Marriages

On November 26, 1947, at the First Congregational Christian parsonage, High Point, N. C., in the presence of a few friends and relatives of the contracting couple a very pretty marriage ceremony took place, when Miss Marjorie Hughes became the bride of James A. Johnson, both of High Point. The double ring ceremony was used. May happiness be theirs.

BEN JOE EARP.

In Memoriam

FISHER.

John B. Fisher, forty-seven-year-old Norfolk and Western Railway engineer, suffered fatal injuries December 27, 1947, as he was boarding a passenger train in Suffolk, Va., where he resided. He died next day at noon in a local hospital. He was a member of the Suffolk Christian Church, and his widow was formerly Miss Lottie Mae Cross, who is superintendent of the Beginners Department of the Suffolk Christian Church Sunday School, which post she has held for more than twenty-five years. The deceased was from Dinwiddie County, and is survived also by a number of brothers and sisters.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer. The large number attending the funeral, and the beautiful and abundant offering of flowers gave comfort to the loved ones.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

ROUNTREE.

We, the members of the Board of Deacons of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, Virginia, take this means of expressing our respect for, and our appreciation of, the late Mr. J. Frank Rountree. For many years he was a member of the church and of the Board of Deacons, and as such he honored the church, and kept faith with it in the honor which it had bestowed upon him in electing him as a deacon.

He was a Christian gentleman, loving and loyal to his family circle, kindly toward his neighbors, faithful toward his friends, and devoted to his church. He was held in high regard and warm esteem by those who knew him, because of his integrity of character, his modest and unassuming ways, and his good words and works. His influence was wholesome and his sincere life a benediction. Our church has suffered a distinct loss in his passing.

We also take this means of expressing to the members of his family circle our sympathy in their sense of loss and loneliness. May they be comforted by the memory of his good and kindly life, by the heritage of his Christian influence, and by the assurance of his immortality through his faith in his Lord Jesus Christ.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. W. B. WILLIAMS,
L. J. BROWN,
H. S. HARDCASTLE,
Committee.

WILKINS.

We, the members of the ladies missionary society of Holy Neck Congregational Christian Church submit the following in honor of our beloved member, Mrs. Claude Wilkins, who passed to her reward September 21, 1947.

Mrs. Wilkins was a faithful member of the church, Sunday school, and and missionary society for many years.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we are grateful for what her life has meant to us as individuals and as a society for the peaceful, kind and happy life that seemed to be hers.

2. That we realize that God doeth all things well. While we mourn the loss of one who has meant much to us we bow in humble submission to His Divine Will.

3. That we extend to her family our deep-sent sympathy.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, one sent to the family, and a copy be entered on the records of our society.

Mrs. W. J. NORFLEET,
Mrs. J. O. DAVIDSON, Sr.,
Mrs. H. E. Crutchfield,
Committee.

STRANGE.

In the passing of Mrs. Elma Strange, wife of Deacon R. O. Strange, July, 1947, the Missionary Society of Pleasant Grove Congregational Christian Church (Va.) has lost one of its most faithful members.

Her buoyant spirit was an incentive to all who knew her. We can truly say that her church and Missionary Society had first place in her heart. To pay her dues was a joy and delight.

We shall greatly miss her among us but to one who lived so nobly, we bow in humble submission to the Father's Will.

NANNIE B. FARMER,
Mrs. J. H. JONES,
LIZZIE BOYD,
Committee.

MOFFITT.

Bascom Farmer Moffitt, 57, an esteemed and faithful deacon of the First Congregational Christian Church of High Point, N. C., was called to his reward on November 24, 1947, at his home on the Thomasville-High Point Road. He had been in his usual good health until an hour before his passing. He was born in Randolph County, and came to High Point thirty-six years ago. It will be difficult to find another to take his place in our church; such fidelity as his is not often found. Funeral services at his church by his minister, assisted by former pastor, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield.

HART.

Brother Allen Thurman Hart, son of H. Seymour and Fiebbie Hart, was born March 18, 1895, and died at his home in Liberty, N. C., Route 2, on November 30, 1947. Besides father and mother, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Alma Tuck Hart, and brother, Lewis Hart, of Oxford, N. C.; two sisters, Mrs. Dan Currin and Mrs. Joe Badgett, also of Oxford, N. C.

The funeral was at Union, Virgilina, Va., on Tuesday, December 3, 1947. Seven ministers were present and five had a part in the service. Burial was in the town cemetery. The deceased was a member of Union, N. C. He was a real Christian gentleman, a devoted husband, useful in community and church. Brother Hart was a man of splendid ability and a success in his work. For more than a decade he was the manager of the Watson farm in Alamance and Caswell Counties, N. C. At the time of his death he was on the McPherson farm near Liberty, N. C. Many people from a number of communities attended the funeral. Floral tributes were numerous and very beautiful.

THE UN WORKS FOR HUMAN RIGHTS.

the United Nations in the event of a violation of human rights? Should there be an International Court of Human Rights? What balance of legislative coercion and moral pressure should be struck? Such questions are of vital importance and are not easily answered.

The Christin churches, with their conception of the rights and duties of every man as an individual under God, can play a great role in stimulating interest in the problems of human rights. And as Americans, having lived under our own Bill of Rights for over a century and a half, we have a particular responsibility to the rest of the world. We must let our ideals of freedom be widely known. At the same time, we must purify our own practice so that it will more nearly correspond with our profession. Our deeds as well as our words are needed in order that we may give inspiration and help to the rest of the world in the establishment of universal human freedom. Hence I urge strongly that church people throughout the country give their most careful attention to the development of a Declaration and a Covenant on Human Rights, and that through their churches they guide the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs in its effort to speak a sound Christian voice to the nations of the world.

NOTE.—This article was prepared in response to a request from the New York office of the World Council of Churches for a personal statement summarizing reactions to the Geneva meeting of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Immanuel Congregational Church

HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT

Every church should provide adequate space for the display of denominational and other religious literature. Here are the literature tables in Immanuel Church.

The Immanuel Church has a rich and varied heritage. It was formed from what were originally two churches, the Pearl Street (later the Farmington Avenue) and the North Church (later the Park Church).

The Pearl Street Church was evangelistic, deeply interested in somewhat conservative thinking and personal Christian living. The North Church, especially through its most famous minister, Horace Bushnell, was progressive in its Christian teaching and very much concerned about civic affairs. Horace Bushnell's sermon inspired Hartford to establish a public water system. His interest caused the city to develop what later became known as Bushnell Park, the pioneer of publicly acquired city parks in America. One of the laymen whom he influenced gave Keney Park to the City, and even back in those days, Dr. Bushnell was an advocate of school consolidation, which was only consummated a few years ago. While he was ill with tuberculosis, he traveled to California, and there laid out the site for and helped to establish the University of California.

Both churches have had men and women of extraordinary ability and generosity who made large public gifts and helped endow the church. Members of Immanuel cherish both the wealth of personal religion inherited from Pearl Street Church and the enthusiasm for civic righteousness which burned so brightly in the North Church.

Rev. Fletcher D. Parker has been serving Immanuel Church with devotion and industry since 1927. These years have meant expansion and growth for the church. Organizations have been provided for young people and adults where social contacts could be made and the life of the church strengthened through Christian fellowship.

Many improvements have been made in the church building. The beautiful Memorial Chapel and the offices and classrooms were added, the choir gallery was removed, the Chancel was built, a new organ was installed and the Tiffany Mosaic portraying the "Sower" erected. Mr. Parker states that "the present emphasis in our church, in addition to the two we have inherited, is on worship."

NUMBER 3.

AN EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE for CHRIST and HIS CHURCH

OUR TESTIMONY AND COMMITMENT

In testimony of our devotion to Jesus Christ, and as the acknowledgement of the fulfillment of the promise of the Holy Spirit to us:

We, the Pastors assembled with the Committee on Spiritual Life and Evangelism of the Southern Convention in conference at Elon College, N. C., January 5-6, 1948, covenant with God through Christ and with one another—

1. To enter and promote an EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE in every Church of the Convention from February 11th through Easter Sunday, March 28, 1948.
2. To seek to bring men and women, boys and girls to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ and to commitment of their lives to his service; and to seek a membership gain of at least 10 per cent in each Church.
3. To pledge ourselves, individually and collectively, to seek to achieve these objectives, and to enlist all the other Pastors in this EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE.

PLAN OF ACTION

1. A Call to Prayer and Commitment in each Church to lay this EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE upon the hearts of all our people.

2. Locate and List every possible prospect.

3. Select, Enlist, Instruct the necessary personal workers.

4. Period of Fellowship, Visitation, Cultivation and Commitment of the prospects: (a) Through personal witness. (b) Through Pastors' Classes, Special Services, Appropriate Literature, and Decision Day in the Sunday School.

5. Special Services of Ingathering into Church Membership on Easter Sunday, March 28, or the time near that day best suited to the local church.

6. Declaration of Results of the EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE. For the glory of Christ and the encouragement of us all, each Pastor and Church will report to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., by March 31, 1948, the number won to Christ and members received into the Church during the Crusade.

7. Strengthening the Members of the Household of Faith. We call upon each Church and Pastor to help every new member received into the Church to find his place in his Church, and to offer opportunities for service in the program of the Church as a means of Christian growth and development. We also call upon each Church and Pastor to intensify the emphasis upon regular Church attendance, and upon private and family devotions and to supply suitable materials for individual and home use to this end.

(Signatories to this Commitment will be found elsewhere in this issue.)

NEWS AND VIEWS

This issue is devoted to the Evangelistic program of our Church.

The choir of the Rosemont Church sang at Newport-News Sunday evening.

The Executive Board of the Southern Convention was in session at Elon College this week.

Our issue of January 28 will be a Promotion Number for renewed and additional subscriptions.

A Ground-Breaking Ceremony was held Sunday afternoon for the new Mt. Pleasant Church at Westmoreland Circle in Washington. Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, pastor, and Supt. Joseph H. Stein led the service. Work on the more than $300,000 first unit of the church will begin this month. The church was organized in 1866 with 19 members. Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder of Christian Endeavor, turned the first spadeful of earth for the present church.

Rev. Ellis Clark writes: "We moved to Great Bridge on January 2. My first week as pastor of Berea has been spent visiting and attending a round of meetings. The church voted in quarterly conference to cover the floors of the educational plant with rubber tile, brighten all dark corners with paint and varnish, and conduct a complete religious census of the community. We had 158 in Sunday school and more than this at the Sunday morning service of worship. We hope to receive a harvest of new members during the Evangelistic Crusade."

GENERAL LEE ATTENDED CHURCH.

By ANDREW SLABEY.

Walking down a street in Petersburg, Virginia, my eye caught sight of a post with an iron tablet. It was a historical marker with this inscription: "St. Paul's Episcopal Church. Built in 1856. Here Robert E. Lee and his staff worshipped during the siege of 1864-65. Lee attended the wedding of his son, W. H. F. Lee in this church in 1867."

Historical things interest me, so I took a good look at the old church. Fortunately it was open, so I went inside and sat down quietly in a pew. There was much to look at and admire in this fine church. I wondered in which pew did General Lee sit with his staff. I thought it was wonderful for such a great man to come to church even in the midst of war when he was besieged. Many a little man will find excuses for staying away from church, or carelessly neglect it when he has no enemy after him except the flesh and the devil.

As I was meditating the organist came out to practice and I heard some fine music which was good for my soul, free of charge.

When I left that hallowed place I decided to read up on General R. E. Lee. Among other things I discovered to my surprise that he not only attended the church of his own denomination wherever possible, but he also attended and even invited people to other churches. Thus it happened in one place where he was camping with his army, that a Methodist preacher came to hold divine service on the following Sunday afternoon. General Lee not only gave him the permission, but himself announced the meeting and went from house to house to invite folks to attend that gospel service. Thus many came who would have otherwise stayed at home.

Now I think I know why so many Southern boys have "Lee" for their middle name.

But how fine it would be, if we had Christians who would follow the good example of General Lee in regularly attending and inviting people to church. Let us think on these things as we celebrate his birthday on January 19.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Fulfilling Our Discipleship Through the Evangelistic Crusade

An Evangelistic Crusade will be the major emphasis of our churches and pastors of the Conferences of the Southern Convention from February 11 through Eastern Sunday, March 28. During that Crusade we will be thinking about the loving ministry, suffering, death and resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. As His faithful followers and friends we will wish to devote our energies to His work more earnestly. During this Evangelistic Crusade, let us try to discover what Jesus' plan for the world really was, and then let us rededicate our lives to the fulfillment of His plan.

The Christian life is a committed life! Paul said, "It is Christ's love that controls me." That ought to be the experience and testimony of every Christian. The Christian life is a life committed to God as revealed in Jesus Christ. The Christian makes countless decisions throughout his life—but all our decisions are made in the light of one basic decision—that is, to follow Jesus Christ. As a member of the church each of us has committed to him our life sometime. Have we forgotten that commitment? Not always have we been true to our commitment. All we like sheep have strayed. All of us have fallen short of our duties as Christians. Each of us needs constantly to be on guard lest we allow ourselves to grow old and distant in our allegiance to Jesus Christ. That is why Paul counselled Timothy, "Stir up that good gift of God which is in thee!"

The real purpose of the Evangelistic Crusade is "more and better Christians." That should be the purpose of our lives as Christians. That is the need of our Church, our Community, our Nation, our World. It is our business as Christians to witness for Jesus Christ—in our lives and in our testimony. The Evangelistic Crusade offers you a renewed opportunity to a re-commitment of your life to the purposes of Jesus. Say a good word for Jesus Christ and his Church. Bring someone to Jesus Christ during this Evangelistic Crusade. That is your business as a Christian.

If we are willing to undertake this Crusade for Christ, Christ will supply strength sufficient for the task. If we are controlled by our desire to be his disciples we will not hunt excuses, but we will do what we can.

Christ is depending upon each one of us to make him known.

MINISTERIAL TESTIMONIES.

Thought the Conference on Evangelism was great. I believe we caught something of the spirit which will help us find the way.

FRANK H. LEWIS.

The meeting, on the whole, was one of the most interesting and refreshing on evangelism I have ever attended. Courage was strengthened, faith revived, vision clarified, heart enlarged and kindled.

ROY D. COULTER.

Many thanks for a very helpful and profitable Conference on Evangelism at Elon January 5 and 6. There was unanimity of spirit to an unusual degree, and a sincere search after the solution to a perplexing problem. It is my conviction that we found something. I did!

WILL B. O'NEILL.

The Pastors' Planning Conference was to me very humiliating as well as inspirational. For I was brought face to face with my sin of negligence and yet I was inspired to commit myself along with others to put forth a greater effort in the work of evangelism. If the attitude that was manifested by the ministers at the conference prevails throughout the Southern Convention there will be a new day for evangelism in our church.

W. T. MADREN.

I was glad to have the privilege of attending the meeting of our Southern Convention ministers at Elon on January 5 and 6 to study our past record of evangelistic results, and to plan a campaign in our churches which will enlist our laymen in a concerted effort to enlist a great number for the church and Christ's kingdom. Doctors Timmons and Collins made a fine contribution in information and inspiration.

T. FRED WRIGHT.

The Elon Conference on Evangelism was a soul searching experience for the ministers in attendance, and there was a goodly attendance of them. To our shame, we learned how little we and our churches are doing about the one great purpose of our calling—the winning of people for Christ and His Church. We all of one accord are determined that we shall give ourselves, and lead our churches, in a crusade to reach the unreached people in our church communities for Christ and His Church.

JOE A. FRENCH.

It was an inspiration to be at the Pastors' Planning Conference on Evangelism. Three score of our ministers thinking and planning together with one ultimate goal in mind. No lectures; no long speeches; but discussions in which all could share. I came away with a deeper consecration to the ministry to which my Lord has called me. Brethren of the ministry, our tasks would bring forth fruit if all within our ranks did possess the type of dedication and consecration and believed in our message as Dr. Collins of Minnesota. He left us with a challenge.

S. E. MADREN.

This meeting was the beginning of a new hope for the churches of the Southern Convention and the Kingdom of God. The fields are white already with the harvest, and in the past our efforts to save it have been small indeed. But we now stand united in purpose and will to do something about the task at hand. And with the help of God we shall succeed. This was one of the most searching and inspiring meetings I have ever attended. As a result of this communion we have committed ourselves to the first challenge of the Christian faith—to win others to the Kingdom. Christ is the director of our actions and the source of our strength—victory is sure!

KENNETH D. REGISTER.

"... they were all with one accord in one place."—Acts 2:1. These words were used to describe the condition of the followers of Christ immediately preceding the greatest "Revival Meeting" in the history of the Christian world.

We cannot expect so far reaching results from the recent Pastors' Conference on Evangelism held at Elon College, but I think I have never seen a group of ministers who were more of one accord "in prayer and supplication." This conference meant much to me and I shall always remember it as one of the highlights in my life as a minister of the Gospel of Christ. We have had our period of one accord; now it is time to act in order that the visions flashing before us then may now become realities in

CATECHISM ON EVANGELISM.

What is Evangelism? The Archbishop of Canterbury gave this terse definition: "Evangelism is the winning of men to acknowledge Christ as their Saviour and King, so that they give themselves to His service in the fellowship of His Church." Another definition is given by Toyochico Kagawa: "Evangelism means the conversion of people from worldliness to Christlike godliness. Conversion is absolutely fundamental, for without the awakening of a spiritual hunger, there is no hope for an individual, a society, a race or a nation." Stanley Jones, missionary and evangelist, says: "Evangelism is the good news of the Kingdom of God on earth, that Kingdom personalized and embodied in Christ, through whom this gracious offer comes in nail-pierced hands, signs of what it cost to make this offer to us in spite of our sins, and who lives to make that Kingdom effective in the individual and social will, and who offers us now an individual and social new birth as first steps toward the realization of that Kingdom." Evangelism includes the various means by which we "bring a needy world and a resourceful Saviour together."

What is the Period of the Crusade? The Lenten period, the heart of the Church year. This is the season for our greatest preaching, our greatest efforts. All superficial and extraneous matters are put aside and one deals only with the great essentials of the Christian gospel. Samuel M. Zwemer has this appropriate word: "The Cross of Christ is the searchlight of man's sin and the revelation of His love for sinners. In carrying this good news we need the power of Christ's resurrection, we need faith not only in the seed but in the soil, and we may use every possible method to drive the one message to the conscience of the hearer."

What are the Mechanics of the Crusade? Preparation is essential. A survey should be made wherever practicable. Lay and ministerial visitation are requisite. Dr. John R. Mott rightly insists that "Every such campaign should be preceded by retreats; that is, the going apart of groups of workers and leaders, those who are to have the major part of the responsibility for the special action, to wait unitedly and unhurridly on God for spiritual preparation of mind and heart and for insuring triumphant unity. On the authority of Christ by injunction and practice, this procedure was the precursor of Pentecost. The other indispensable means to insure the unutterably vital results has ever been the practice of intercession on the part of Christ's disciples, whether few or many."

What are the Dynamics of the Crusade? A genuine concern for the life and destiny of God's people. A mature realization of the indispensable Christ. Dr. Mott gives these further suggestions: "Let our minds dwell on those we know who have not come under the sway of the wonderful Saviour and Master. Think of those who are living worldly, selfish, proud lives; of others who are living indifferent, apathetic, unresponsive lives; of those who are living narrow, contracted, atrophied lives; of those who are sorrowing and lonely; of those who are hungering and thirsting for something purer and nobler; of the many who are fiercely tempted, sin-bound, habit-bound; of men defeated and discouraged; of multitudes in the mazes of skepticism and unbelief, bewildered and in a true and graphic sense literally lost. Upon fellow men near and far in the midst of such need and bearing such burdens, no sincere Christian can thus meditate without the generating in him of a Christlike desire to bring relief." A great Swiss reformer once exclaimed, "How much more would a few good and fervent men effect in the ministry than a multitude of lukewarm ones!" The crusade will fail without the dynamics of a holy compassion.

How shall we gain the necessary dynamics for this great task? Think of the Scotch preacher, Horatio Bonar, a great preacher and hymn writer, but also incessant in his visitation of the parish. He wrote:

Sin worketh, let me work too,
Sin undoeth, let me do. . . .
Death worketh, let me work too.
Busy as death, my work I'll ply
Till I rest in the rest of eternity!

PILGRIMAGE TO AMSTERDAM.

Mr. Raymond Swing, noted radio commentator, will interview four leading Protestant churchmen in a series of quarter-hour transcribed radio broadcasts on the issues of the forthcoming First Assembly of the World Council of Churches. These interviews have been announced by Dr. Douglas Horton, chairman of the American Committee for the World Council.

Entitled "Pilgrimage to Amsterdam," the series of broadcasts will cover events leading up to the formation of the World Council and also the issues now being deliberated by the four preparatory study commissions composed of leading Orthodox and Protestant churchmen through the world. The Assembly will meet in Amsterdam, Holland, in August of this year.

The historical background of the First Assembly will be discussed by Mr. Swing with Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, associated general secretary of the World Council. Dr. Henry Pitney Van Dusen, president of Union Theological Seminary, will report on the work of the study commissions on church organization and the world mission of the churches.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church will be interviewed by Mr. Swing on developments in the study of the commission on The Church and the Disorder of Society. Dr. O. Frederick Nolde, dean of the graduate school of the Lutheran Seminary at Philadelphia and director of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs, will consider with Mr. Swing the place of the Christian churches in the development of a moral international order.

Many Movements in One Direction

An Address by REV. WOFFORD C. TIMMONS, D. D.

At the Pre-Lenten Ministers' Convocation, Elon College, N. C.

Some time ago a would-be profound questioner asked me, "What is the next move of the Church?" I countered by asking him if he thought the Church were a movement. "No," he said, "the Church isn't, but the Christian faith is." He explained by saying that the Church seemed to be 'set in its ways,' but it ought to be on the move. We got off into a considerable discussion which would be beside the point for me to relate now, except that I tried to point out many moves, significant moves, the Church is making for the direction of our distracted time. His parting shot was: "I hope all the moves are in the same direction." I got to thinking about it and naturally applied it to the colossal task the Church is undertaking today, and especially to this task of evangelism. I am inclined to feel that while the moves we make are important, the direction is the really important thing. Thank God, we are not as confused in this matter as we may have been in other years. "Ends and means," wrote Aldous Huxley just before the war broke; and he pointed out how men are always getting them mixed up. When I was a young fellow we had a typical, absent-minded professor—Professor Peed—a brilliant mathematician, but affording the school much merriment because of his whimsical mixups. One day, so one of the legends runs, he was saddling his horse, and two young freshmen passing by looked over his way and started roaring with laughter. "Now young fellows," asked the professor, "what are you laughing at?" "We are laughing at you, professor; you've got the saddle on backwards!" "Now don't be so smart," he replied. "How do you know which way I'm going?"

The world has often smiled at the Church—sometimes smirked—as it passed by and noticed some of the things that were going on. Perhaps some things did appear as ludicrous as a saddle on backwards. This was certainly true about some of the evangelistic movements and also some of our missionary and social reform efforts. Our perspective of what was going on, and the world's perspective looking on, were two different views. It seems to me now that the whole scene is changing; doubtless because our condition is so serious no one is in the mood to make it a laughing matter! One of the well known commentators on Radio said recently that he was requested to use ridicule as a method of handling the Russian Foreign Minister's policies that have caused the impasse in the United Nations. His answer was, that when the world is on tender-hooks, as it is, is no time to resort to clever rejoinder.

In general, then, there are two major moves the Church is making. The best way I can characterize them is that one is remedial and the other is redemptive. Of course, they both spring from the same spiritual source and so often interchange and overlap we are unable to differentiate, except to say that the one, the remedial, is presumably the short-term mission, while the other, the redemptive, is the long-term, everlasting task. And even the remedial, in the hands of Christian people, becomes a testimony to the redemptive. While the present experience of the Christian forces throughout the world is anything but simple, yet that part of the Christian Church that calls itself "evangelical" is notably united with respect to these two phases of Christian concern: the one being emergency relief, and the other evangelism.

Evangelical Christendom feels the pressure of necessity today beyond anything that has been known since the Reformation, not only in its objective relation to the world it would redeem but also in its subjective experience as the agency of that redemption. In this two-fold expression of our Christian purpose today something very significant is happening: we are seeing that the relieving measures of Christian compassion and the redeeming measure of the Grace of God are not alternatives; they belong together; Christian compassion dwelling in the Grace of God as fragrance dwells in a rose. There have been times when some have felt that for the Church to be greatly exercised over evangelism would be to siphon off our passion for social justice, just as others have felt that the amelioration of human ills would become substitute for spiritual regeneration. At any rate, the tragic realism of this hour is fully faced by the Christian community the world over; that both bodies and souls are the objects of our healing Gospel; that we do not get better evangelism by minimizing relief, nor do we get better relief by neglecting evangelism! The truth is, we will get neither unless we get both. One of the clearest lessons being forced upon us now—and I think we are relearning it—is that the timely and the timeless, the material and the spiritual, are constantly interested by the Gospel's intent and result.

Now, there are many ways to think of evangelism. And every one of us knows that it needs to be rethought. Some time ago the Federal Council asked one of our Congregational pastors, Aaron Meckel, to write a booklet along this line, and he called it "It's Time to Rethink Evangelism." He has since written another interesting volume called New Day for Evangelism. One word I can bring to you with eagerness—and I hope you will be willing to share my eagerness—and that is that it is being rethought. In a fuller sense than most of us realize, evangelism, in all of its dimensions, is being rethought and reclaimed. The whole Christian world, it seems, is engaged in this process, from the World Council of Churches right on down to every denomination, large and small, conservative and liberal; and to movements within and among the various denominations. The basic program of Christian advance everywhere is expressed not in the more innocuous terms of the fatuous religious nominalism of a few years back, but in terms of vial, evangelistic confrontation of the personal and social claims of the Gospel, seeking for decision, demanding commitment and challenging to crusade. Indeed, we are arrested by the fact that the current theme of the two most important groups within the Church at large, the Missionary Education Movement and the Council of Christian Education, is "Evangelism." The three most important books that have come from the religious press during the past two years are clear-cut pronouncements on evangelism—and I say this with the full appreciation of what the religious world thinks of Aronld Toynbee's A Study of History and the late LaComte DuNouy's Human Destiny. The first of these three is the searching study made by the Church of England, called Toward the Conversion of England, dedicated to the late Archbishop Temple; the second is the equally disturbing and challenging program by the Presbyterian Church of Scotland, entitled Into All the World. And the third is this appealing little volume, written in our own country by Willis LaMott for the Missionary Education Movement, called Committed Unto Us. There is true apostolic succession in these writings: they pulse with the persuasion of the Holy Spirit! There is no mistaking the call of these modern Christian epistles to the churches; they are not optional homilies on interesting phases of the Chris-

Facing Spiritual Bankruptcy

By DR. LEON EDGAR SMITH
President, Elon College

Could it be possible that our churches in the Southern Convention are facing spiritual bankruptcy? This would be a tragic contemplation. When you look at the figures compiled by Superintendent Scott, you are made to wonder.

In our Convention there are nearly 200 churches with a total membership of 33,539. During the conference year 1946-47 all of our churches and tens of thousands of members made a total net gain of only twenty-six members. During the nine-year period beginning 1938 there were sixty-eight of our churches that showed a net loss. This is our record during a period in which there have been unprecedented gains in population in most of the sections in which we have churches. Of course, we all know that figures, however carefully tabulated, do not tell the whole story, but they do tell a part of it, and in this instance, indicate a trend that should stir the souls of everyone of us.

Under the impetus of the above tabulations a conference on evangelism was planned. The conference to be held at Elon College. Every minister in the Southern Convention was invited and urged to attend. Approximately sixty of our pastors came, and stayed to the close of the conference.

Superintendent Scott was fortunate in securing the interest and cooperation of the Department of Evangelism and Life Service of our United Church. The Department sent to us its executive secretary, Dr. Wofford Timmons, and Dr. Collins, superintendent of Minnesota State Conference, to be our leaders. These visiting brethren made significant contributions to every session of the conference. They helped us. They gave us a new vision, and a new determination.

It was most encouraging to see how practically every pastor was eager for any suggestion that would better fit him for his responsibilities and enable him to lead his people in more successful evangelistic efforts.

We have taken a look at our churches. The facts are not inspiring; neither are conditions hopeless. We now need to take a look at our task, our opportunities. The fields are white unto the harvest; the laborers are few; but we do have some laborers. Our responsibilities are increased. Our opportunities are multiplied. After all the responsibilities are ours as pastors. I know that we are not to do all the work. It would be fatal if we did, but we are to be leaders, God's appointed leaders. If we do not lead, the churches will not get far. The captain on the boat is not the crew, nor does he furnish the power by which the boat sails. It is his responsibility to see that the crew is in its place and that it does its duty. It is also his responsibility to steer the boat into safe channels. The pastor does not do all the work, but he is the leader, the inspiration. He must encourage his people by keeping in touch with God, pointing them to opportunities for high services and inspiring them with the assurance that God is with them and that they, while trusting Him and looking to Him for help, cannot fail.

The conference made its appeal to our pastors to give themselves to God anew and to their churches for a fuller and more complete service that we, all of us, may be awakened to a new sense of our responsibilities and inspired by the unprecedented opportunities that await us.

Elon College was glad to have the opportunity to serve as host to this conference.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

May God help us to be a team of pastors and lay workers throughout our Southern Convention to carry out the plans for an Evangelistic Crusade culminating at Easter. To me it is though we were directed in making these plans by the Holy Spirit. Several of us came upon the idea of having a conference of all our pastors at Elon to see what could be done about the fact that our entire Convention with five Conferences had received only a net gain of twenty-six new members. We were about the largest number of pastors seen assembled together in several years. And we were an humble group. We all desired to face the facts, and to humble ourselves until God could use us to as He would. We met together humbly. We waited in prayer. We believe God heard our prayer, and that we were thus enabled to make proper plans of procedure.

It remains now for us to get busy in every pastorate. This issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN carries the plan of action. I hope every pastor—even though he may have as many as five churches—will find a time to lay this matter upon the hearts of his people in each church, and that they will list every prospect, that they will get a number of members willing to pray together and go out after those whom they have prayer for and listed as prospective members. Many progressive rural pastors are receiving members all along through the year. Dr. I. W. Johnson was just telling me how he has already received eleven new members in his field since Conference. He ascertains the prospects in his churches and makes a substantial increase year after year.

If we want to do it we shall find a way to try to do it. It is hoped that every church in the Convention will be able to make some report on March 31. Say to yourself now, brother pastor, that you will see to it that your church knows about these plans for an Evangelistic Crusade, and that it be given a chance to work at it. It just happens that our regular quarterly conference came the next night after the Elon conference and so I was able to present the plans to the church in regular business session. They heartily approved it and voted unanimously to enter into it. It could be presented to a church on Sunday, or to its Sunday school, or to its board of deacons during some night in the week, and through them to the church later. In some way let it be done in every church, and let's have whatever work it takes to win. Many of our churches take pride in their financial goals and that is proper, but here is the very heart of the work of the church. Let us have deep concern about it. Let us earnestly pray, and ask God's directions on how we may do it, and then let us have the courage to do our best.

If we pastors really take it seriously and earnestly, as I believe we shall, we shall find that our laymen and women, and young people are ready to help us. And I can not forget what a large number of our ministers attended the meetings at Elon, and how faithfully they remained for the entire session. I believe it means that we are going to rise up and lead our folk into the joy of winning others for Christ.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

THE MEETING AT ELON.

The meetings at Elon College, January 5 and 6, 1948, on Evangelism was a forward step for the Southern Convention. Dr. Truitt presided with his usual pleasing personality. Dr. Scott humiliated us by pointing to the records to show how little we had been doing. He made us want to pray. Dr. Timmons challenged us

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON EVANGELISM.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

There is much unrest and misunderstanding and hatred in the world. Babson in his book New Tasks for Old Churches says: "Sin is a tiny word of only three letters but it includes all the forces which are eating into civilization. It is sin which is preventing men and women from being healthy, happy and prosperous. It is sin which kills, destroys and ruins life. It is not the primary business of the churches to entertain or amuse. The greatest need of the world is to get men's hearts right with God."

Evangelism is the work of the Church and the Kingdom. The work of the Church in threefold—first, the winning of decisions for Christ; second, the work of Christian Education, or the building up of lives in Christ; and third, the work of recruiting, and sending out lives in definite Christian service.

Methods vary but the purpose is the same—the winning of souls for the Master, the work of helping men, women and young people, to experience genuine conversion. The preaching of the Word in revival meetings is one method used in the majority of our churches. Visitation evangelism, pastoral evangelism and educational evangelism are other methods used with good results by many pastors and churches. Your Committee believes that every pastor should strive to do the work of an evangelist. We believe that church officers, and every member of the local church, should share with the pastor the responsibility and the privilege of soul winning. Your Committee recommends that our churches put forth a greater effort in soul winning, using the method best suited to their particular church, and strive to make at least a ten per cent increase in membership the coming year.

Respectfully submitted,

T. FRED WRIGHT, Chmn.,

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Evangelism is at the heart of our Lord's program to win the world to Himself. It is first in importance, in our opinion, in all the phases of the bringing in of the kingdom, because it is the beginning of this work. Paul says, "We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." When one is thus reconciled to God, then, and only then, is he qualified and willing, to go out into the field of service for His Lord, as missionary, Christian Education worker, Christian Social worker, or other phases of Christian service. Evangelism, therefore, is important, because it is the first, and foundation work, of the program of God to save souls.

Since evangelism, then, is of such importance, it is one of the musts on the agenda of the kingdom. It is our greatest and most important, and at the same time, our hardest work. To win souls to Christ, one must not only love the souls of men, but must be consecrated sincerely to Christ Himself, and live a clean life, so that those he is trying to win will have confidence in him. He will need to be as anxious about winning souls as he is about winning dollars. Then our evangelistic efforts will be more successful, and sinners will be converted to God.

As to the methods of soul winning, there are many, and we are to call into play every sane and sound way that will bring a lost one to accept his Lord as his Saviour.

In doing this greatest work in the interest of the Kingdom, one will need to study man, and his nature, study the Word, give himself to much prayer, and depend on the Holy Spirit to do the office work in the heart of the one we are trying to win to our Lord.

We, therefore, suggest:

1. That much emphasis be placed this conference year on winning the lost to Him, who only can save, our Lord Jesus Christ.

2. That we pray for the spirit of revival to be in our churches of expectancy, looking hopefully for the coming of the lost to Christ, and into the church at every service.

3. That we set as our goal for this conference year, one soul for Christ, for every ten active members of our Church.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

Evangelism is the process of "making disciples" for Christ. Many methods are used, but the object is always the same—to make followers of Christ.

Evangelism is greatly needed today. Only about half of the people in North Carolina are members of any church, and a much smaller percentage of the world's population make any profession of faith in Christ.

Only Christ can save our world from the hell which it is making for itself. We have only a brief time in which to turn men to God. Then our day will be over. We need to feel the urgency of the twelve-year-old Jesus who said: "I must be about my Father's business."

We recommend:

1. That pastors and leaders seek to secure new members each month.

2. That each church hold one or more revival meetings annually, with the purpose of getting conversions and new members.

3. That each Sunday school have a Decision Day in which an effort is made to get decisions for Christ and His Church.

4. That special emphasis be placed this year on personal evangelism.

5. That the program of the Church be undergirded by daily prayer, and that the church hold regular prayer meetings in which evangelism is a definite part of the program.

F. C. LESTER.

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The report on Evangelism is made year after year, as are many other reports from committees. Many good things are said and many new proposals are made. These reports are accepted and recorded in the minutes of our conference. There they remained untouched, inasmuch as we fail to carry out the recommendations and proposals made. Action and less time spent in writing and commenting upon what ought to be done should be our aim. No building has ever been built except by action of the carpenter after his plans have been made. No kingdom of God will be built unless there is action by His people.

From statistics gotten from the Conference Annual, the 1945-46 issue, there is an increase of only 443 new members for the entire Convention. Our own Virginia Valley Central Conference reported an increased membership of 46. These figures are not very impressive considering the number of workers and the recent impetus placed upon the securing of new members through personal Evangelism, and we believe that this is a good method. The committee is convinced that it is the quality of the workers that counts and apparently there is not a considerable quantity of the quality workers available for work.

The World for Christ

CHRISTMAS IN SHAOWU.

The story of our first Christmas in China (last year we were in mid-Pacific) must necessarily begin with the Friday of the week before Christmas. On that day Shaowu had a terrible fire on the street back of the hospital. The day was clear, cold and windy; so you can imagine how fast the blaze traveled through the closely packed wooden shops and homes. Around the corner and across the street it went; but it finally did stop, miraculously enough before it had burned through to a fire line the men were making chopping down houses. When Gwei Lan (our worker) came in and told us to come onto the upstairs porch to see the fire, we were alarmed, thinking it was the hospital so near was the lurid flame and smoke. I (Dick) left immediately and remembering my experience as a fireman in Waverly, started to work tearing down houses in advance of the flames to keep it from spreading.

People carrying or throwing out their belongings were shouting to family and friends for help; burden carriers were yelling their way through the crowd to a place to lay their possessions away from the fire; others were hollering warnings to those within threatened houses or to those under windows where belongings were being hurled to the ground. It was quite dangerous as houses were continually falling to the ground, but as far as we know, only one man was hurt. Soldiers, wounded or otherwise, policemen, carpenters and others were trying to stop the fire; men, women and children were trying to save their few possessions; some were crying; others were just watching. Later we found out that many of the people who were offering to help were in reality carrying off whatever they took. A cloth merchant formerly had 100 bolts of cloth, now he has only a few. A little girl cried long after the fire was checked, because a wounded soldier who offered to help save her bedroll for her made off with it, leaving her nothing.

When the fire was almost out, the "fire department" appeared on the scene. It consisted of several men pulling some small four-wheeled contrivances which had hoses coming from the top and pumps run by the strength of six men. Water was poured into the back by buckets. A small pitiful stream of water came out, but the one near where I was working didn't work at all because a vital part was missing (someone had borrowed it and neglected to return it). Finally the fire was stopped, after many homes had been burned and others torn down. People all along the street, not knowing if the fire would be stopped or not had already moved their things into the street. It was almost dark. Where would the people sleep that night and what would they eat? All who had relatives would get their help, of course; but we were hearing talk of a peculiar belief. When someone's home burns, he must not move in with anyone for seven days for the fire-god might burn that home, too.

On our compound is an empty school house and there are several empty rooms in the nurses' school. These we immediately offered to the magistrate if needed. They were, and by eight or nine that evening there were around twenty people in the buildings. The police furnished meals for the people and borrowed bedding to keep them warm. It was very cold that night—went down to twenty-six degrees. How pitiful they were in those cold empty rooms. Two old women were sitting on a bedroll and with some of it were trying to cover themselves. A younger woman in another room was nursing her baby, a tiny child crying on the bedroll beside her. There was just their bedding (if they were lucky) or the bare floor to sit on. The police provided a few tiny lamps for most of the rooms.

On Saturday morning, more people came, altogether sixty-nine. There was a baby less than a week old which Frances Whitaker and Mrs. Kao gave its first bath.

The young people's society and young adult group had planned to give plays on Christmas eve. One group was giving "Why the Chimes Rang" and the other "The Other Wise Man." They had already raised some money to pay for the expense of costuming, staging, etc. The morning after the fire, Timothy Chang (president of the young adults group, the young man the women of the Southern Convention are helping to come to America next year to study for the ministry) came over to our home and suggested that this money go to the victims of the fire. We went through some relief clothing on hand and sorted out those which were readily wearable for winter. These were given out. Other summer clothing, etc., was sold and the money put in with funds raised by the churches (both Sunday morning offerings) and distributed to them. The South Gate Church had raised a sum also to give all the Sunday school children presents. That money was put in the "fire fund." Altogether there was almost $4,000,000 (present rate of exchange $100).

On Christmas night a service was held for the fire victims. First there were slides on the "Life of Christ" explained by Timothy. Then, Mr. Chiu gave a short talk on the meaning of Christianity and why Christians were giving this money and help. All of the families there except one, were what are popularly called "idol" worshippers." After distributing.

A CALL TO WORLD-WIDE PRAYER.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER,
FEBRUARY 13, 1948.

THEME: "The World at Prayer."

"We kneel how weak;
We rise how full of power."

You are invited to join with all peoples in a fellowship of prayer on the World Day of Prayer, Friday, February 13, 1948. For hour on hour the songs of prayer and praise will rise on continent and island. Together in one thousand and sixty-eight languages and dialects we proclaim the Reign of God.

God will be with us who pray under the shade of His trees; He will be with us in thatched-roofed chapels; in kraals; He will be with us in cathedrals where upreaching Gothic arches lift us to Him and He will come in all His beauty to be with us in barren rooms; He will precede us into hospitals and factories and into radio stations. And when the strain of prayer and praise die away on the St. Lawrence Island in the cold Arctic and in the Tonga Islands where the Christian queen, Salote, leads the kneeling hosts, universal prayer will have encircled the world.

The World Day of Prayer Committee, which is interdenominational, international and interracial, offers these helps to you as a loving service and with a united prayer for a world that shall be fed and healed and brought into the knowledge of the fullness of Christ:

Call to Prayer at 10c per 100.

Program for Adults and Young People at 5c each.

Children's Program at 5c each.

Guide for Leaders at 15c each.

Poster (17 x 22) at 10c each.

Leader's Packet at 35c each.

Reprint of World Day of Prayer Picture Section from "Church Woman" at $1.50 for 100 (pictures showing where the money goes for World Day of Prayer offerings).

Orders will not be filled after January 31—make out order carefully, as no refunds will be given on material sent as ordered. Address: United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Don't forget that a day of retreat spent as early in January as possible is time and effort well spent. With this year's motto, "Each One Reach One," we may start a series of daily prayers that will last throughout the year, and not for just the one day. May we really believe that women can do something about the state of the world and may the men and children have a chance to join in with us in hoping and praying for a world of peace and good will to all mankind. All ministers should attend the World Day of Prayer, and should be given a special invitation if necessary, even though women do take the lead.

Try to have the schools of the community use the Children's Service, woven around the Lord's Prayer. Try to have industries observe the day by some kind of service or pause for prayer. Put the posters up all over town, and circulate the little Call to Prayer leaflets wherever people cannot get to the service—hospitals, institutions, sanitariums, and so forth.

Let us pray that our offerings and our prayers on the World Day of Prayer may help bring Christian faith, knowledge and courage to the chaotic and confused world.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. House, Editor

Next Monday is the anniversary of the birth of Robert E. Lee, the great Southerner. No one could live in Richmond and not be aware of this man and his works. The Virginia Historical Society has its offices in the house in which he lived while in Richmond. The pew in which he worshipped is marked at St. Paul's Church, and there is as great monument to him on the city's famous street, Monument Avenue.

Across the street from our own church is a park which was once the camp of Confederate veterans called "The Lee Encampment." Our nursery boys and girls often go there to chase the squirrels and pigeons and to see the pond of fish.

We, in the South, are proud of the great general, not so much because of his strength as a military leader, but because he was a gentle, kind, godly man. Sometimes our Northern friends tease us about liking him so much. Well, we can overdo it, but I like to think of him as a quiet person, loving his family, and he did have a large one.

Those of you who live in North Carolina might like to visit a Lee shrine some day. The marker is on the highway between Warrenton and Louisburg, but the monument is off the road a little to the right as one travels south. In the private family burial grounds lies the daughter of General Lee. Her name was Annie Carter Lee and she came to visit the Duke Jones family, who had mineral springs during the Civil War and to take the waters there hoping to improve her health, but she did not get well and because of the war when died, she was buried there. Later her father came to see the resting place and you, too, can see it, in the grass- and weed-filled plot.

THE MEETING AT ELON.

by pointing out the big task that confronts us. Dr. Collins led us closer to God by his fervent devotional periods. Unity, harmony, fellowship, love and an atmosphere of prayerful responsibility, sent us back home with new zeal, faith, fervor and a desire to prove our love to the one who said: "I am come that they might have life." A large percentage of our ministers were present, most of them taking part in the discussions. Surely every minister feels revived and quickened in faith. Ten per cent increase in membership by Easter Sunday is not too great a task. The goal is a reasonable one. By God's grace and guidance we can do it. Let every deacon, Sunday school superintendent, Sunday school teacher, and Christian get on the job. God still reigns supreme and let him have his will and way. Those who were absent are losers.

MANY MOVEMENTS IN ONE DIRECTION.

tian program or mere social surveys of the Church's probable place in the scheme of things here in this world; they are unequivocal confessions of and commitments to the Christian Evangel as God's way of salvation for all men, based on the primary purpose of the Christian revelation to effect a complete, realizable and liveable reconciliation; they are a plea to a complacent Christian fellowship to match the adequacy of the Gospel by an adequate evangelistic zeal and intelligent effort that will bear a worthy witness in this late hour of the world's lostness. (While it isn't my purpose right now to promote the wares of Pilgrim Press, yet I urge you who have read these, and know their inspiration, to spread them far and wide; and those of you who do not know them to lose no time getting them, especially LaMott's Committed Unto Us, and study them as you would the Holy Scripture.)

What I am underscoring is this: everywhere, where Christians gather, there is this proposal for a vital, authentic evangelism. There is no "if" or "and" about it; it is one of the moves in the direction of fulfilling the divine purpose to meet the human need. And, as strange as it may appear, some of the more thoughtful groups that do not go by the name "Christian" are saying that this, that the Church alone can do, is the real urgency of our time.

To rightly think of Evangelism, then, we need to employ universal concepts; it is, actually, "world evangelism" that is moving across the consciousness of the Christian community. I was impressed that the theme of all the meetings of the Ohio Associations this fall was just that—"World Evangelism." One phase of our rethinking will be the revision of our concept of evangelism from all the narrow expressions of either scheme or section to truly universal dimensions. The Gospel has never used any other than universal terms; "unto the uttermost" is, in every sense, a Gospel dimension.

But while we are witnessing today a global movement, it is very essential that we also consider it nearer at hand; that it must come to expression in every one of our local churches. You will recall that one of the statements made at the General Council Meeting at Grinnell was this: "However else a program of evangelism may be expressed, it is effected, actually, in the life and ministry of the local church . . . if it does not find its voice and spirit in this church and that church, where access to divine influence is most commonly felt and personal religious experience most commonly expressed, it remains inarticulate and unrelated. Our evangelism most certainly must go beyond our pronouncements and move out of our pages to where it becomes vital and operative in and through an articulate fellowship, which for us, is the local church." Our eleven area Conferences, attended by 988 of our ministers (approximately one-fourth) revealed not only the deep concern but a variety of approaches, with a number of plans and programs already in operation. Thus within the major move of evangelism there are many minor moves as to techniques and tools to be employed. Unfortunately, there is the disposition on the part of some to reduce evangelism to a debate on methods, arbitrarily rejecting some and championing others. One thing our Area Conferences accomplished, I think, was to show that evangelism is no bag of tricks; that it cannot be simplified into a "push-button" system. Indeed, I doubt if a blue-print as to techniques and tools would be in keeping with our Congregational-Christian way of doing things. This is not to say, however, that an over-all program is not to be desired. Already such a program is being shaped, the outcome of which is now in the hands of a special Committee of the Commission to report not later than the next General Council Meeting. Such a program of necessity must be comprehensive enough to take into account the wide range of all our churches, and, to achieve this, three new Seminars, in three very differing sections of the nation, have been set to work. Even so, there is much than can be done, and may be done—indeed, in many instances is being done—now.

Thus, there are four evangelistic moves being urged today by our Commission; and, I may add, these four were thoroughly accredited in all our Area Conferences. And while they may be looked upon as somewhat different approaches or emphases, they are all moves in the one direction of the main Christian purpose, the making of more and better Christians. I am bound to admit that none of these moves is necessarily new or novel, with the probable exception of what is called "fellowship cultivation;" and none of them preposes to be spectacular or dramatic, except that any truly religious awakening would jolt a church and community of deadness into life, which is still the divinest drama in our human scene!

The first move is in the direction of renewing the Church itself. We have as you know, 5,846 churches, with 1,150,000 members. It is evident that some quickening of Christian devotion and purpose is needed when it takes 57 of us to win one in a whole year to Christ and His Church! And of our churches, 1,740 did not report in 1946 a single person won. Another humiliating weakness is that only 32 per cent of the membership attends worship, and an even smaller per cent shares in benevolent giving. We still have in helter-skelter fashion 127,000 members on "absentee" lists, which usually means religious apathy. An evangelistic effort directed specifically toward church loyalty—not just a spurt, but a plan of constant engagement—would, indeed, be a revival of notable achievement. To find and re-establish one-half of our absentees would mean three times as many as our net gain for last year! The Commission has provided special information mailing cards—an information system between pastors—which would stop some of this leakage if they were faithfully used; but it will take more than exchange of information; it will require more diligent pastoral oversight, which, according to Willie LaMott, most of us are too preoccupied to give. In ways, too numerous to include, the Church awaits its own renewal. As the Scottish report has put it: "The Church is a field for evangelism, as well as a force." And without doubt its force will not be felt outside itself until it is felt within. The most appropriate prayer I know—and it should arise from every Christian heart—comes out of China: "Lord, revive Thy Church, beginning with me." This has already been emphasized by Dr. Collins in his opening message to the Conference.

The second evangelistic move is what we Congregational Christians are calling "Conservation Evangelism." For the most part evangelism has been thought of as reclamation. It is that, to be sure; but if reclamation has loomed large it is because we have done a poor job in conservation. Today, however, we are correcting ourselves and putting the emphasis where it belongs. "A fence around a precipice is better than a hospital at the bottom" is an old, old saying; but it expresses a vital truth. Christian education is of course factual, but it is more than that; it is the confusion of the Spirit of Christ in the lives of Youth, the presentation of the Christian way leading to choice and commitment. Dr. Harry Stock and others of the Department of Christian Education have insisted in our Area Conferences that our educational program must be soundly and pointedly evangelistic or it is not fulfilling its function. My own feeling, based upon thirty years in the pastorate, is that a pastor cannot hand the Church School over to others as if it were his secondary obligation and expect a fruitful ministry: it is his primary obligation, and our Commission is saying so wherever ministers' conferences are being held. One of the saddest testimonies I have heard is from the Pilgrim Fellowship to the effect that young people come home from Summer Conferences with high inspiration in their hearts only to find that there is nothing in the home church to sustain their new-found Christian idealism. My own observation is, that the most realistic and thus effective evangelism we are doing is in our young people's Summer Conferences where education is geared to life, expressed in intelligent faith and purpose, confirmed through meaningful worship. This is certainly one move in the right direction, and must have the best support of all our ministers and churches.

Our Church Schools, then, in all of their integrating work in Church, home and community, are the agencies of this conservation. Never have we had better tools with which to work, especially the new Pilgrim Series, the guidance of the Commission on Family Life under the leadership of Dr. Paul Reynolds, and the Commission on Evangelism's helps to Pastors in their Church membership training classes. Some one has said recently: "Youth is always looking for a leader. That leader must be Christ, or our world must be given up for lost." In the face of the startling fact, which we cannot shrug off, that there are 17,000,000 of youth between the ages of eight and twenty-four, right here in our own country, outside the influence of any Church our evangelistic task of conservation becomes our most pressing responsibility.

The third evangelistic move is what we are calling "Fellowship Cultivation." It is predicated upon three things: a careful survey, out of which the church will form its "prospect list;" a self-study by the church of its evangelistic potential, so that every department—indeed, every member, will have its assigned responsibility; and the actual work of friendly visitation. It is too much to go into intricate detail about this move, except to say that all denominations are employing it diligently

WHEN WE WORK WITH GOD.

LESSON IV—JANUARY 25, 1948.

LESSON: II Corinthians 5:20-6:10;
Hebrews 11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 12:
9-21.

Ambassadors.

"We are ambassadors." An ambassador is "a government agent" of the highest rank representing his country's interests at a foreign court. How would you feel if you were notified by the President of the United States that you had been appointed as ambassador to England or France or China or any other nation? It is quite an honor to be an ambassador. He speaks for his country and acts for his country and looks out for the interests of his country. When Paul writes, "we are ambassadors" we ought to be interested.

Ambassadors for Christ.

"Now then we are ambassadors for Christ" or as another version has it, "ambassadors on behalf of Christ." Now that is something to be excited about. There is little likelihood that anybody reading these Notes will ever be an ambassador of the United States to any other nation. That is reserved for the most part for men of great ability and usually of great means. But all of us, even the humblest of us can be ambassadors, and ambassadors for Christ. Yes, that is what Paul is writing. Followers of Christ are ambassadors of Christ or in behalf of Christ. They are his agents or representatives, selected by him to look out for his interests and to speak for him. The plain fact is that as Christians we do not realize our high honors and privileges and responsibilities. Think what a difference it would make if we really did believe that every one of us was an ambassador for Christ, his representatives before the world.

Ambassadors of Reconciliation for Christ.

"God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation." These words are not in the text of today's lesson, but they are the basis of today's lesson. For they stand immediately before the words, "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ" and they furnish the credentials for our work as ambassadors. Look carefully at these words "as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled unto God." Our business as ambassadors is to help people to become reconciled unto God. We are ambassadors of peace and good will. We are to try to get people to become reconciled to God. Read it straight—we do not have to reconcile God to man, but we do have to reconcile man to God.

A One-Man Board of Conciliation and Reconciliation.

That is what we mean, a one-man Board of Reconciliation. By our own friendly and impartial spirit, and by our revelation of the character of Christ we are to bring men, all men to good terms with God. And one suspects that our field of operations is even larger and wider. We are to be ministers of reconciliation between man and man, between groups of men, and even between nations. We are to devote ourselves to negotiating "peace treaties" between classes and masses of men. But fundamental to it all is the primary work of reconciling men with God.

Workers with or for God.

"We then as workers together with him. . . ." Or if you prefer another translation 'as God's fellow-workers.' The basic idea is the same. We work with God and God works through and with us. It is breath-taking and also heart-humbling. It says in a way that there are some things which God cannot do except with or through a man. This does not mean, of course, that God is not beyond and above man, that God is no stronger than human strength or wisdom. But it does mean that God's chosen method of getting things done on earth is through men in whom and through whom his spirit finds expression. It seems to me that Dr. Fosdick somewhere wrote that there are some things God cannot do unless men think and pray and work. George Eliot puts it thus in striking form:

When any master holds twixt hand and chin,
A violin of mine, he will be glad
That Stradivari lived, made violins
And made them of the best . . .
For while God gives them skill,
I give them instruments to play upon,
God using me to help him . . .
If my hand slack'd
I should rob God, since he is fullest good
Leaving a blank behind, instead of violins.
He could not make Antonio Stradivari violins Without Antonio.

Here is the plain and disturbing truth: injustices will not be righted, slums will not be cleared, the hungry will not be fed, the sick will not be healed, unloveliness and ugliness will not be removed, ignorance and superstition will not be banished, truth will not be discovered, boys and girls will not be taught the Christian way of life, the gospel will not be preached and men and women, boys and girls will not be saved, if God cannot speak and work through men and women who surrender their lives to him as his co-workers.

The Worker.

In verses four to ten of today's lesson, Paul gives a long list of the qualities and the attitudes of himself and his fellow-workers. It is an imposing and inspiring list. It is too much to hope that all of us can realize the ideal. But the quality of life of the worker does affect the quality of the work. And although we pursue a flying goal, it is important that we keep our faces to the light, and it is good sport to follow on. Thank God we do not have to be perfect to serve God—we have this treasure in earthen vessels—but we ought to live at our best. We are his ambassadors, his personal representatives.

THE EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE.

our churches throughout our constituency. Shall we not have a "bigger and better" Southern Convention at the close of 1948? It is a challenge that we must not fail to meet.

W. WALTER HALL.

It is not often one has the opportunity of meeting with a group whose primary emphasis is the evangelistic program of the Kingdoms work. Such an occasion was the meeting of the Southern Convention ministers at Elon College, January 5 and 6. It was not alone an occasion of rebuilding the fires of evangelism in our own hearts, but one of coming to grips with the real problems facing the church in these days.

We were in one accord on the fact that a revitalized program of evangelism was the only solution to the spiritual and numerical growth of our Southern Convention Churches. To this end we pledged our cooperation, especially during Lent, to emphasize through the Sunday school, personal work, and special services a commitment of lives to Christ. This will mean diligent prayer and much work in the two months that lie ahead. But by the help of God we can be equal to the task.

J. EVERETTE NEESE.

CHRISTMAS IN SHAOWU.

uting some fruit, the money was given out according to need and the number in each family. Just the week before a package had arrived from the women of the Holland Church (Mrs. A. J. Holland) containing some diapers and feed bags which were given to the new babies. The people were overjoyed, and they could buy a few simple things to start housekeeping again.

After seven days, the families began to move out and they are practically all gone now. They moved in with their relatives. Imagine having thirteen people move in with you when your house is full already—but the family system is such that this behaviour is the accepted thing. This experience has been a rewarding one for all those who helped. Timothy Chang said, "This has been one of the happiest Christmases we have ever had because we have helped so many people."

Now to go back to our planned Christmas activities. On Christmas eve, the young people and adult group (about 70-80 young folks) met together in their fellowship room for a brief worship service. After that we had some slides depicting scenes of the first Christmas and some of Palestine, the country where Jesus was born. These were followed by the story (also accompanied by slides) of Dicken's Christmas Carol. Then followed games and refreshments (sweet potatoes and cocoa) until midnight. At 12:00 o'clock, the groups split and went caroling into most of the Christian homes. The people were up waiting for us and set off firecrackers as we approached. After that they served us candy and many good things to eat. In each home a little service of scripture, prayers and songs was held. Just as the first streaks of dawn were coming up over the mountains, the carolers returned home for breakfast before coming to the Christmas morning worship service.

At 8:00 o'clock, Christmas morning, we had a family worship in our home around the Christmas tree. Pines grow in abundance around Shaowu and we had a big tree. Unfortunately we brought only a few ornaments with us and no lights, but we had a few bright colored balls and Dorothy made some paper ornaments, so the tree looked mighty good to us. We invited the hospital staff and all the workers in for the service which was led by Dr. Riggs. Miss Frances Whitaker gave a short talk on "The Meaning of Christmas." We listened to a few familiar Christmas hymns on our phonograph. Afterward a young man came up and asked me, "Were those songs sung in English?" "Yes," I told him. "Well, that's strange," he said, "they used Chinese tunes." So familiar had "Silent Night, Holy Night," "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing" and "other carols become that this young man thought they were Chinese tunes. Experiences like this help us to realize that Christianity has really taken root in China.

At ten o'clock, the East Gate Church was filled to capacity with over 300 people. Some had walked from far out in the country, arriving several days before, to celebrate Christmas. The service was well planned with mimeographed programs for all. The young people's choir and a group of the Han Mei primary students sang familiar Christmas carols. The service began and ended with the deafening roar of firecrackers as do all important occasions in China. As I sat on the platform (since I was to give the benediction) and looked around at the people assembled in worship, I noticed their faces once so strange, now are beginning to be familiar and I had a feeling of belonging. My heart was strangely warmed. I remembered our previous Christmases in Waverly and I could picture our friends there and in the Southern Convention also assembling together for worship (twelve hours later). Once during the service I saw bayonets go by the window carried by soldiers preparing to go north to fight; and as Pastor Liao read the song of the angels, it came to me how far our earth is from the goal of peace. Then as we went home from church and saw the business people carrying on trade as usual, it struck home how far the majority of our Shaowu people are from honoring the Christ. Here we have one similarity with Christ's own birthday—on that day few people came to the stable to honor him, only a few wandering shepherds and several wise men. Here in Shaowu, those who came to worship him are few; but we pray that ere long, all shall kneel at his feet.

After the service and a hurried lunch, we went to the South Gate Church for another Christmas service. Again the church was full. Pastor Huang had asked me to preach. This I did with fear and trembling as my Chinese is still lacking a lot. But the folks paid extra good attention and afterwards politely said they understood every word. Following the service, native grown oranges were given out to all. It was a joyful occasion.

In the evening we arrived home in time for a committee meeting to divide up the money gifts to the fire victims. We Americans had originally planned a chicken dinner to be leisurely eaten. But just at supper time a call came for Miss Whitaker to deliver a baby, and the service for fire victims was to begin at 7:00; so we all gulped down our food and ran.

After the service, the hospital folks invited us over for another brief service and some refreshments. Finally, about 10:00, weary from almost twenty-four hours of continuous activity, we came home and were too tired to open our own gifts. So, the next morning, after a leisurely breakfast, we opened them to find some very beautiful and useful gifts from our Chinese friends including silver chopsticks, a monogrammed ring, lacquer vases, a very famous kind of tea, fruits and food of every kind. Then some of our friends back home had sent some treats unobtainable here which almost made us shout with joy. There was coffee, chocolate candy, chewing gum, puddings, malted milk powder and other things which we miss so much when we don't have them. So you see, our Christmas was a busy but a happy one; and we are thankful that we have had the privilege of celebrating Christ's birthday in Shaowu with like-minded people who care so much for him.

When you read this letter, we will be getting ready for the trip down the river to Foochow for the big event—our first baby. Dr. Riggs recommends that we go there where there is a surgeon and equipment in case of emergency. We will wait until after Chinese New Year (February 10) as bandit activity is greatest just before that time. China has a custom that all debts must be paid on New Year's, so bandits are especially busy before then trying to get cash. We will go in a picturesque Min river boat rowed by two or three boatmen for the first half of our journey (125 miles). Then we will take a charcoal burning launch for the rest of the way, altogether taking from five to seven days depending on the amount of water in the river at that time.

We wish to thank all those who have sent things for our work and for ourselves. We appreciate the generous financial support of our work by all the churches and people of the Convention. A Happy New Year to you all.

Cordially,

DICK & DOROTHY JACKSON.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supl.

Dear Friends:

This letter and financial report brings us to the end of the year, 1947. After the final balance was taken we found we had received from all sources the sum of $47,805.27, which was divided as follows: From churches and Sunday school offerings we received the amount of $23,902.87. From outside the churches and Sunday schools we received the sum of $23,920.40, just forty-seven cents (47c) difference.

We want to thank each and every one from the depths of our hearts for the fine cooperation you gave us during the entire year. This certainly could not have been done without your interest and splendid cooperation during the entire year. We are humbly grateful to you.

The old year has departed. We are now facing the New Year. We do not know what it has in store for us. But if you will be as loyal to us during the year, 1948, as you have been during 1947, it will strengthen our faith and cause us to do our best.

We wish for each of you a very happy and prosperous New Year!

MANY MOVEMENTS IN ONE DIRECTION.

and effectively. It is proving to be the Church's most feasible and thorough means of outreach to the unchurched millions. And the reasons for this are not far to find. There are at least four:

1. In view of the fact that the unchurched are not on hand to hear our messages. Visitation goes where they are.

2. It is usually a family contact, taking into account cradle roll prospects as well as the hardened sinners.

3. Visitation mobilizes the whole church for its primary purpose of witnessing.

4. It puts religion on a neighborly-friendly basis without the onus of professionalism. The genius of this is startling, as the most acute form of the world's breakdown is at the point of its loss of neighborliness.

And if I were to add a fifth I would stress the strategy it affords for systematic follow-up, which some of the older forms of revivalism never had.

I am happy to say that many of our State Conferences are providing workshops where ministers and their laymen may gather for actual participation in programs of Visitation Evangelism.

The challenge of this move to an evangelism of "fellowship cultivation" becomes another pressing responsibility when we realize this additional startling fact: nearly one-half the people of our land are in no church whatsoever!

The fourth move has to do with the production and distribution of Christian Literature. We are not altogether lacking in this but we have not yet done a telling job. Mr. Freeman, the new assistant director of the Commission, may not know it, but there awaits him a stupendous task of editing and writing! The use of the printed page, simple, short and direct, is one of the most potent influences in the life and work of the minister. Particularly is this true where devotional guides for personal and family use are indicated. This move does have as its main objective the urgency of family religious observance, which is the one place, above all others, where a genuine evangelistic advance must register. Is it too much to expect that Daily Devotions, our Congregational Christian booklet, should find its place in every one of our homes? As simple as it may sound this effort on the part of our ministers and churches would greatly strengthen one of these moves in the right direction.

In connection with this Christian literature, would logically come audio-visual aids. There are powerful possibilities here not yet developed, but which our Commission wants to develop if the way is found feasible.

Yes, there are many moves—at least these four I have just mentioned. But over and above and far more important than all techniques and tools, stand our pastors, the spokesmen of The Word for This World, the leaders of our people in matters of the spirit. I am the last person in the world to discount worthy means to worthy ends; but I have lived long enough to learn that incarnation is the true genius of God's plan—a person that carries within him the living spirit. One of the chief characteristics of our time is the multiplication of plans, some of our finest religious strength being spent in this way. As Willie LaMott has said: "The difficulty lies in the fact that too many may expect method to take the place of commitment, and techniques to substitute for prayer." If the warmth and zeal and passion of evangelism may radiate through such of us are here assembled, we may depend upon the many moves really moving—headed in the direction of a Christian world.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FOUNDATION.

If the members of our churches knew the real conditions at our college and the urgency of our needs, I am sure that they would not be content until their local churches had raised in full the voluntary apportionment for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation. The several conferences constituting our Convention recommended to the Convention that we raise through the churches $100,000 for this purpose. The Convention approved and authorized the campaign.

A number of our churches have accepted their apportionments and have paid the same in full. A number of them have accepted their quotas and have paid part. But another segment of our churches seem to have taken no action at all, or have refused to co-operate.

We are encouraged, however, by an occasional church accepting its quota and beginning the payment of the same. Liberty Church, Nathalie, Va., considered the question of its responsibility at its regular worship service last Sunday and voted to assume its obligation and raise its quota of $440. We have good reports this week. Our Suffolk Church assumes its obligation and sends a generous check. Our Holy Neck Church sends a generous check completing its quota. Other churches and other individuals have been making generous contributions for which we are grateful.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Our church congregations and Sunday school sessions afford excellent opportunities for our pastors to inform their people about our college. The first quarter of this year we had a total enrollment of 774. The enrollment for the second quarter is slightly less. We lost a few more students by withdrawals and failures than we had new students enrolled. The total enrollment, however, for the two quarters will exceed 800. We have a splendid faculty, an inclusive curriculum, and splendid extra-curricular departments. The school spirit is fine and cooperation on the part of the faculty and students is excellent. The new power plant is progressing quite well. The building itself is completed. The boilers have been set and are being bricked up. We should be able to put the new plant into use in not too many weeks. The old plant is still serving well, and we are hopeful that it will continue to serve until the new plant is ready for us. Our new catalogue is with the printer, and we are hoping to have the same ready for distribution within a few weeks. You should say to your young people that they should enroll at our college; but if they are to be assured of a room, applications must be made immediately. The finances of the College are in excellent condition, but we do need money from our Sunday schools and churches that we may keep our books balanced and be enabled to provide the best service possible for those who enroll as students in our college. If our pastors will put the facts concerning the College consistently before their people, there would be no question about their ready and generous support. We are grateful for every contribution made.

REPORTS ON EVANGELISM.

We believe that too many church people are trying to run the church as an ordinary business enterprise, and that spiritually they are not qualified to be the type of Evangelists to win souls for the Kingdom of God. The moral and religious fiber is lacking. These same workers many of them cannot truly pray, and things can be wrought by prayer. These same workers, many of them do not have a knowledge of the Bible; therefore, cannot make a commitment as to what they actually believe and stand for. One must be convinced what he believes himself before he can lead someone else to believe and stand with him. In other words, we mean to say that there is too much "Churchanity" and not enough Christianity. We stand convinced that church people must pray, must read their Bibles regularly, must know what they believe and live what they believe. We believe that if this is done one will not stop here but will go out and work earnestly in the Evangelistic Campaign for 50,000 by 1950. We believe that this Evangelistic Campaign must be carried into all the avenues of life. The layman of the church as well as the minister of the church has a very definite part in the work of evangelism.

Respectfully submitted,

ELLA PICKERING,
DOROTHY FOLTZ,

"I Will Build My Church"

By W. ERNEST COLLINS
Superintendent, Minnesota State Conference

Scripture—Matthew, Chapter 16

Christ said it, NOW you are doing it. Of that I am certain. Before I left North Carolina I saw a list of prospective members in the hand of a minister. He had anticipated our plan. And by the time this gets into print, his deacons or Enlistment Committee will have started their visitation.

Some, perhaps all, of the ministers who attended the Conference held at Elon College January 5-6, told their people about it on Sunday. That Spirit-filled Upper Room experience at Elon did something to us. We yielded to the influence of its renewing power. Didn't some of your people see, hear and feel that their minister had had a heart warming, a blessedness, a time of rededication

From the time your brotherly superintendent put before us those alarming statistics until the closing benediction, we could sense the deepening concern which carried us to the hour of our commitment to campaign for Christ. That was our covenant. We dare not break faith. We must do our uttermost to live up to our promise. I am quite sure you are doing it.

The Southern Convention has seventy ministers. It was reported that sixty were present. We hope that the ten who couldn't come will do their part. You remember the story of the seventy sent out by Jesus to Evangelize. They came back with radiant faces. Wouldn't you have enjoyed listening to their experience. A striking figure is used in the account, "We beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." No question about the power of that witness. Years ago the Upper Room changed men from timid, fearful, weak disciples to dauntless, daring witnesses of the power of God unto salvation. And the seventy of the Southern Convention will be victorious. Faith will be your victory.

Do not pay too much attention to what the other ministers are doing. No two churches are alike. Opportunities will vary. Be faithful to your commission.

When Jesus gave Peter his task, it seemed altogether too big for him. Many thoughts flashed through his mind. He had betrayed and had had a sense of fault. But now he had been restored, and the Master knew that he must get to work. Peter hesitated, looked around at John and said, "What is he going to do?" Jesus answered, "What is that to thee, follow thou me," and he did. You will, too.

It was a great privilege to be associated with my long time friend, Dr. Timmons, who is superbly fitted to lead our denomination in Evangelism. You have a fine superintendent. Dr. Scott has the confidence of our national and state leaders from coast to coast. The comradeship of your ministry, its deep concern, its friendliness, gave me a sense of admiration for your ministry. Topping off this visit was the gracious hospitality of President and Mrs. Leon Smith. God has a mission for Elon College in our world.

God grant to you the patience, wisdom, love and enabling power to make this Lenten season the greatest harvest in the history of the Southern Convention.

First Church of Christ

GLASTONBURY, CONNECTICUT

A Chancel that is Conducive to Worshipfulness

The history of this church dates back to 1692. During the first hundred years the church had only three pastors: Timothy Stevens, Ashbel Woodbridge and John Ellis. The ordination sermon for William Brown was preached by Jonathan Edwards. William Lockwood, who served the church from 1797 to 1804, had been a chaplain to General George Washington.

Its 200th Anniversary was celebrated October 29, 1893, at which time Rev. John Barstow delivered an address on the history of the church. The 250th Anniversary was observed in October, 1943, with a sermon by Rev. Robbins Wolcott Barstow, son of the Rev. John Barstow.

The church building was completely destroyed by a hurricane in 1938, and a new one was dedicated in 1940, the fifth Meeting House in 250 years. One feature of the present building is the fine chancel pictured above. Rev. Allen S. Lehman has served the church since 1945.

"THE UNFINISHED DANCE."

By REV. C. SHANNON MORGAN.

In the movie, "The Unfinished Dance," Meg Merlin, played by Margaret O'Brien, is a beloved admirer of the ballerina; and Meg plays truant from the practice of the ballet in order to secretly watch the ballerina practice. But then one day another ballerina, more beautiful and more graceful in dancing, appears to oust Meg's heroine from the ballet.

Burning with jealousy, Meg intends one night to turn off the lights in the midst of the ballet, so that the audience would walk out on and laugh at the new ballerina. Mistakenly, however, Meg instead of pulling the light switch, pulled the switch to the trapdoor; and the ballerina falls in, injuring herself, never to dance again.

Thereafter, throughout the movie Meg's conscience hurts her every time she hears a siren because she recalled the siren of the ambulance that came to get the injured ballerina; and she flees in terror, tears flowing, screaming from the masked devil, thinking that the "real" devil was after her.

Finally, by the intercession of an "almost" uncle ("almost" in the sense that Meg's aunt had almost said that she would marry him), Meg changed her allegiance to the ballerina she hated and by mistake had cruelly injured.

Similarly, though not on the screen, but in the "movie of life," Onesimus, a slave, had been devoted to Philemon his master. But, then, he had wronged Philemon by stealing money and valuables from him. He had run away to Rome, and there his conscience was hurting him, because rewards were offered for such runaways. Perhaps Philemon had circulated widely the following notice:

"A slave belonging to Philemon, resident of Laodicea, has run away. His name is Onesimus; he is also called Useful. He is by birth a Syrian of Bambyce, twenty years old, of middle height, smooth face, strong calves, cleft chin, mole to the left of his nose, scar over the left corner of his mouth, two foreign letters tattooed on his right wrist. He has three minas in gold coin, ten pearls, and an iron collar with an oil-flask and shaving tools on it, and is wearing a short cloak and apron.

"Whoever brings him back will receive two talents of copper; if he reports him at a temple, one talent; if with a responsible and lawabiding person, three talents. Anyone so desiring give information to the governors representatives."

And because his conscience was hurting him, and also afraid that he might be reported to Philemon, Onesimus looked up Paul in prison at Rome. Perhaps Onesimus had known Paul when he had stayed three years at Ephesus. However that may be, Paul plays the role as the mediator of reconciliation, just as Meg's "almost" uncle played that role.

Paul saw Onesimus as he was: a thief, a runaway slave, useless, good-for-nothing; and perhaps under condemnation of death, because under the cruel ancient system a master could do anything he liked with a runaway slave. Slaves were regularly examined under torture and might be compelled by their masters to fight with wild animals in the arena. Slaves who provoked their masters were unmercifully beaten. The whole picture is so terrible that modern attention instinctively turns from it.

Onesimus must be reinstated and play his role, because he was under condemnation, and if he did not play his role, perhaps he would die, just as the ballerina who could not dance would die.

And then Paul did what we commonly call "evangelism": he won Onesimus' life and interests to Christ and His way of life. It should be noted that Paul did this, not in a church at a revival meeting, not in a home under favorable conditions, not with a brass band on a street corner, but in a Roman prison. It should be noted that this is individual evangelism and not mass evangelism.

Furthermore, after Onesimus had been won to Christ, he would have to return to Philemon and right the past. Therefore, Paul sends Onesimus home, accompanied by Tychicus (Col. 4:7-9). Each carried a letter from Paul: Tychicus, the letter to the Colossians; Onesimus, the letter to Philemon.

It was a very precarious thing to put Onesimus back again under the authority of his injured owner; Philemon could do almost anything he pleased with him and still be within the Roman law and in line with the attitude of his contemporaries. Paul is deliberately putting Onesimus in the utmost peril. Even if Philemon himself were humane and kind, he might think that he owed a duty to other slaveholders to safeguard the institution by making an example of Onesimus. He might think that he had a duty to "class." The enormous number of slaves in the Roman world made the fear of a slave uprising real.

Of course, sending a slave back to his owner seems strange to the modern mind. We remember the Underground Railroad of the northern states of the Union, in the fifties and sixties, with its "stations" in the cellars of courageous abolitionists who abhorred slavery and sought in every way to defeat it. But slavery was far more deeply entrenched in Paul's world than in the United States of eighty years ago. Onesimus would never be safe anywhere until his status with his master was rectified.

Paul wondered what would happen to Onesimus when he presented himself at Philemon's door. So he puts in his hand a letter courteous-

CHRISTIAN SUN SUNDAY is the first Sunday in February. Pastors and church leaders will speak of the merits of our Church Paper, its part in building and sustaining the Church, its contribution to Christian fellowship, Christian thinking, the Christian home and Christian missions. Our next issue will be a Promotional Number.

The day to launch the Church's record-breaking Sun Campaign is at hand. Proclaim the day in every church. Conduct an "Every Member Canvass." Make this a banner year for our beloved church paper. The Christian Sun is an essential means to a worthy end.

OBSERVE YOUTH WEEK.

Youth Week, coming early in the year, gives the church an opportunity to accentuate its youth program and formulate an adequate plan for the year. The majority of our churches need to rethink their youth programs and some need to "bring forth works meet for repentance." It is so easy to give lip service to youth, then fail utterly to provide the necessary leadership and equipment for a twentieth century youth program. We must endeavor to discover and utilize the youth potential in all of our churches. Surprising results may ensue. The tremendous energy of this age bracket should be geared to our Evangelistic Crusade. Equally appreciable results may be realized in the realms of recreation, stewardship and missionary action.

God pity us for allowing many of our young people to drift away so easily from the church. Frankly, was there much to attract and hold them? The school, the automobile, the radio and the movie have placed the church in a completely new setting. All programs must be evaluated with these facts in mind.

Observe Youth Week in your church, not with the idea of exploiting this group for a given purpose, but with the firm resolve to discover the needs of youth and to assist them in their realization.

CONTINENTAL MISSIONS.

Aid from the churches in North America is essential to the continued existence of British and French missions in Africa and Asia, according to Dr. Leland S. Albright, assistant secretary of the International Missionary Council.

Emphasizing the "impoverishment and dislocation" of British and Continental missions, Dr. Albright pointed out that only the churches in North America have the "resources and good will" to meet the need.

Restrictions on the transmission of funds outside the sterling areas are jeopardizing the future of British missions, he explained. Since they are unable to send funds abroad to develop new projects and—in many cases—to resume programs dropped during the war, the activities of British churches in mission areas will probably be seriously curtailed. He added, that the Paris Evangelical Mission is faced with a similar situation because of the reduced value of the franc at the present time.

In addition to financial contributions, some American churches have established trusteeships, whereby mission centers and their staffs will be maintained until the Continental church is in a position to take over again. For instance, the Augustana Lutheran Church and the American Lutheran Church are carrying on the programs of the German missions in Tanganyika and New Guinea respectively.

Dr. Albright urged the churches of North America to increase their monetary contributions to needy mission centers of Continental churches and, wherever possible, to establish temporary trusteeships.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATORS TO MEET AT GRAND RAPIDS.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education will be held at Grand Rapids, Michigan, February 8-14, 1948, according to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary. This is the second consecutive year that the meeting has been held at Grand Rapids. More than twelve hundred religious educators from all parts of the United States and Canada are expected to attend. Sessions of the seventeen professional advisory sections, the program committees, the Commission on Educational Program the board of trustees, the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, and luncheons and dinners will be held.

Dr. Arlo Brown, president of Drew University, Madison, N. J., and retiring chairman of the Council, will be honored at a dinner Friday night. Other features of the week included in early planning were two Sunday night mass meetings in cooperation with the Grand Rapids-Kent Council, a joint session of the sections on educational evangelism, a Fellowship luncheon with an outstanding speaker, section dinners, and an Ash Wednesday service at the close of the section meetings. The theme for the week's meetings will be "For the Atomic Future—Teach Christ."

During the meeting, a prominent Baltimore churchman will be honored for his outstanding contribution to Christian education. He is Robert Garrett, 74-year-old investment banker and civic leader. He will receive the Russell Colgate Distinguished Service Citation, which is given in honor of the late Russell Colgate, Council president for 16 years.

Mr. Garrett was chosen by an electoral college of more than a thousand lay churchmen throughout the United States and Canada. He was one of three nominees selected from individuals named by some of the 40 Protestant denominations and the 31 state councils of churches and religious education which are members of the International Council.

For more than thirty years Mr. Garrett was a member of the Board of Trustees of his local church and is still a member of its session. He was also for a time a member of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A. Since 1918, Mr. Garrett has been active also in inter-church work, having helped to found the Baltimore Federation of Churches and the Council of Churches and Christian Education of Maryland-Delaware, Inc. He is a member of the National Committee of the Laymen's Crusade for Christian Education and was formerly a trustee of the Religious Education Foundation. He is president of the Department of Recreation and Parks of his city, and was head of the preceding organizations of the present department since 1907. He is also chairman of the board of the National Recreation Association. He has also been active locally and nationally in the Y.M.C.A. and Boy Scouts. For many years he was a trustee of Princeton University and of a private school located in Baltimore.

Shall We Give the Ants a Chance?

By HENRY SMITH LEIPER, Associate General Secretary, World Council of Churches

A friend of mine once asked the well known playwright, Eugene O'Neill, for a brief summary of his philosophy of life. This, as reported in Life magazine about a year ago, was his reply: "If the human race is so damned stupid, that in 2,000 years it hasn't had brains enough to appreciate that the secret of happiness is contained in one simple sentence (which you'd think any school kid could understand and apply) then it's time we dumped it down the nearest drain and let the ants have a chance. That simple sentence is: 'For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?'"

In this time of debate throughout America as to whether we shall have a "Marshall Plan" or a "martial plan" in Europe, one is tempted to rephrase the Master's question thus: "What shall it profit the American nation if it gain material, scientific and economic supremacy and lose its own soul?"

If the wrong answer is given to that question, it will not be wholly because of the "wolfishness of the wolves but rather because of the sheepishness of the sheep"—the young pastor, Rev. William M. Thompson, Jr., of a church in Edgartown, Mass., put it in a recent thoughtful sermon.

The soul of a nation is a composite thing, obviously, and in its general complexion it reflects the characteristics which predominate in the men and women who compose it.

Looked at from a broader perspective, the problem exists on the world scale; and it has been well stated by the French aviator poet, Exupery, whose kit contained a letter to an American friend found after his death in an air battle during the late war. Here are his dramatic words: "Look, my American friends, something new is in formation in our planet. The material progress of modern times has indeed linked mankind by a sort of nervous system. The contacts are innumerable, the communications are instantaneous. We are materially bound together like cells in the same body. But this body does not have a soul. This organism has not grown conscious of itself."

The work of the Christian Church is related to the need not only for whole-souled individuals ("healthy" is a word which comes from "wholth" or "wholeness") but for health or wholeness of soul in nations and in the world of which all the nations are a part. But not even nations now seem to be conscious of the existence of a "soul" within their highly integrated organism—let alone the world. Churches that are aware of the peculiar task of Christianity in our time are seeking to grow a soul for the modern world organism—national and international.

What, in that context, does the word "soul" mean? Just as we have no way to study the soul of a person except by observing how that person acts and reacts in contact with other persons, so we are compelled to observe how human groups, large or small, act and react if we wish to understand how much or how little soul-force they possess. We must seek, therefore, to assess spiritual attitudes, loyalties, relationships, standards of right and wrong, laws of conduct, habits of mind—if we are to come to any understanding of the state of national or international health today, and with such things, either for the persons or for the community, Christianity is rightly—indeed inevitably—concerned, else it is a mockery for Christians to pray: "They will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

From the point of view of one who long pondered the problem of a world

now a physical neighborhood but not yet a spiritual community, the task of the Church is to grow a soul for the one world which will either learn to realize its oneness in the purpose of God or will inevitably destroy itself with its new-found atomic powers.

Wholeness of soul is found where all the aspects of personality are centered round the conscious personality—the "I"—and religious experience shows that the healthiest "I" is that one whose individuality is purposefully orientated toward the will of God—by commitment freely made and consistently maintained.

The chief instrumentality of the modern Church for the development of a world soul is the ecumenical movement: in it is stressed the intention of God that His children should feel themselves to have a place in the common household of the world. (Incidentally, "ecumenical" which is a word no longer than "economical" and which derives from the same Greek word meaning "house," ought to be a household word among Christians, especially as it means household!)

This movement, as William Temple pointed out five years ago, is "the great fact of our time." But the "sheepishness of the sheep" in the Church's fold is nowhere more in evidence than when it comes to their failure to see its relevance to the very situations which fill the sheep with vague foreboding. The "wolfishness of the wolves" would be far less of a menace to our modern world if the sheep would listen to the voice of their one shepherd who calls them to a new and dynamic "togetherness" as a kind of living soul for the distracted and divided world.

Lacomte du Nouy reminds us in his tremendously prophetic book, Human Destiny, that only a very small percentage of the people—he says about one per cent—really help to determine the climate and dimension of society. The growth in effectiveness and outreach of the ecumenical movement—the emphasis upon familyhood in the Christian Church throughout the world—would be enormously accelerated if many more persons were to take seriously and make their own efforts to interpret and propagate its ideas.

The people of the churches should not be regarded as the servants of the movement but as its friends. The movement is their collective servant! But to serve effectively it needs to become a part of their religious thinking, praying and acting. It may sound like a bromide to say it again: but there is profound truth in the ob-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The first Sunday in the New Year our church celebrated Family Day. The Family Life Committee of the Woman's Missionary Society, of which Mrs. Harry L. Jacobs is chairman, with her nine additional members planned it well in advance. It was announced in the missionary meetings, and all circle chairmen stressed it in their meetings. Also it was announced in the church bulletin and from the pulpit for several Sundays. They had seen to it that special music was arranged for both services. Then they completed their plans by dividing the church roll into sections and having several members of their committee call every home by telephone, or as nearly all the homes as they could. Then Sunday came beautiful and bright, and with it came the folks. I had written the following hymn which was sung at both the morning and evening service (Tune: "Aurelia"):

O Father, we are thankful for family, for home;
Be it a holy fortress, when from it we may roam;
Help us to bless it ever with grateful love and praise,
And bring upon it honor throughout our earthly days.

And may its sure foundations be laid, O Christ, in Thee;
That we may know no failure, and be from shame kept free;
A home sincere in purpose with goal divine in view,
To be a joy forever, a stronghold good and true.

O God, be it a haven for all who enter there;
Rich with Thy gentle kindness, blest with Thy love and care;
And may its young be happy, and may its old be blest
With full reward for service, and peace and joy and rest. Amen.

My subject for the morning sermon was: "The Family Takes Inventory of Its Faith." and the material was gathered around four thoughts, its folks, its fortunes, its faith, its future. Followed the celebration of the Lord's Supper. At the evening service the song which seemed to have gone fairly well at the morning service was requested by members of the congregation. The day was a good success, the congregations were large, and the Family Life Committee felt well repaid.

By the way, Mrs. Robert M. Kimball, Superintendent of Family Life in the Woman's Missionary Convention, brought to the combined meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society and the W. W. Staley Missionary Society on the second Monday night a presentation of the mission study book, Committed Unto Us. She inspired the large number present with one of the best addresses on evangelism I have heard in many days. We were all much delighted with her visit to us and we feel she did a great deal of good. Miss Virginia Brinkley, of the W. W. Staley Missionary Society, opened the meeting with a most excellent devotional service based on Burnand's painting, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," which gave a most appropriate background for Mrs. Kimball's presentation of the study in evangelism. Both speakers impressed upon each one of us present our own individual responsibility in making Christ known to others—making him known, that is, as Saviour and Lord.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

HOW TO MAKE THE EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE EFFECTIVE.

Dr. Frank H. Lewis, Shelton Memorial Church, Portsmouth, Va., proposes the following as a certain way for a church to become successful in its work of Evangelism:

"First: Let a group of Christian people, it need not be a large group, get thoroughly right with God. This is basic. Our all must go that His all may come.

"Second: Let them band themselves together in prayer until God opens the heavens and comes down.

"Third: Let them put themselves at the disposal of God to be used in any way the Spirit may indicate to winning others to Christ.

"If faithfully carried out, this plan will insure a revival. The laws of the Spirit are as stable as those of the physical world. Spiritual power is not generated in us but released through us."

Are there people in the Convention who are willing to try this plan? If there are those who will, the Evangelistic Crusade can and will succeed.

ly appealing to Philemon on behalf of Onesimus, especially as the young man is now a Christian and should be received by Philemon as a brother in Christ. How Paul worded that letter, and what he wrote, mattered greatly—it might mean life or death for Onesimus.

Accordingly, Paul becomes a mediator, not by giving away watches and clocks as did Meg's "almost" uncle in "The Unfinished Dance," but by using common sense psychology:

1. He writes the letter not only to Philemon, but also to the church that met in Philemon's house: "To Philemon our beloved fellow worker and Aphia our sister and Archippus our fellow soldier, and the church in your house." Philemon was not to make his decision alone, as to what should be done with Onesimus, but the church as a Christian factor was to make that decision. But the name of Onesimus is not mentioned in the introduction.

2. Paul commends Philemon for his faith in Jesus and for his work and influence as a Christian: "I thank my God always when I remember you in my prayers, because I hear of your love and faith which you have toward the Lord Jesus and all the saints, and I pray that the sharing of your faith may promote the knowledge of all the good that is ours in Christ. For I have derived much joy and comfort from your love, my brother, because the hearts of the saints have been refreshed through you." That is good praise to get one on your side when you want to ask a favor of him. Still the name of Onesimus is not mentioned.

3. Paul says that he could use force but he prefers to appeal through love: "Accordingly, though I am bold enough in Christ to command you to do what is required, yet for loves sake I prefer to appeal to you." Onesimus is not mentioned yet.

4. He makes his appeal on the basis that he is an old man, and now a prisoner for the Christian work he has been doing: "I, Paul, an old man and now a prisoner also for Christ Jesus."

5. And then he makes his appeal for Onesimus with a playful play on words. The name "Onesimus" means "Useful," but Onesimus in running away had become useless to his master: "I appeal to you for my child, whom I begot . . . Onesimus (Useful)." Or, better still, Paul is saying that when Onesimus had become a Christian he had become useful again. "Formerly he was useless to you, but now he is indeed useful to you and to me." And then further down in the letter Paul says, "Yes, brother, I want some benefit (usefulness) from you in the Lord. Refresh my heart in Christ."

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN COLLEGE COUNCIL.

Six years ago an effort was made to get all four-year colleges with a Congregational Christian background and that wanted to be known as Congregational Christian colleges together for a conference and a discussion of purpose and plans to be followed. The first meeting was held in Grand Rapids, Mich., in connection with the biennial session of the General Council of our Church. The organizational meeting was held at Eden Seminary, Webster Groves, Missouri. At this meeting, after a two-day discussion, an organization was formed, officers elected, and a set of criteria was adopted by which each institution might determine its relation to the college council and the Congregational Christian Church. There were eight of our colleges that offered themselves as charter members of the council. From time to time additional members have been received until at present the council has a membership of seventeen. There are other colleges with Congregational Christian backgrounds considering membership in the council.

The real purpose of the council is to rejuvenate its member institutions and realign them in our Church with its program of education and of constructive evangelism. We realize, and we hope that the Church will realize, that there can be but little permanent progress without a trained leadership, that if the Church is to have an adequately trained and vitally interested leadership, somewhere along the line, the Church must take a hand in the training of these leaders and direction of its prospective leaders. It is worse than folly for the Church to depend on the state or some other agency to train leaders for the state and then to hope by chance to pluck from the group the leaders who are necessary for its program. What do men and women so trained know about the Church, its responsibilities, its purpose, its program, its power?

We should learn a lesson from the state and other professions. If a high school graduate plans to teach in our public schools, the state prescribes the standing of the school he must attend and the course of studies to be pursued. If the high school graduate undertakes to prepare himself for the practice of law, medicine, or dentistry, his courses are prescribed, and he must follow these courses or be denied the privilege of practicing. If the Church is concerned for its future, its responsibilities for the present and the future, it is high time that it concerned itself seriously with the training of those into whose hands and on whose hearts the future of the Church must rest. As go our colleges so goes our Church.

Our college council is greatly strengthened and encouraged by the nine new member institutions added to the original eight. With the co-operation and help of our denominations it is possible to win back to the Church others of our stronger colleges who at present disavow any relation to the Church at all. This can be achieved not on a narrow, dogmatic basis or by a coercive force, but on a broad, cooperative basis and a persuasive plan for the intellectual and spiritual redemption of human personality. Our colleges are interested in the vital aspects of religion through the Church and in the spiritual redemption of their students along with their intellectual advancement. Our colleges and our Church must work together if the mission of either or both is to be completely fulfilled.

STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FOUNDATION.

Responsibilities of the president of any small church college seem to be greatly multiplied in these days of stress and uncertainty. There are conferences, conventions, and council meetings that must be attended. These duties take a great deal of time. I am finding it almost impossible to attend such meetings, keep in touch with the College, and solicit necessary funds with which to meet bills resulting from the construction of our power plant.

The Church understands that it is its responsibility to repay funds advanced from the power house fund to our endowment fund that we may be able to pay for the power house. Week after week our churches are slowly but surely coming to the support of the College in this emergency. Since our last report Bethlehem Church, Nansemond County, Eastern Virginia Conference has forwarded a check for $250. In the mornings mail a check is received from Dr. A. L. Lincoln of New York City for $1,000. Dr. Lincoln is of the class of 1910 and is an eminently successful physician in the city of New York. There are churches and individuals who could and should send contributions to the College to help in this hour of need. Won't you please let us hear from you.

If you are interested in your college and in the increased support of your college by your church, you will not be greatly encouraged by reading this article and observing the contributions made during the past week for the support of the College. But for two churches in the Valley of Virginia Conference, Mt. Olivet (G) and Mt. Olivet (R), our report for this week would have been blank so far as contributions from our Sunday schools and churches are concerned.

We are right in the midst of our college period. During the months of January and February our pastors and superintendents are expected to inform their congregations and schools about their college, to call attention to its needs, and to the fact that this is the period in which our churches and Sunday schools are supposed to make generous contributions for the support of their college. It certainly would be helpful if our pastors and Sunday school superintendents would do just this thing. If our people are informed of the needs of the College and given an opportunity, they will support their college.

This is an earnest appeal to our churches to talk about our college and support it generously. We are grateful for all contributions.

Rainey Memorial Athletic Field, Evarts, Kentucky, was recently dedicated, honoring the late Rev. Eugene Rainey, former pastor. Mr. Rainey was a graduate of Elon College and did a significant work in Harlan County, Kentucky, developing a struggling church into a real service center for the community. This is a distinct honor to our church and to the memory of Eugene Rainey.

CHRISTIANS AID IN REFUGEE CAMPS.

By FLORENCE GORDON, Editorial Ass't
Foreign Missions Conference.

The Christian forces in North America are responding to the call of the Relief Committee of the National Christian Council of India for personnel for service among the ten million displaced persons on the border between India and Pakistan. Missionary doctors, nurses and social workers of all denominations are being released by their boards for emergency work in the Hindu and Moslem refugee camps on both sides of the border, where conditions are very serious. Great masses of people are living in hastily constructed camps, and wounds from the rioting, hunger, cold and disease are taking heavy toll among them.

Dr. and Mrs. Edmund D. Lucas of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., cut short their furlough and flew back to India, where Dr. Lucas is assisting E. C. Bhatti, secretary of the National Christian Council, in directing the relief program. Dr. Lucas went as the representative of all the Protestant groups cooperating in Church World Service. Dr. Edward W. Wilder of the Congregational Christian Churches, secretary-elect of the Christian Medical Association of India, the medical arm of the National Christian Council, flew back to India to help with the organization of the medical forces in India, already under way. An Indian relief office has been set up in Delhi, while in Pakistan there are relief centers in Karachi and Lahore. Dr. John Vroom of the United Presbyterian Church flew to Karachi to help in the emergency situation in Pakistan, and to organize a medical relief unit.

Bishop J. W. Pickett of the Methodist Church is active in the National Christian Council relief work. The Friends Service Committee is continuing its cooperation, and in the Delhi area, as in Pakistan, the aid of the YMCA, the YWCA and other local Christian groups and institutions has been drawn upon. Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, Minister for Health in India and sister of Raja Sir Maharaj Singh, is a Christian, and has been influential in organizing Christian volunteers, especially women, to work in Moslem refugee camps.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AND RACIAL TOLERANCE.

More religious freedom exists in Puerto Rico than in New Mexico, and more racial tolerance in Hawaii than Harlem, according to Dr. Frank S. Mead, former Christian Herald, editor, who spoke recently before the 40th annual conference of the Home Missions Council of North America, composed of twenty-three major Protestant denominations. He blamed the Catholic Church for lack of religious freedom in New Mexico, and "the churches' unwillingness to face its responsibilities," for racial intolerance in Harlem.

Reporting on a recent, first-hand investigation of the church and school system in New Mexico, Dr. Mead stated: "Religious freedom in New Mexico today is threatened by the Catholic Church encroachment on the public schools. Using its enormous influence, the Catholic Church is attempting to exercise direct control over public school policy. The catechism and 'Holy Marys' are being taught as a regular feature of the school curriculum. Protestant children are required to learn the catechism, and often are promoted according to their proficiency in reciting it."

In northern New Mexico, there are over 129 Catholic nuns employed as regular school teachers, the church editor said.

"The community and Protestant groups are too small and weak in New Mexico," he declared, "to resist these violations of their religious freedom. One community however, plans to take the issue to the courts in the near future," he added.

As for racial intolerance here, compared with Hawaii, Dr. Mead said, "The fault lies to a great extent with the churches' failure to take a firm position on racial issues." In Hawaii, he said, the church has always followed a vigorous policy in racial matters, while in this country, "the church has attempted to void the problem." He reported that many Hawaiians refused to migrate to the United States "because they fear racial discrimination."

"Harlem is a prize example of our policy of discrimination," he said. "There we find exorbitant rentals in a virtual slum area—rentals which are often higher than in some of the best, and most exclusive residential districts of Manhattan."

The estate of Mrs. Cora Lawrence Anthony, formerly of Greensboro, N. C., and more recently of Winston-Salem, who willed her properties largely for use of missions of the Christian Church, has been estimated to have a value of approximately $30,000.

Mrs. Anthony, whose death occurred December 17, made plans in her will for the creation of a trust and placed her estate under the care of the president of the Southern Convention, the pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church of Greensboro, and the president of the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention.

Dr. W. E. Wissemann, the pastor of the First Congregational Christian Church of Greensboro, has qualified as administrator of the estate.

I am one of those people optimistic enough to believe in the future of democracy. No matter how widely we may have departed from the practice of democracy, no matter how many failures we may have had as a nation, it is a conviction to me that it is something too precious to make it a matter of any light moment that those things should be discarded.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER.

"Prayer changes things!" Those of us who have had any Christian experience at all know that. It is wonderful to know that we can make such contact with God, our Father. The sad fact that most of us have to admit is that we do not get in touch with Him as we might. Not because He is out of touch or inaccessible but because we are either too busy, careless or indifferent to draw near to Him. Prayer is the privilege of every child of God.

Was there ever a time when our world needed so desperately the changes that are possible only through prayer?

God has made promises to His children, if they, having met the conditions, call upon Him. It is a matter of history that He has kept His word. Many of us have proven Him and know.

Believing in the power of prayer the people of the Christian world have set aside one special day in the year when they agree to unite in petition to God. February 13th is the day set apart this year. On that day, the first Friday in Lent, prayer girdles the globe. The same service, or a translation and adaptation of it, is used in many lands and languages.

It would be most gratifying to know that services would be held by all our Southern Convention societies or better still, that they were working with other denominations for an observance in their various communities.

Following are a few suggestions for World Day of Prayer chairmen:

How about:

1. Advance notices in your church bulletin?
2. Advance notices to newspapers, giving time, place, purpose and program, extending an invitation to all?
3. Poster in shops, schools, etc.?
4. Radio announcements and radio broadcasts on the day itself?
5. Window displays? (See Guide for Leaders.)
6. Advance showing of the film strips on the projects to which the offerings are applied? (One dollar for three. Write UCCW.)
7. Extension to new groups, using the children's service widely, distributing the programs in hospitals, homes for the aged and hotels?
8. Church bells to call the whole community to worship on Friday, February 13, 1948?

The theme is "The World at Prayer," based on the Lord's Prayer.

Materials may be ordered from the Missions Council, 14 Beacon St., Boston 8, Mass.

The Call to Prayer—10c per 100.

Poster (17 x 22)—10c each.

Program for Adults and Young People, 5c each, $5 per 100.

Children's Programs—5c each, $4 per 100.

Guide for Leaders—15c each.

Leaders Packet (includes one of each of the above)—35c.

Reprint of World Day of Prayer Picture Section—from the December Church Woman (quantities only)—$1.50 per 100.

Film strips may be ordered from United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

Set of three film strips on Migrants, Sharecroppers, American Indians.

Set of three film strips on Union Colleges in Orient, Christian Literature, Foreign Students.

Rental charge, $1, plus postage both ways for each set of three. May we of the Southern Convention join our hearts with believers around the world on February 13 as we claim that glorious promise of II Chronicles 7: 14, "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."

MRS. ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER.

Friday, February 13, 1948, will be Red Letter Day for all Christians throughout the world. You are invited to join with all peoples in a fellowship of prayer. Do not neglect to order your World Day of Prayer material immediately as no orders will be filled after January 31. The Leader's Packet is available for 35c and it includes The Call, the Poster, the Program, the Children's Program and the Guide for Leaders (with suggestions for both the above programs). The theme is "The World At Prayer" and the motto is "Each One Reach One." It has been suggested each woman carry The Call to Prayer, a leaflet, in her purse and she tell some one of the service and beautiful prayer printed, then that person in turn tell some one else, in that way the motto will have a meaning for each one. It is the desire of your interdenominational superintendent that this service be held in every church with groups from other denominations. The program this year contains not only the worship service but a history of prayer in the lives of Christian women as they prayed and worked and came together in united service for the world. It becomes a reference booklet which you will want to keep. The Children's Service is woven around the Lord's Prayer, so interpreted that as they pray they will be aware of migrants and Indians and of boys and girls across the sea. Do not break the circle of universal prayer on this day. Order your material from the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

servation of the Frenchman who said: nothing is real until it is local."

Christians have a unique opportunity now—du Nouy says the greatest in 2,000 years of their history—"to give the world guidance and comfort." They can do it through helping America to develop a soul that is sensitive and consciously orientated towards the larger world neighborhood of which America is so important a part. They can do it by strengthening the demonstration of Christian togetherness which is already going forward in the two great arms of the ecumenical movement—the International Missionary Council and the World Council of Churches—demonstrations both of a growing Christian world soul.

They can come to grips with the ideas underlying this whole process by acquainting themselves with the literature of the ecumenical movement—and in particular with the publications setting forth the facts which will engage the attention of the first World Assembly of the World Council at Amsterdam next summer. They can do it by availing themselves of the presence in America of many students from Christian Churches of other parts of the world. They can do it by persistently identifying themselves with the concept of world citizenship: learning to say not only my town, my country, but my world: not only my church, my denomination, but my world-wide Christian fellowship!

YOUTH WEEK -- JANUARY 25 to FEBRUARY 1, 1948

These Statements were written at the request of the International Council of Religious Education, which administers the United Christian Youth Movement, endorsing the continent-wide observance of Youth Week

Youth Urged to Keep Close to Christ.

By GRACE NOLL CROWELL, Poet.

As we think of youth—youth rightly directed, its surging power, its undimmed vision, its untried strength—we invariably think of the future, for the future belongs to youth. They are our inheritors. God grant we may pass on that immeasurably important era, not too sullied by our mistakes and failures.

May we who serve this generation live our lives so unclouded by sin that youth following us may be able to see clearly the Christ ahead—straight and strong and compelling—and accept him as their Savior and their Guide.

O youth, keep close to that Central Figure, for only through him—and through you—can this troubled world find peace and rest.

Youth Need Spiritual Resources.

By LUTHER W. YOUNGDAHL,
Governor, State of Minnesota.

We have a sacred obligation to give our children the opportunity of Christian fellowship and teaching. We are failing a vast number of them, today. Fifty per cent of the people in America are unchurched and millions grow into adulthood without ever knowing the rich benefits of true religious faith. Material goals have become the only objectives of too many young lives. This spiritual starvation offers the most serious threat to the future of our civilization. Let us leave nothing undone in bringing the youth of our nation to the blessings of church and Sunday school. Their greatest need is spiritual resources upon which to draw in the crucial days ahead.

Sees Need of Spiritual Convictions.

By FREDERICK L. HOVDE,
President, Purdue University.

It is reasonably certain that man knows enough science and engineering, and has the organizational skill and experience, to provide all peoples, with the fundamental necessities of life and to satisfy the principal motivating desires of normal people of all races, creeds, and colors. On the other hand, it is equally uncertain that we as a people, or the peoples of other nations, have the necessary inner spiritual qualities to build a happy world of peace and good will. All students of the human scene have eventually concluded that man-made societies must always fail unless they are composed of people intellectually free and with deep spiritual convictions that place others before self.

Girl Scout Leader Lauds U.C.Y.M.

By MRS. DUDLEY MILLS,
Secretary of the Girl Scouts and Chairman of the Girl Scout Protestant Advisory Committee.

The United Christian Youth Movement offers a challenge to young people to deepen their appreciation and understanding of the great religious principles they profess. Through awareness of the implications of their beliefs, they are stimulated to apply, in every area of their lives, the teachings of Christ.

The Youth Week celebration of the United Christian Youth Movement emphasizes the need for the preparation of young people to become able Christian leaders. It encourages participation in church activities and in community service.

Youth Needs Christian Faith.

By DARWIN R. BRYAN,
Director of Youth and Recreation,
Ohio Farm Bureau.

The churches are more and more showing zest toward introducing young people to the need of a fundamental understanding of the Christian faith. This Christian faith, rooted in a basic concern for others, must be nurtured as never before known in the history of our churches. Verbal expressions and the written word enlightening youth about God and Spirit are beginning steps in the process of seeking youths participation in church development. Along with these must go wise adult leadership which allows young people individually and mutually, through informal church youth groups, to express their ideas about the problems of Christianity as it applies within everyday living.

Church Leaders Have Obligation for Their Youth.

By SAMUEL A. FULTON,
Moderator of the United Presbyterian Church of North America.

The greatest potential of any nation is the youth growing up in her midst. They will soon be the leaders of the nation. The kind of leaders that they are to be is largely determined on how we as Christians train them in the knowledge of Christ.

The world today offers them tremendous possibilities in the most deceptive manner. The church offers them The Way, The Truth, and The Light. We as leaders should be conscious of the great obligation that rests upon us, throw them every environment conducive to Christian growth. It behooves the Protestant churches of our great country to undergird the whole program that directs the lives of the boys and girls in our various churches.

Every function of the church should be saturated with our testimony for Christ; the whole program pushed forward in an aggressive and joyous way that will attract and hold our boys and girls.

"THE UNFINISHED DANCE."

6. Paul then illustrates how Onesimus has shown his usefulness. Paul wanted to keep Onesimus and let him minister to Paul even as Philemon would have, had he been there in the prison with Paul: "I am sending him back to you, sending my very heart. I would have been glad to keep him with me, in order that he might serve me on your behalf during my imprisonment for the gospel; but I preferred to do nothing without your consent in order that your goodness might not be by compulsion but of your own free will."

7. After all, Paul says, Onesimus' running away has turned out for the best: "Perhaps this is why he was parted from you for a while, that you might have him back forever, no longer as a slave but more than a slave, a beloved brother, especially to me but how much more to you, both in the flesh and in the Lord."

8. Paul uses good psychology when he says, "So if you consider me as your partner, receive him as you would receive me."

9. Paul did not write his letters with his own hand; he dictated them to a stenographer who wrote down what he said. Paul promised to pay back to Philemon what Onesimus had stolen. And he playfully stops the stenographer and writes with his own hand the pledge: "If he has wronged you at all, or owes you anything, charge that to my account. I, Paul,

WHAT WE KNOW ABOUT JESUS: HIS WORK OF SALVATION.

LESSON V—FEBRUARY 1, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke 19:10.

LESSON: Isaiah 53:4-6; Matthew 1:21; 5:17; 20:26-28; Luke 19:1-10; Hebrews 4:15, 16.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 53:1-13.

The Sin-Bearer.

The immortal fifty-third chapter of Isaiah paints a portrait of "The Suffering Servant of Jehovah" or "The Sin-Bearer." It is not necessary to believe that the man who wrote it had in mind our Lord Jesus Christ, but it is generally agreed that our Lord Jesus Christ did fulfill that prophecy in almost a literal way. The chapter has significance not only on this account, but because of the new factor which it introduces in the Messianic hope, or the coming of the Christ. The Jews with indiscourageable optimism and unquenchable hope looked forward to the coming of a Deliverer. But in many instances this One Sent from God was to be a great King, sometimes a Warrior-King, One who should slay or drive out the enemies of the Jews, and One who would establish by power, even military power, the Kingdom. But Isaiah brings in a new element when he portrays the coming Messiah as a "Sin-Bearer" or as a "Suffering Servant." It was by vicarious suffering and not by victorious temporal power that He was to set up His kingdom, and save his people. This passage comes with chastening power today. We believe that our safety and security depend upon armed might and material power. But only the power of love, of sacrificial love can save the world. And only sacrificial love can save the individual.

Jesus, Saviour.

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus; for it is he that shall save his people from their sins." He was Teacher, Prophet, Friend, Priest, King—but his primary mission was to save his people from their sins. To save them from the penalty and also from the power of sin. These words fall dead upon the ears of some, even upon the ears of some who are members of the church, for they know little or nothing of the power of Christ to save from sin. But Christ can and does save people from sin. He imparts new resources and new power, that enables men to break the tyranny of habit and to find freedom in him. He sets men free to serve. He saves in a positive as well as a negative way. Men need a Saviour, need Him desperately in these modern times when so many other things are offered as substitutes for salvation and when all of them fail to save.

Come to Fulfill.

"I came not to destroy but to fulfill." The people of Jesus' day, especially and particularly the religious leaders thought that Christ had come to destroy, to tear down, to take away. They resisted him and finally crucified him because they believed this. But he came to fulfill and to fill full. For instance he not only fulfilled in his life and ministry many of the Old Testament prophecies, but he put new meaning into the law. His words in the Sermon on the Mount are a case in point. Liturgy has new meaning when Christ's spirit fills it with new life. Ceremonies have new meaning when they are seen in the light of his life. The law and the prophets are incomplete apart from him. Life itself is incomplete without him.

As He That Serveth.

"Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Great words these. Here was the Son of God, and the King of Kings, royal and regal in every sense, God dwelling among men, but taking upon himself the form of a servant, and declaring just as seriously that he was among them as one that serveth as when he was declaring that he and the Father were one, and that when they saw him they saw God Himself. One suspects that if we caught the inner meaning of these words, we would place more emphasis upon serving than on being served, on giving than on getting, on the surrender of privileges than on the demand for rights.

"And to give his life as a ransom for many." Not in the sense of paying the devil for the sins of men, of being turned over by God to the evil one. But as has been intimated above, by setting them free from the power of evil habits and the tyranny of sin, and of setting them free to follow him, to live like him, and by the power of an unquenchable love magnificently shown on the Cross.

To Seek and to Save That Which Was Lost.

These are the words of Jesus himself. He had come to seek and to save that which was lost. There is something that tugs at the heart when the word "lost" is used, especially in connection with a person. Think of a man falling overboard in mid-ocean, perhaps at night when the ship is at full speed. Think of a child lost in a woods at night. Think of men lost in military action. Think of a navigator who has lost his bearings while on a long flight over uncharted waters. Well men become lost in a spiritual sense and with stark tragedy as a result. Men may be well physically and be able to find their way around most anywhere and still be lost, lost because they are not in right relationships with God, lost because they are out of place, lost because they are headed in the wrong direction. And Christ came both to seek and to save that which was lost.

A Sympathetic High Priest.

There are some men in high places who are far removed from the common man. They do not understand his problems, they do not know how to sympathize with them. But Christ lived our life, faced our temptations, rubbed elbows with folks like we have to get along with, hence he knows how to help us. Thanks be unto God for this.

The Christian State proclaims human personality to be supreme; the servile State denies it. Every compromise with the infinite value of the human soul leads straight back to savagery and to the jungle.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

This is our first letter and financial report for the year, 1948. We hope to do even greater work in behalf of the children here this year than we did in 1947. The children are our first concern, physically and spiritually.

We try to give them good wholesome food to build strong bodies. We also try to train them to live right. They go to Sunday school and all the larger ones go to church. Then on Wednesday nights our pastor and Miss Walker, his assistant, put on a religious service at the Orphanage. All the children are required to attend this service. We believe this special service is greatly inspiring to the children in a number of ways, especially in singing. They are taking more interest in the young people's work and also in the church service.

The people are taking more interest in the work here than ever before. People visit the Orphanage more from many sections of our Convention and see for themselves. We have had many compliments on what has been accomplished here during the years. It has taken a long time to build the plant as it is now. But the policy of the Board of Trustees has always been to pay as we went, and all through these years if we built a building we had money to pay for it when it was finished. If we bought a piece of land we paid for it when the deed was made. The Southern Convention now has an Orphanage plant valued at book value $245,000 and it is out of debt.

We have set goals from year to year and during the thirty-one years I have been Superintendent of your Orphanage, I have made the goals a little higher each year, and you have never let me down. You have always seen to that we reached them.

Last year our goal was forty-five thousand dollars ($45,000) contributed from the churches and friends who were not members of our church. The church contributed $23,902.87. The friends and the amount we received from endowments amounted to $23,902.40, total amount being $47,805.27. Everybody felt happy that we did reach this amount. No one regretted that they contributed. I well know and you know that I will not be your superintendent thirty-one more years. A number of the Orphanage Board of Trustees say that they want me to raise $50,000 one year while I am still here. I am willing to undertake it, and I believe with the co-operation of all our churches and friends it can be done. Let us try it this year. We only lacked $2,194.73 reaching $50,000 last year. Our churches can surely do that much more this year. The way to do it is to start now. So our goal for 1948 is $50,000. Help me reach it.

Superintendent.

write this with my own hand, I will repay it—to say nothing of your owing me even your own self."

10. Paul sees good psychology when he assumes that Philemon will do more than he has asked him to do: "Confident of your obedience, I write to you, knowing that you will do even more than I say."

11. And finally Paul asks a personal favor: "At the same time, prepare a guest room for me, for I am hoping through your prayers to be granted to you."

We would like to know what happened to Onesimus when he presented himself, with one of the greatest letters ever written, at Philemon's door. Did Philemon have him beaten or killed? Or did he receive him back in good faith? Or, better still, did he send him back to Rome to minister to Paul in prison? We cannot know. Even as the movie, "The Unfinished Dance," was unfinished because the ballerina fell into the trap-door, our story of Philemon and Onesimus is unfinished because we do not know what the final outcome was.

Nevertheless, one thing is certain as revealed in this letter—there are two aspects to evangelism: (1) One is to bring to Christ those who have not accepted his way of life, as Paul did Onesimus; (2) the other is to Christianize and humanize professed Christians as Paul was trying to get Philemon to do.

Then, too, the dance is unfinished because that twofold aspect of evangelism still continues. The world has not been brought to Christ and the Christian world has not been Christianized. Let us not fall into the trap-door of "unfinishing," but let us strive to actualize, by using (as Paul did) the best theology and psychology possible, the plans for the Evangelistic Crusade.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Boys and Girls:

I have received a letter from the family of Eleanor Page telling of their wonderful trip to Australia. They went to San Francisco on the train stopping at several places for Eleanor to see Indians, nature's wonders and just to visit. At San Francisco they boarded and flew to Honolulu where they ate their Thanksgiving dinner. Continuing their flight, they passed through beautiful moonlight and then through cold rain. On arrival in Australia they found the weather rainy and warm. At the end of this month Eleanor and her family will return to Richmond.

If you do not read the letters from the Jacksons in China, I wish you would. They are very interesting. One of the girls in our Junior Department, Judy Bond, took copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN with the Jacksons' letters to school when her class studied about China. One of the many lovely things about being a part of the church family is the many people far and near that one may know. Visiting ministers, missionaries, and board secretaries are interesting and fun. In our family we have chopsticks, pieces of brass, Chinese window transparencies, dolls for my collection, and a bangle blacelet from India. All of these were gifts from missionaries who have been our friends or stayed in our home. Our choice possession is a lovely strip of woven cloth with many gay colors. It is called a lanket and was woven by the Maori headhunters of the Philippines. It was given to me on my birthday by the great missionary, Frank Laubach, who is known today as a literacy expert because he teaches people to read very quickly.

Many of our soldiers in the Pacific meet Christian people there and are given tokens of remembrance. I know a boy who has several pieces of mother of pearl in beautiful designs. Many ministers' families have shared our experience with missionaries. I am thinking now of a lovely silver bowl that the Lesters have which I believe was a Turkish water bowl owned by a Sultan and a gift to them from a missionary.

Don't you ever think that being a part of the church is dull. It isn't! It covers the world and its people and as our missionaries do more work there will be more contacts.

THE LESS HONORED GIFT.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"What a lot of nice toys you have, Willie!" exclaimed Grandma Brown, pausing in the doorway of the living room and looked down at the floor which was littered with all manner of playthings.

Mrs. Brown had been driven to her son's home for a brief call, but all the grownups were engaged in a business consultation with a lawyer, so she had come in for a visit with her grandson. Stepping carefully, she reached a rocking chair which was standing near a low table. At once Willie began to bring her one toy after another.

"Tell me about this beautiful little basket," said Grandma. "Who gave it to you?"

But Willie had thrown himself on his stomach beside his train track. "Look at my train, Grandma," he called. "Watch it go around the track!"

"Quite a train," admired his grandmother. "Who gave it to you?"

"Don't know—think it must have been Santa."

"Look! There's a doggie under the leg of the chair, Willie. He will be badly squeezed if you don't pick him up."

"Oh! That old dog!" the boy said with a sniff. "I don't like it. Aunt Peggy made it out of an old coat. Now it's flat."

"Poor doggie," said Mrs. Brown, "no wonder you are flat, with a chair standing on you. I'm sure Aunt Peggy must love you a lot, Willie, to go to all the trouble of making a dog for you."

"I've lots of animals, Grandma," announced Willie, unimpressed. "I don't want dogs made out of old coats."

"Did you thank your aunt for the dog?" his grandma then asked.

"Thank her? I don't remember," replied Willie. "She was here a while ago."

Grandma, who was usually very merry with children, now felt quite serious. "Willie," she said, "did you ever make anything?"

"Make anything? I've made houses with my blocks."

"Fine. Now suppose you had built a very tall and very nice house—seventeen stories, like this one you live in—and someone came along and knocked it over! How would you feel?"

"I'd knock him over!"

Grandma made no comment on this, but said, "When we've worked hard to make something, we like that thing, don't we?"

"Huh-huh."

"Let us look at the dog Aunt Peggy made for you." Willie picked it up and brought it over to her. "See," said Grandma, "Auntie had to cut out all the pieces, and to sew them together, and then, she had to make the ears and the eyes and to embroider the nose and mouth. After that, of course, she had to feed him until he was nice and plump; didn't she?"

Willie smiled and nodded.

"He's not particularly beautiful," continued Grandma, "but homely dogs are usually very brave."

Willie's eyes widened. "I'll call him Brave," he said. "I'm glad Aunt Peggy made him like that."

"Tell her so when you see her, Willie."

"Yes, I'll tell her he's my Brave."

"And thank her?"

"Huh-huh."

Was Willie typical of many modern children? Do these boys and girls receive so much at Christmas and other times that they do not value what is done for them?

The answer is that little children can always be taught to appreciate and to be thankful. From infancy, we should, by example, let them see how to show appreciation for all gifts and favors. They should never hear slight remarks about gifts that have been received. Much of the joy of life is bound up in gracious acknowledgments. These show that we are thoughtful of others; that we understand the sacrifice they may make when they give to us. Even when we know the gift has involved no sacrifice and, also, when it really seems inadequate, it does no good to be critical. Let us teach the children the meaning of such common sayings as "Never look a gift horse in the mouth" and "Comparisons are odious." These have underlying principles that hold true courtesy in their keeping. Then, of course, there is the command that covers all cases, "Judge not."

First Congregational Church

WAUKEGAN, ILLINOIS

A good parlor is an asset to any church. This spacious and comfortable one in the Waukegan Church is reserved for men.

This church celebrated its Centennial in 1943. Miss Dorothy L. Ford wrote in the Centennial Booklet: "The founders were few in number, just as the Pilgrim Fathers were few; but the history of the United States is repeated in every church in the land. The Christian people with their faith and ideals and traditions, marched from sea to sea right at the side of the explorer and the soldier. The steadfastness of then is the steadfastness of today. It has carried the American people through the years of struggle and is still carrying them through the turmoil that surrounds today. It is faith. It is the love of God. At first the records show some narrowmindedness, but Christian broadmindedness began to triumph. The little group gradually widened its activities until it took part in community affairs."

The early confession of faith is an interesting reiteration of Puritan orthodox beliefs; and the Covenant contains this interesting paragraph: "To walk with its members in the fear of the Lord; to reprove them with meekness when they go astray, and receive reproof when kindly given with gratitude; to submit to its discipline; to contribute according to ability; habitually to attend stated meetings; and in every laudable way seek to promote its peace, purity and prosperity."

Miss Ford adds: "Concerts, dinners and bazaars, Christmas and Easter plays, and other programs, to celebrate, to commemorate, and to raise funds, mark highlights along the hundred years. These are the spiritual and social contacts of men and women who have enacted this history. First are the founders already named, next are the pastors, that devout group who have endured uncomplainingly, rejoiced sincerely, and hoped and prayed for the church."

W. Ernest Collins and John R. Scottford are among the ministers of recent years. The present church was erected under the leadership of J. W. F. Davis. Rev. Leslie W. Chapman has served the church since 1945.

NUMBER 5.

Of What Value is THE SUN to the Convention?

By JESSE H. DOLLAR

This question is difficult to answer because THE CHRISTIAN SUN is older than the Convention. It might properly be said that if there had been no CHRISTIAN SUN there might not be a Southern Convention, likewise, maybe no Elon College, no Christian Orphanage, no Board of Missions. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is to the churches, Convention institutions and enterprises what the daily papers are to commercial enterprises. Dr. Atkinson used to say—and he knew—that the people who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN gave to missions and those who did not, did not give. It is a medium of exchange of ideas, programs, plans and inspiration for the future movement of all our interests. When the time comes that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is found in the homes of the Southern Convention, there will be new light, new interest and new progress to be noted in every phase of our church work from the individual members of the local church to the Conferences and Convention. The present campaign for new subscriptions is our opportunity to put THE CHRISTIAN SUN into the homes of our people and to put the causes of the Church upon their hearts through its weekly visit. This opportunity becomes your responsibility and mine.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Mr. Chandler, from whose report to the Mid-Winter Meetings we reprint excerpts, served during World War II as a Navy Chaplain. He served in both the Atlantic and Pacific theatres including fourteen months in the grim Aleutians. In the Atlantic theatre he was fleet Chaplain of all Naval Forces in the European, Mediterranean and North African areas. Last May he received the Military Order of the British Empire "for distinguished service for the Allied cause as staff Chaplain, Amphibious Forces, United Kingdom, covering the period from D-Day 1943 to VE-Day 1945."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Congress of United States,
Washington, D. C.,
December 23, 1947.

Dear Editor:

Thank you for your courtesy in sending me a copy of your issue with the editorial following my talk at Woman's Club, and the report of Jackson's letter describing the visit of himself and Dr. Riggs to my old stamping grounds in Fukien. It illustrated vividly what some of us have been trying for years to get more missionary leaders to recognize, namely, that if they fail to take the lead in getting national action to bolster forces resisting the threat of Communism in China, all or much of the work done through decades of loving ministry will be snuffed out by the tide of cruel slavery and atheism which the Communists bring into any area they touch.

Dear Editor:

The enclosed paragraphs are from Dr. Edward C. Riggs, American Board missionary, supported by the churches of the Southern Convention, at Shaowu Christian Hospital, Shaowu, Fukien, China.

Already the news letters published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN have resulted in many joyous partnerships of spiritual adventure and financial support. I am grateful for the many wonderful channels into the hearts of people that are open to the story of Christian missions through the subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

PASTORAL PRAYER.

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN,
Mason City, Ohio.

O God, Thou Eternal One, by whom all that is to be is in process of becoming, we reverently bow before Thy Holy Majesty in humble prayer. Because Thou art the Author of life, the Giver of every good and perfect gift, we come before Thee with penitence and with adoration, with petition and with thanksgiving, with acceptance of Thy grace and with commitment of our lives to Thee.

In Thee we live and move and have our being. We believe that our lives are Thy gift to us and that what we do with our lives—what we make out of our lives will be our gift back to Thee. Grant that we shall not disappoint Thee with the gift we make to Thee.

Thou art truth and love; Thou art life and light; Thou art wisdom and power—the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end. "O Lord our Lord how excellent is Thy name in all the earth!"

We pray that in recognition of Thy majesty we may be kept humble, that in recognition of Thy holiness we may be kept pure, and that in recognition of Thy infinite greatness we may be made strong to serve and honor Thee.

We pray that we may daily grow in grace and in the knowledge of Christ—that we may attain unto worthy measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.

Save us from all narrowness of thinking, from all littleness and pettiness of living, and from all dishonorableness in attitude or act. And grant O God that we shall each one see so to live each day that others will take knowledge of us that we are companioning with Jesus.

In His name we pray and in His spirit we would live. Amen.

Quin of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Texas, and Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes of the Methodist Church are among the leading speakers who will be in Richmond for the Preaching Mission.

J., and Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

There will be eighteen visiting speakers in all during the week.

THE CONVENTION OFFICE AND
"THE CHRISTIAN SUN."

By REV. F. C. LESTER.

If the Convention Office is to do its work effectively, it must have some means for getting its message to the people of the churches. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the medium used. It is essential.

Those who want to know what is going on in the Convention Office, and that should mean all the church members, should be able to learn by reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This means that they must be subscribers, or have other access to the paper.

Subscribers seem to want two things: News concerning other churches, and "food for the soul." Unless there is adequate coverage for news, and sufficient challenging thought to stir a desire to do righteously, subscribers will always be hard to secure.

If all the members of the Southern Convention are to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, there must be a subscription list of at least six, perhaps ten, thousand. That is three to five times the number on the subscription list at any time during the past ten years.

The Southern Convention puts much money into its paper. The amount is approximately $2.00 for every subscription. That is a good way to lose money, but it is not the way to solve the problem of the Convention "organ," the voice of the Convention.

Another thousand subscriptions will ease the financial burden of the Convention, bless that many more homes, and give the Convention Office a fifty per cent better chance to inform its constituency. It is worth doing, and doing now!

"THE CHRISTIAN SUN" KEEPS ME INFORMED.

By GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH.

I look forward each week to receiving my copy THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Usually, I find some personal notes about people I know, or certainly people in whom I have an interest.

I always look forward to reading Dr. Hardcastle's comments on the Sunday School Lesson. The information given the public through THE CHRISTIAN SUN in regard to the progress made by the various organizations of the Southern Convention is certainly worth much to those who are interested in the progress of our church. The Women's Mission Society, the fifth Sunday offering to the college, along with the payment of conference apportionment to Elon and to the Christian Orphanage are listed weekly. There are many other worthwhile features in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but to me these items are worth the $2.00 annual fee paid for subscription.

THIS "SUN" OF OURS.

As secretary-treasurer of the Board of Publications, it is my painful duty to keep tab on the finances of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It is always a joy to pay bills and have money on hand for the next bill. It isn't always so for the publishing of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

All of our church people in the Southern Convention should realize the cost. The subscriber pays $2.00 for his SUN and the Convention, with its boards and institutions, pays at least another $2.00 for the same subscription. And the cost is rising along with the cost of living.

Today our subscription list is rather strong. We need more subscribers, however, to help take care of the cost of publishing. This fall and winter have been a disappointment as far as renewals were concerned. The income from subscribers has been lower than usual. Possibly preachers and others responsible for subscription lists have not been on their jobs in the local churches.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is for everyone in the Church. Why not get families, officers and leaders on the subscription list by the Church sending it to each?

NEWS FROM MT. ZION.

All the friends of Rev. and Mrs. Walstein Snyder were happy over their announcement of a son, Coy Wesley, born December 8.

The Ladies' Mission Society sent cheer baskets to all the sick and shut-in people of the community. They also helped the less fortunate people with different gifts at Christmas.

The young people have worked for several months serving suppers for different organizations in order to raise money for a hut. They have bought an army barracks building and already have it moved to the church grounds ready to be assembled.

A Christmas program was given on Sunday, December 20, which was very effective. Treats were given to all the children of the Sunday school.

MISS CARNELIA LYNCH.

A HAPPY CHRISTMAS.

The year 1947 brought many blessings to us, for which we are so thankful. Our hearts were made to rejoice many, many times as the people treated us so nice and gave us so much we can never forget them. Good health and friends are something that really makes one happy. Our health has been better recently and we praise the Lord for it. The most enjoyable thing to us Christmas was that for the first time in six years we had all the children home for Christmas. That made us happy and we surely did enjoy having them. They were: Mr. and Mrs. Howard Humble and children, Wayne and Rachel, Liberty, N. C., Route 1; Mr. and Mrs. Ocie Pollard and children, Junior, Cecil, James Marvin and Robert Glenn of Greensboro, N. C., Route 1; and Mr. and Mrs. Wellons Lankford Pollard, Jacksonville, Fla.

Besides having all the children home the people of our congregations did everything they could to make us enjoy it—they gave us chickens, meats of all kinds, canned vegetables and a grand variety of them there was, flour, butter, eggs, etc., and a purse of

The witness of the church includes the written as well as the spoken word. Some copies of our Church Paper are read superficially, others are read and re-read. Requests for extra copies attest the fact that essential information is being published. Issues carrying the record of historic occasions, biography, pictures, sermons, obituaries, etc., are among the treasured possessions in countless homes. Truly, ours is a sacred privilege and task!

"The wind bloweth where it listeth . . . so is every-one that is born of the spirit." The spirit of God uses the written as well as the spoken word as a means of grace. Our reading constituency is unpredictable, in that no one knows the number of people who may be touched and blessed by a given issue. Multiplied subscriptions mean multiplied opportunities for the Holy Spirit to do its work.

Those who have a genuine appreciation of their Church Paper may help broaden its influence. There are a number of tangible ways of doing this. Let each subscriber resort to the simple and reasonable expedient of giving one subscription. Surely there is someone among your circle of friends or relatives who merits and would enjoy such a gift. Your own, plus the gift subscription, may be had for the price some publications are now asking for one subscription. A contribution to the endowment fund or the making of a bequest assures the publication of continued usefulness.

Make no mistake about it, our publishing is not only a phase of our united witness, it is an expression of our united stewardship. For the average person, a subscription is a mere pittance. Generosity comparable to that expressed in other areas of Christian activity would lift our publishing enterprise to new levels of achievement. Make your response in proportion to benefits received.

VIRGINIA COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

Charles Clayton, editor emeritus of The Christian Century, spoke during the Convocation of the Virginia Council of Churches in Richmond, Va. He set forth four challenges to Protestantism: the steady growth of religious illiteracy, the preoccupation of the mind with science; the threat to the mind of America imposed by the vast system of commercialized entertainment, and definite encroachments on the principle of separation of church and state. In its present form, Dr. Morrison insisted, Protestantism is not equal to the burden of meeting these four great challenges. He concluded: "The Church must speed unification if it does not desire to share the fate of early Christians who were driven into the catacombs."

Dr. R. B. Montgomery, president of Lynchburg College, was reelected president of the Council. Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Dr. Minor C. Miller, and Rev. Thomas C. Allen were reelected to executive positions.

A budget of $52,960 for 1948 was adopted at the Council with the understanding that contributions from denominations will be increased by 25 per cent during the year. Last year's budget was $48,450 with special contributions for overseas relief making total disbursements of $55,496.

Excerpts from the report of Mr. Robison, the Executive Secretary, follow:

"The record of activities of the Virginia Council of Churches during the past year is a tribute to the growing Christian cooperation among the Protestant Churches and their people in the Old Dominion—they are practicing the principles of Christ by sharing their worldly goods with those less fortunate than they, by greater interracial and interdenominational cooperation, and by giving aid and comfort to their neighbors at home and abroad.

"The third year in the life of the Council has been an eventful one. Every department of the organization has expanded its activities to embrace greater service to more people in the Commonwealth. In the cities, hamlets and in rural communities of the State, Christians have not only responded to the challenges those critical times have thrust upon them, but have sought to enlarge their benefactions to those in need and distress.

"Responding to the acute need of the distressed peoples overseas, Virginia Christians contributed nearly a million pounds of food, clothing, shoes, bedding and other supplies to the Church World Service which shipped and distributed the goods abroad. In addition, the people gave $12,888.67 in cash in community and interdenominational offerings at Thanksgiving and other times, to be used in purchasing necessary supplies for overseas relief.

"Representing city and county youth councils in Virginia, Robert Earl Houff, president of the State Youth Council, attended the World Conference of Christian Youth in Oslo, Norway, in July. Upon his return, he toured Virginia, addressing nearly 60 youth groups, acquainting them with the attitudes of Christian youth toward world problems and man himself as expressed by the 1,500 delegates and leaders from 70 different nations who gathered in Oslo to worship, study, play, eat and talk together.

"Attending conferences and planning programs, however, are simply methods by which our Christian youth is learning how to do the work of our Lord in a more effective way. Their project of supporting religious workers at the Bon Air and Peakes industrial schools continues to command their attention. For this year they have added other projects, including a plan to have a part-time youth executive, a student at Lynchburg College, to work in the interest of youth cooperation. There are now eleven local youth councils in the State and the group plans to organize new city and county councils during the current year.

"Perhaps nowhere else is evidence more tangible that people are hungry for and need religion in their daily lives than may be found in the work of the Department of Christian Education. Under the leadership of Minor C. Miller, one of the major projects of this department continues to be week-day religious education. The record speaks for itself. Weekday religious education was started in Virginia seventeen years ago with only two teachers instructing 1,411 children in four school divisions. The initial program cost $3,600.00 in 1930.

"This year we have 102 teachers instructing in 52 school divisions embracing 436 communities where a total of 67,131 pupils are enrolled in religious classes. The approximate cost of the program is $160,000.00 for the current year, with an average per pupil cost of $2.38. It is significant that 97 per cent of all pupils enrolled in the public schools where weekday religious education is offered volunteered to enroll in these classes.

"Demand by our people for the type of program conducted by the Department of Christian Education indicates that weekday religious education is not only growing in Virginia, but is here to stay. And it is encouraging to note that many teachers now employed in this work are planning to make teaching of religion their profession and life work. Professional status of such instructors is being aided by the inauguration last year of a pension plan and of certification to teach.

The Department of Social Education and Action concentrated on six areas of human and social relations during the past year. Its most widespread activity and perhaps most visibly fruitful has been the program of overseas relief. Other areas outlined at the Council's annual convocation in Lynchburg included Soviet-American Relations, Civil Rights, Public Welfare in Virginia, Alcohol Education and Federal Funds and Parochial Schools.

denominations would also move towards organic unity. Our churches and the A.M.A. have contributed substantially to the remarkable degree of inter-denominational cooperation as evidenced in the Union Theological Seminary in Rio Piedras.

One of our leading laymen—a very able young lawyer who grew up in our church in Humacao—is the president of the island-wide Association of Protestant Churches. These churches have made and will continue to make a loyal witness to the evangelical faith. The power and influence of the Roman Catholic Church on the island is not as great as either of its most vigorous defenders or opponents would have us believe. For example, a completely Catholic legislature passed a law allowing the dissemination of birth control information, the law was signed by an acting governor who was also Catholic. One of the real problems faced by our churches is how to be vigorously evangelical without becoming bigotedly anti-Roman Catholic.

Another expression of the A.M.A.'s interest has been the work done at Ryder Memorial Hospital. Established in 1914, this institution has done an outstanding piece of work. Last year over 15,000 people came to the clinics for treatment, and some 1800 individuals spent from one to twenty days in the hospital. The leadership of the hospital is determined not only to maintain high standards of medical care, but to extend still further its services among those who can least afford to pay for adequate hospitalization.

To help fill the need on an island where hospital facilities are less than half of what they ought to be, an additional forty beds will soon be added. The dynamic and creative leadership at the hospital plans to move ahead in public health education using the latest effective educational techniques. It is hoped, for example, that some of this education will be done with visual aids during the time that patients ordinarily waste while waiting their turn at the clinics.

Closely allied with Ryder, and located on its grounds, will be the Blanche Kellogg Training School. Soon after the A. M. A. went to Puerto Rico the Blanche Kellogg Institute was established near San Juan. As the public educational system grew the needs for which Blanche Kellogg was established, receded, and in 1942 the property was sold. The new Institute will train registered and practical nurses, midwives, and follow-up social health workers, and will do some work in

Missions in Puerto Rico

Address by REV. HOWARD E. SPRAGG of Chicago, Illinois, Superintendent-Elect of Congregational Christian Work in Puerto Rico, Speaking at the Mid-Winter Meeting in Grand Rapids, Michigan

Until recently the average continental American wasn't quite sure whether Puerto Rico was in the South Pacific or off the coast of Spain and he was even more vague about the character and political status of the island. But with the leasing of military bases in the Caribbean by the United States and with the training of some of our troops in Puerto Rico, acquaintance with our insular possession increased. Now that thousands of Puerto Ricans are coming to the mainland each month, a great deal of attention is being given to this "problem child of the Caribbean." Some 300,000 Puerto Ricans are now in the states, most of them in New York City.

Puerto Rico—often spoken of as a "land of contrasts"—has a setting of extraordinary beauty, but it also has incredible poverty. A recent report of a U. S. Commission on Puerto Rico has listed its basic problems as "progressive landlessness, unemployment, and an implacable growth of population." In 1898, when we took over the island from Spain, the population was about 850,000; now it runs well over two million.

Because Puerto Rico is an American possession, some continental Americans smugly assume that everything there is sweetness and light. They would do well to remember that some 60 per cent of the children are without schooling, that in rural districts illiteracy is as high as 70 per cent.

I have worked in some of the worst slums in the rural South, in the coal fields and in the industrial North; but in comparison to the slums of Puerto Rico, these places look like a page of Better Homes and Gardens. These wretched hovels are indescribable.

While most Americans are just now becoming acquainted with Puerto Rico, those close to the Congregational Christian American Missionary Association have known it well. In 1899 the A.M.A., under comity arrangements with the other interested denominations, went to work in the eastern end of the island. Through the years the A.M.A.'s interests have been developed in four directions.

First of all there have been the churches which have been growing in strength and numbers. We now have twenty-two organized churches, and a total of forty-six preaching points. Fifteen years ago the Congregational Christian and the United Brethren denominations there joined to form the United Evangelical Church of Puerto Rico, hopeful that the other

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A good way by which to help your church is to send a long list of new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I am proud of THE CHRISTIAN SUN; proud of its long history; proud that it is published every week; proud of its place in the heart of so many families; proud of its idealism; proud of the work it does for Missions, for Elon College, the Orphanage, Sunday schools, the children, the youth, and women's work; and I am proud of its editorials, its reports, and its general make-up. True, it has its faults, and makes its mistakes, but it still fights the battles of the Church, and oftentimes with but little help and praise. It is a tough paper. It stands the tests. It comes again and again. And it deserves the faithful support of all the families and homes of the Southern Convention. It should overflow into other areas. It is made of the busy church life by busy church folk, and therefore does not have the finish and polish it might have had, had it a more leisurely handling by a more professional people. It is still worth more than its cost—much more.

It needs a larger subscription list and a better subsidy. It is one of the most economically handled enterprises of our Convention. It is a good thing it has some loyal hands upon its shoulders. Our Church would miss it more than it realizes if it—well, let us not even talk about that. Bless it, boost it, write for it, read it, file it. It will help us make some history worth recording and worth keeping if we give it a chance. It will come to the aid of every church in the Convention if we will subscribe to it and read it. Speak your piece in it. It is not necessary that you agree even with the Suffolk Letter, as perhaps you often do not. Sometimes I think they do not look half as good in print as they should. You may differ from much you find in its columns. Help make it a true spokesman of your Convention and the churches thereof by expressing your views in it.

The Board of Publications is asking your extra special consideration this week. Send them a good list of subscribers. As usual these lines will be read by the people who are already subscribing to it, but you can bring their suggestion to your fellow churchman who is not subscribing to it. One of my church members sends gift subscriptions to others, another gives me money to supply subscriptions to still others. There are many ways of increasing the subscription list, and ours would be a finer Church if some of them were tried in every one of our churches this week. Just remember that there is not a cause in our Church which is hindered by THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Every enterprise in our Church is blessed and helped by it, and you will be a much better informed member if you regularly read it. Every week after reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN I can answer many questions I was wondering about until I saw it. It cannot serve as it should without your help. Give it your help this week.

WE ARE GIVEN A TREAT AND WE GIVE A TREAT.

The Rosemont Christian choir gave the people of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News a great treat at the Vesper Service last Sunday afternoon (January 11). This excellent choir of twenty voices, under the leadership of Mrs. Royall Gallup, and with Mrs. Frank Goforth at the organ presented a program of sacred music in an effective and inspiring way. The members of the choir presented an attractive appearance in their dark maroon robes, and they sang with poise, dignity, harmony, and power. In addition to the choral numbers, there were solos by Mrs. Gallup and Mr. Ed Drinkard, respectively. The program came to an inspiring and dramatic climax, when the choir sang the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's "Messiah." The congregation stood reverently as the choir sang this masterpiece in a masterly and moving way. The program was indeed a musical treat, and there were many expressions of commendation and appreciation from members of the congregation.

And then our choir gave the Rosemont choir, and the friends who had come with them a treat of another, but of an acceptable kind. They were invited to the Fellowship Hall where a delicious supper was served by the members of our choir. Mrs. Apperson and Mrs. Dessler and Mrs. Foster had done a lot of work behind the scenes and all things were ready, including an abundance of Mrs. Apperson's famous hot rolls. Members of our choir, both men and women, saw to it that our guests were well taken care of, and then sat down with them and enjoyed the good food, good fellowship, and wholesome fun. No formal speeches or program had been scheduled, but Mrs. W. B. Williams (in spite of numerous wisecracks by certain gentleman) and Mr. W. H. Baker welcomed our Rosemont friends and spoke words of appreciation. Mrs. Gallup, Mrs. Council and others responded on behalf of Rosemont. At the close of the supper the group sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." Mr. W. B. Williams then conducted some of our guests on a tour of inspection of the Educational Building, while others enjoyed informal fellowship with our folks. It was a delightful experience, one that will warm the hearts of those who were there upon every remembrance of it.

INGRAM CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

At a Christmas program presented by the Ingram Christian Church December 28, a lovely silver platter was presented to Mr. Joe Landrum and his good wife by the Ingram Sunday school and church. The presentation was made by Mrs. Fletcher Whitlow, teacher of the Kent Bible Class, to Mr. Landrum in recognition for his more than twenty years' service as Superintendent of the Ingram Sunday school.

Mrs. Whitlow said in part, "More than twenty years ago we called a young man as Superintendent to succeed the then aging and beloved Dr. Kent. That young man was Joe Landrum. Since that day he has guided us through two building programs and has been more than a Superintendent, for at many times he has been counselor, friend, and at various times has more or less served as pastor during times we were without a pastor. Here at Ingram we have changed the old saying of 'Let Bill do it' to 'Let Joe do it.' He has never let us down. An indication of the love and respect that all feel for Mr. Landrum was fully expressed by a little five-year-old girl during a recent revival at the church. After the pastor and the visiting evangelist had spoken the little girl leaned over and said, 'When are they going to let Mr. Landrum preach?' "

CLYDE FIELDS,

Carlyle was right when he said that this life is only a "gleam of light between two eternities." And still some folks take it so seriously. What's all the hurry for anyway?

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

ELON COLLEGE NEEDS "THE CHRISTIAN SUN."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is a weekly communication to our churches. Elon College is our Church's institution of higher learning. The College had no funds for its founding except as the members of the Church wanted to give it. The College has been and is today largely dependent on the generosity of the Church for its support. The College has always gone on the theory that if the members of our Church knew and understood the needs of the College that they would go to any reasonable limit to help meet those needs.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN was in existence long before the College was founded. When the Church decided to consider seriously to undertake to build a college for the Southern Convention, it turned to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to communicate that desire to its members. When the decision was reached to call an extraordinary session of the Convention for the purpose of deciding definitely whether or not to build a college for the education of its young people, the call was issued through THE CHRISTIAN SUN. THE CHRISTIAN SUN was a factor in creating sentiment for the College and in soliciting funds for its beginning. All through the years it has been its medium of appeal for assistance. In every crisis of the College, and there have been many, THE CHRISTIAN SUN has always come to its assistance and has been a ready helper.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has not only been a helpful means in securing assistance in the time of need, but it has been the medium of information to the Church. It has really been a means of education for the College. Through its columns it has been able to inform its constituency and the public in general of the need for education, of the plans and purposes of Elon College in meeting that need. It has also had the opportunity to stress the difference between secular and Christian education and to emphasize the extreme importance of keeping Christ on the campus and Christian principles in the classroom, particularly during this time of fear and of uncertainty.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has also proved to be for the College a medium of exchange in the field of education. It has not only had the free opportunity of expressing its views in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN but thanks to its editors it has found the views and principles of education held by other institutions freely and frankly expressed on its pages.

Elon College has learned to rely so strongly on THE CHRISTIAN SUN for the expression of its needs, purposes and plans that it would hardly know how to exist helpfully without it.

Elon College realizes that it is greatly indebted to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our church paper, and is willing at all times to assist whenever and wherever it is possible.

The circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN among our church people should be double what it is at present. Let us all work to that end.

ELON ALUMNI TO MEET.

On Saturday, February 7, at 2:00 P. M., in the Society Hall of the Alamance Building, the alumni of Elon College will hold their regular mid-year meeting. This meeting should be one of the most important in the history of the alumni association. The question to be settled is one that is in the mind of every member of our student body and many of our alumni: "When will construction of the Alumni Memorial Gymnasium begin?" In order that the readers may have a fuller understanding of what has happened within the alumni association we will reiterate the events leading up to this mid-year meeting.

At the mid-year meeting of the General Alumni Association in February, 1946, Dr. L. E. Smith presented to those present the "prospectus" of the million dollar expansion program as proposed by the board of trustees. The alumni then voted to accept the proposed gymnasium as their project and share of this expansion program. A campaign was begun to solicit funds from the alumni to erect this building. With the rising cost of construction and the overlapping that was occurring with our alumni who were members of the Christian Church (one hundred thousand dollars for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Endowment Fund was being raised at this time), our alumni fund was progressing very slowly and our gymnasium seemed further and further away all the time.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the General Alumni Association this fall it was suggested that we alumni face the problems confronting us and lower our sights to something that would be in our capacity to build. Mr. John E. Smith, president of the Greensboro Elon College Alumni Chapter, was appointed as chairman of a committee to investigate the possibilities and probabilities of building a gymnasium, that would meet the needs of the athletic department, yet be within our ability to finance and build. Mr. Smith and his committee reported back to the executive committee that they had very optimistic reports from several local contractors and that Mr. Lewis Kearns, an alumnus of Elon, had consented to secure the plans for the gymnasium as his contribution.

Mr. Kearns submitted the plans he had secured to the building committee at a meeting this past week. They call for a building 140 feet wide and 180 feet in length. Constructed of cinder blocks with brick veneer, which would be in conformity with the other building on our campus. There would be no basement, and the showers, locker rooms, classrooms, offices and storerooms would be located under a balcony that extended fifteen feet from the main walls. This balcony would encircle the building, but the greatest amount of seating capacity would come from the folding bleachers on the main floor. When not in use these bleachers could be folded back to the wall and there would be ample room for two regulation basketball courts for the physical education program. These plans have been submitted to several contractors for unofficial bids. This was done so the executive committee would have some idea of the cost to present to the alumni at their mid-year meeting.

At the present time we have over fifty-three thousand dollars in cash and signed pledges. There is over ten thousand dollars that has been promised verbally. It is the opinion of the members of the executive committee that if construction was begun on the gymnasium, that there are many others who would give that haven't. So if the bids of the contractors seem within reason the executive committee will recommend that construction of the gymnasium be started immediately. If the alumni present at this mid-year meeting accept the recommendations of the executive committee then construction of the gymnasium will be started and a concentrated effort will be made to raise the funds with which to pay the bills as they are made.

Missions The World for Christ

DR. DOUGLASS SPEAKS.

Need for achieving greater cooperation among Protestant denominations to meet the rising tide of secularism was the keynote sounded at the recent 40th annual conference of the Home Missions Council of North America at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. The group, representing 23 major Protestant denominations, met during the week of January 6-9.

Views expressed by the overwhelming majority of church leaders were highlighted in an address by Dr. Truman B. Douglass, executive vice-president of the Board of Home Missions of the Congregation Christian Church.

Though critical of the inherent weakness of the denominational system, Dr. Douglass expressed the belief that within ten years the majority of Protestant churches would be more closely united in their cooperative programs.

Elaborating his views on the necessity for Protestant unity, the church leader called attention to a "set of disabilities," which, he said, might descend on the church "like an avalanche."

"The deterioration of the rural church, the increasing decrepitude of the great centers of Protestantism, the loss of the intelligentsia, and organized labor—these are the ominous signposts pointing to disaster," he said.

Dr. Douglass maintained that lack of Protestant unity was reflected in the church's "disorder and feebleness" in meeting the "threat of anti-Christian movements."

He claimed the churches today "are fighting a series of guerilla actions instead of pursuing a grand strategy of offense. They cannot in their dividedness meet the onslaughts of alternative movements which are contending for the allegiance of mankind—movements which are closely articulated and are able to demand the utmost in discipline and obedience for the sake of the cause."

The critical situation faced by the Protestant church was also emphasized by Dr. Mark A. Dawber, executive secretary of the Home Missions council. He pointed out that despite modest statistical gains, more people lived outside the church's influence today than at any time in the nation's history. Secularism is destined to become the major faith of the future," he warned, "if it continues to grow at its present rate."

Dr. Dawber said that in New York City less than 10 per cent of the population comprise Protestant church membership, and that "all three major faiths in this city constitute minority groups."

He characterized the recent history of Protestantism as one "of retreat and retrenchment" and urged delegates to pool their resources in a carefully planned, courageous program to win the multitudes from paganism to Christ."

The urgent need for greater interdenominational cooperation emphasized by Dr. Douglass and Dr. Dawber was underlined when delegates sitting in more than a dozen committees drew up reports on specific ills in the home missions field.

The reports presented to the conference painted a realistic picture of mounting racial tensions, severe farm labor unrest, abuse by state and local communities of the American Indian, dislocation of rural and urban population, and the powerful growth of secular movements.

OUR SERVICE COMMITTEE.

[Extracts from address by Rev. Edgar H. S. Chandler of New York City, Director of the Congregational Christian Service Committee, recently back from Europe, speaking before the Congregational Christian Missions Council in Grand Rapids, Michigan.]

"The Congregational Christian Service Committee is dedicated to implementing the profound Christian concern of our people for providing relief; promoting physical, moral and spiritual rehabilitation and effecting reconciliation among the members of the broken body of mankind where the community has deteriorated through war or other social disasters. It works in areas of critical need regardless of race, class, creed or nationality.

"The Service Committee are convinced that the greatest days for significant activity in this field lie ahead. As the problem of relief may move towards solution with intergovernment aid, the problem of reconstruction and rehabilitation, especially moral and spiritual rehabilitation, begins in an intense form and it is anticipated that the Service Committee may render its most significant service in contribution towards the rebuilding of the Christian life of the world."

Mr. Chandler then reported on what the Service Committee is doing overseas. It is at work in England with all service representatives assigned on projects with the British Congregational Churches. Plans are being made for participation in a Work Camp with the British young people in the construction of a youth center in England in the summer of 1948.

In France the Service Committee program is concentrated at Le College Cevenol at Chambon located in the heart of the Protestant area of that country. Here the Committee has purchased and erected six buildings which provide living quarters for a considerable portion of the some 307 students. Most of these students are on scholarships and have been selected from war devastated sections of Europe.

"Many observers agree that Le Chambon is one of the conspicuous bright spots in the continent today. Service Committee representatives at present are engaged in the distribution of goods and supplies contributed through the Friendship Train."

Mr. Chandler said that in addition to three American workers in Italy there was a staff of thirty-six Italian assistants including doctors, nurses, and social workers carrying on a family rehabilitation program in Naples. This program consists of one community of cave people who have been moved into temporary housing units, one group now living in new housing provided by the Italian Government. Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

THE WOMEN PAY TRIBUTE TO "THE CHRISTIAN SUN."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the only printed medium which the women of the Southern Convention have for distributing information and exchanging ideas. It would be difficult to carry on our work without THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which carries announcements of our meetings, reports of work done, and plans and programs for the local societies.

As I visit women's groups, time after time I hear such comments as these: "We get material for our programs from THE CHRISTIAN SUN," or "We depend on THE CHRISTIAN SUN for material for all our programs." Others watch THE CHRISTIAN SUN for financial reports, to see who is ahead on giving—Eastern Virginia or North Carolina! Still others read THE CHRISTIAN SUN to get ideas for carrying on the work their local society—it may be a new way of raising money, a new type of fellowship meeting, or ideas for meaningful worship.

And while we are primarily interested in the material on the Woman's Page and on the Mission Page, we are churchwomen and that makes us interested in all phases of the work of our Church. Therefore, we read and try to digest all the pages of our Church Paper.

It is obvious that the president of every local women's group, as well as Conference and Convention officers, should subscribe to and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

One of the objectives to be attained by a Woman's Society is to secure subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN and other religious periodicals from the members of its church. If some women's groups have not yet done this, now would be the time to secure such subscriptions.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Young Friends:

It really is winter, isn't it? Has it snowed in your neighborhood? If so, the world becomes unreal and trees look tall like granite columns, bushes become great humped things all silent and big. As I write to you many snowflakes are falling but they are mixed with rain and we shall not be able to make a snowman, or snow cream which is a winter delight. Nearly all boys and girls like snow. In the city it becomes a nuisance for it is soon dirty from soot and passing cars, streets are slippery and dangerous, and frozen ruts make walking difficult, but that is only in the front of the houses. Nearly all Richmond homes have a back yard or garden. We have a tremendous one with trees and fruit trees and so we can make believe that we are country folk and enjoy our snow there.

Our pussy willow shows signs of budding, and our hydrangea bushes have a few dried blossoms left that swing like bells in the wind. The jonquils and hyacinths lie under the ground and would welcome a snow blanket for warmth. The tree limbs blow around looking as if they are shivering.

Now is a wonderful time to make a winter garden or an indoor garden. It is really a lot of fun. If you live in the country your materials are at hand, even in town it is not too difficult. First, you need a container, a Mason jar, goldfish bowl or a pretty shaped globe will do. The container will need a cover as the garden thrives on moisture, you may use a piece of cellophane taped on, a coffee percolator top, or a clear glass placed over the opening. Put a few stones or rocks in the bottom to keep it sweet or several pieces of charcoal.

You are now ready for the garden itself. Go to the woods and dig pieces of moss, trying to find ones with interesting little plants or ferns. They will be there, even under the snow. Find a few small plants, such as a fern or tiny holly trees, plant them in your dish, add a china figure, such as a dog or cat for variety, put in a generous sprinkling of warm water, seal the jar and keep it in a warm room. You will be delighted with the results.

If you can't get moss in the woods, it can usually be purchased at a florist shop along with tiny plants such as ivy or begonias. Sometimes the dime stores carry indoor dish garden materials. These make nice gifts for friends and shut-ins.

My cookie recipe at Christmas brought me many comments so here is another. If you do have snow—here's a snow cream one: Fill a large pan with clean snow, add a can of condensed milk, a few drops of flavoring (I'm partial to vanilla) stir well and eat at once, it's beyond description!

SOLITARY PLAY AND INDEPENDENT THINKING.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1948.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

On a drowsy afternoon in August, we waited near our car on a quiet side street while my husband—a doctor—made a call. It was not far from the packing house. Although small and set close together, the houses were not without attraction, for many were surrounded by old-world gardens.

Just across from us, on the turf by the side of the unpaved street, a fine-looking boy, about seven years old, was absorbed in constructing a railroad bed for his steel tracks. Of course, it would have been better for him to have been in his back yard, but perhaps there was no room there. We glimpsed brilliant zinnias against a background of kale, tobacco and cabbages.

One marveled that this boy played alone. Although right out among the other children, he paid no attention to them—nor they to him.

His terminal station was a large pasteboard box turned upside down, and it had cutout windows and a big arch for trains to run under. He had made a tunnel, deep cuts, and a high grade, and was building a bridge of stones. Finally, the sections of track were laid to his satisfaction, and we watched the train make its maiden trip over the new route and steam triumphantly into the station.

A large, pleasant-faced woman was rocking complacently on the little screened-in porch of the house in front of which this child was playing. We crossed over.

"It is quite unusual to see a boy play alone like this," I said to her.

"Joe's like other children," she answered, "wants to run with the crowd all the time. But I say, 'No, play alone sometimes an you'll learn to think out things for yourself.' If the boys had been here now, he wouldn't have planned that railroad. Joe's always workin' with machinery when he's alone. That's why we got him that nice train set for his birthday."

"But don't the other children bother him, wanting to play with him?" I asked.

"Oh yes, we'd a lot of trouble over that, but they've learned to stay away sometimes. You see, Joe's my youngest, an' I want him to be smart. Maybe he'll be an engineer," and her gray eyes lighted with pride.

"I've found out a lot while raisin' nine children. Oh, they've all done well; five are married. My big boys know how to use tools an' run machinery. They have good places in the packin' house; but can see now if they'd played alone more when they were children, using their own wits instead of depending so much on those of the other boys, they'd have had a lot more confidence in themselves today an' could have managed the men under them better.

"I've noticed that Joe is a good hand to think things out for himself, so I've set certain times when he has to play alone. He always argues and objects, but he soon gets interested an' won't leave off until he's worked out his ideas.

"But I've rested long enough. I must finish picking the cucumbers." Then she trotted off along the cinder path leading to her garden.

The keystone fell from the crude arch of Joe's railroad bridge when a heavily loaded train passed over it. The boy began arranging the stones another way—experimenting was a good introduction to the study of the principles he was to need later on in bridge construction.

Through a proper balance between group and solitary play, the latter secured under difficulties, this thoughtful, experienced mother was cultivating in her youngest son habits of independent thinking—the best possible foundation for self-reliance in later life.

Time is the one thing that can never be retrieved. One may lose a friend; one may lose and regain money; opportunity once spurned may come again; but the hours that are lost in idleness can never be brought back to be used in gainful pursuits. Most careers are made or marred in the hours after supper.

CHRISTIAN YOUTH CONFERENCE.

"To determine the power of Christ and His Church" is the purpose of the Christian Youth Conference of North America, which will be held next August 1 - September 5 at Grand Rapids, Mich., Rev. Dennis Savage, conference director, announced recently.

The Grand Rapids Conference is sponsored by the United Christian Youth Movement, which is the co-operative agency of forty Protestant denominations, thirty-four state councils, and sixteen other national youth-serving agencies. The U.C.Y.M. is administered through the International Council of Religious Education.

The theme of this their quadrennial conference will be "United! Committed! In Christ!"

"The program will include ecumenical worship services, daily Bible study, addresses by outstanding leaders, 160 discussion groups, afternoon denominational youth fellowship meetings, pageants, a concert, and recreation," Mr. Savage said in outlining plans for the conference.

The conference will consider youth's participation in the life of the church, the director stated. Questions such as the following will be discussed:

Who are we Christians?

Why are "things" as they are?

What's the answer? The church.

What's the answer? Personal commitment.

The answer applied.

Whence comes the power?

Previous North American youth conferences were held in 1936 and 1944 at Lakeside, Ohio. The four-year cycle was interrupted by the war.

STONER HEADS UNIVERSITY CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The Rev. James Lloyd Stoner of Bowling Green, Ohio, is the new National Director of the University Christian Mission, it has been announced by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Mr. Stoner is twenty-seven years old, one of the youngest men to serve as director of the Mission since its inception in 1938. He succeeds the Rev. Phillips Moulton who resigned to resume his post-graduate academic work.

The campus Mission is jointly sponsored by the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council and the United Student Christian Council. Last year week-long missions, with prominent speakers participating, were held on nineteen campuses, and in addition fifty-six other universities and colleges were served with some form of religious emphasis program.

For two years Mr. Stoner has been at Bowling Green University as Director of the Student Christian Fellowship, a unique inter-denominational group which includes the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., and six denominational organizations.

In 1944 Mr. Stoner was Associate Secretary of the University of Texas Y.M.C.A. The previous year he served as associate minister of the Church of Christ in Spring Glen, Hamden, Conn. He was educated in the public schools of Point Marion, Pennsylvania, and later attended Bethany College, West Virginia, and Yale University ('44).

OVERSEAS RELIEF COLLECTION BAGS AVAILABLE AGAIN.

Officials at the Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland report that Army barracks and duffle bags are again available for churches and families wishing to use them as a handy means of collecting overseas relief materials. These bags proved so popular that the Center was overwhelmed with requests and was compelled to send regrets to thousands of persons ordering them. Twenty-three thousand bags are now circulating in and out of New Windsor.

The bags hold approximately forty pounds of clothing and are the easiest means yet found for shipping. It is only necessary to fill them, tie them at the top and send them on their way via parcel post or express.

It is important that bags sent out to churches and individuals be returned as quickly as possible so that there will be little loss of time in turnover. As a result of using the bags, the Center reports at least 500,000 extra pounds have been received during the past three months over and above the normal receipts. During the month of November, 834,000 pounds of materials were received at the New Windsor Center and 784,000 pounds during December. During the month of December, 776,000 pounds of materials were processed and are now on their way overseas.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

WHAT WE KNOW ABOUT JESUS: HIS NATURE.

LESSON VI—FEBRUARY 8, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: You are the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matthew 16:16.

LESSON: John 6:35-40; 13:3-17; Col. 1:9-20.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Phil. 2:5-11.

The Bread of Life.

"Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall not hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." This is one of the "I am's" of Jesus, and it is one of the most meaningful. For the word "bread" in Jesus' day meant more than the word "bread" in our day, although we still refer to bread as the staff of life, and so called "bread-stuffs" still constitute one of the major articles in the things we are sending to Europe to feed the hungry and starving peoples. "Bread" in the sense in which Jesus used it meant for all practical purposes "the very staff of life" almost the sole article of diet. Jesus is saying that he is to the souls and spirits of men what food is to their bodies. He was simply saying in another way what John says in the Prologue of his gospel, "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." Jesus in another place said, "He that hath the Son hath life."

The primary need of men, if they are to be truly alive, is the life which comes from faith in, and fellowship with, Christ.

But bread must be eaten and assimilated if it is to do any good. A scientist might be able to weigh and measure a loaf of bread, and tell one the chemical components, and the caloric contents of a loaf of bread, and yet starve to death if he never ate any bread—bread here a symbol of food. Or an ordinary person, even a boy or girl, might look at a loaf of bread in a show-window, or smell its delicious aroma, but it would do such a person no good unless he ate the bread and assimilated it.

Just so with Christ, the Bread of Life. Men may discuss and argue about Him, and know ever so much about His person and work, and still be dying spiritually. Or again people might admire Him, honor Him, even serve Him, but unless they feed on Him, unless they assimilate Him, they are profited little. "He that cometh to me"—that is man's part. God offers Christ to us the Bread of Life. That is God's part. We must come to Him, take Him into our very hearts, feed on Him—that is our part. Alas that so many of us are starving to death, or living under par because we are not feeding upon Him who is the Bread of Life. He satisfies. And He alone can fully satisfy.

The Will of the Father.

"I am come down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me." It was not an easy thing to do the will of the Father. The Temptation Story reveals something of the inner struggle and the terrific tension as God's will and Jesus' will come to grips. But even more dramatically is this crucial conflict shown in the Gethsemane story. Here as elsewhere and always, the Son did the Father's will. The Westminster Catechism has it, as I recall, that "the chief end of man is to glorify God and to enjoy Him forever." The chief end of man and the glory of man is to do the will of God. And ultimately it is the chief source of happiness. When a man knows he is within the orbit of God's will, all is well.

It is not the Father's will, looking at it from another standpoint that men should be lost. "This is the will of Him that sent me . . . that I should lose nothing . . . for this is the will of my Father that every one that be- holdeth the Son and believeth on him should have eternal life." Men are lost with the knowledge of God, but not by the will of God.

The Supremacy and the Sufficiency of Christ.

The letter to the Colossians plumbs great depths and reaches great heights. There is hardly a richer, more spiritual book in the New Testament. And it is both ideal and practical, it deals with great spiritual principles and with practical duties. Its general theme may be said to be the Supremacy and the Sufficiency of Christ. In it Christ has the Preeminence. He is the "first-born of all creation." "All things have been created through Him and unto Him," He is "the Head of the Church." It has pleased the Father that in him should all the fulness dwell . . . that in all things he might have the preeminence." Furthermore he is God made manifest—"who is the image of the invisible God." Jesus is not only Christ, He is Lord, He is supreme.

And He is sufficient. That emphasis is also sounded in today's lesson as well as throughout the letter to the Colossians. "Strengthened with all power, according to the might of his glory . . . made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light . . . delivered us out of the hour of darkness . . . in whom we have our redemption, the forgiveness of sins." Friends, we have a great and sufficient Saviour. He is able to deliver and to keep. Our sufficiency is of God in Christ.

The Relation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the Christian Orphanage

I have been reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN for many years. It has always been a welcomed visitor. It came in my father's home when I was a lad in my early teens along in the early eighties. I can well remember when we had only THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Alamance Gleaner, a weekly paper printed in Graham, N. C. In those days we read everything in both papers, and we also had the Bible which mother often read to us children.

When I established a home of my own THE CHRISTIAN SUN came in my home and I enjoyed reading it and still enjoy it from week to week more than ever. It is filled each week with splendid articles which would do all of us good if we would just take the time to read them. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is an outlet through which all of our Institutions can get before our people and keep them informed.

How would the Christian Orphanage get along without THE CHRISTIAN SUN? Through our weekly letter we try to keep its readers informed as to what the Orphanage is doing and the progress it is making from time to time. We can keep our readers informed as to our needs, the things we want to do to make it a better Institution for the proper training of children. We could not do this without the aid of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The same thing goes for the College, the Mission Board, and the other Institutions of our church. THE CHRISTIAN SUN gives itself freely to promote all interest of the church.

It is to be regretted that more of our people do not take it and read it. I can hardly see how a church member can afford not to take it. How can one know what is going on in the Southern Convention and the progress it is making, if he does not take and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN? It is supposed to keep you informed and posted from week to week.

I understand that a special effort will be made during the month of February to secure new subscribers. I hope we will be able to double our subscription list at least. It can be done if we will make the proper effort and every subscriber, now, will secure at least one new subscription. Let us do it!

MISSIONS IN PUERTO RICO.

the fields of religious education and recreation.

The fourth and most recent line of endeavor has been the development of the Yuquiyu Rural Life Community. This community centers about Zaldondo, a rural resettlement project, located near the small coastal village of Luquillo. Here in the midst of 254 families, each located on a small acreage, we now have three university trained young families at work with the people, helping them to help themselves. On the edge of the project some fifty-five acres of good farm land and forty-five acres of pasture land, and a number of buildings, are being purchased by the American Missionary Association. This land, buildings and equipment will be available to the churches for a conference center, and to various socially constructive groups which may want to use them.

But especially this center will enable the skilled staff at Zaldondo to work with the people in crafts and recreation, public health and agricultural education, and in various kinds of cooperative enterprises. For example, in 1946, there was a great need for a school building. Money for materials was raised, and the local people donated 600 man days of labor. According to a letter from Zaldondo: "Little boys, eight and ten years of age, along with their fathers helped make concrete blocks by hand" and "there is now many an individual block firmly cemented with others to make the building, which carries the initials of some boy who this way has left the imprint of his enthusiasm in concrete."

While the work at Zaldondo will be at the grass roots level, the leadership there will also be in touch with progressive social and economic thinking about the internal insular problems, especially as they are related to the whole Caribbean area and to continental United States. The leadership there must be ready to work with the cooperative movement and with the democratic trade union movement. It ought to keep abreast with the newer forms of economic enterprise which are now getting under way on the island. It must be ready to work with every creative governmental agency without becoming involved in partisan politics. It ought to be considering what special contribution—if any—our work should be making to those who are migrating to the mainland.

If this seems like a big order it is because what happens to the poverty-stricken farmer at Zaldondo is directly related to an ever-widening circle of social and economic events. I would hope also that in some small way the leadership at Zaldondo will make a contribution to the education of the American public (or at least the Congregational Christian section of it) in the matter of the political, economic and social status of its stepchild.

While in Puerto Rico I sat in on a two-day conference of twenty of the leaders of our churches, the hospital, and Zaldondo, and was deeply impressed with their devotion, their competency, and their Christian orientation. Out of this conference came a series of recommendations regarding the future work; and some of those recommendations are already being implemented. With the extension and strengthening of our activities it was felt that all of them should be more closely integrated and that we should be ministering to the whole of man and to the whole of the life of the people on the island. Everyone at the conference, regardless of his special concern in the church, at the hospital, or at Zaldondo, felt an interest in and responsibility toward the other phases of the work.

Next year the American Missionary Association completes fifty years of testimony and work with the people of Puerto Rico. Certainly we can look back with gratitude for the great things thus far accomplished, and from them receive some measure of inspiration for the years ahead. As Ryder Hospital moves forward with its ministry of healing, as Zaldondo concerns itself primarily with social reconstruction at a grass roots level, as Blanche Kellogg School goes ahead with an educational program geared to meet a variety of pressing needs, as the churches continue to witness to the faith which gives the fullest meaning to all of the good works, and as each area of work is intimately related to the others, the A.M.A. has a unique opportunity to make a contribution not only to the life of the people of Puerto Rico but also, in some small way, to the missionary movement at large.

Through the increasingly indigenous service we have described above, there will be an opportunity to show that Biblical religion need not be obscurantist, and that efforts at social service and reconstruction need not be utopian and sentimental. Here is an opportunity to demonstrate that, for the Christian, the whole of life is potentially sacred.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Today, January 22, is a beautiful clear day, but they tell me a cold wave is on the way. We have just got to the end of one, which one day last week ran us down to nine degrees, the coldest weather we have had in a long time.

We had the longest drought last year we have ever had in any one year since I have been here. It lasted from early April until September 24, with one light season in June. Then the rain set in and it has rained almost continuously since, which kept us from sowing even one bushel of oats, because the ground kept so wet. It was the last days of December before we got any wheat in the ground. Pretty late to sow wheat in this section, but it was the best we could do under the circumstances. Sometimes we have a nice spell of weather in February, and sometimes it is then that we have the roughest weather during the winter. I have seen the weather so warm in February that the peach trees would blossom out, but in most instances they got killed later on.

But if we do have some open weather, there will be plenty of work to do on the farm. Spring oats to sow; fences to build; poultry house to build; plant beds to burn, garden peas to plant, and many other things to do that takes time.

If nothing happens we will have plenty of hog meat to run us this year. We have killed and salted down this season a little over nine thousand pounds. We have had four killings and have had very desirable weather at each killing.

At the earliest possible moment we begin to plant our early vegetables, and keep on planting from time to time so we can have green vegetables all summer if we have rain. All our children like vegetables and it takes quite a lot to eat. Then we can a lot of peas, corn, tomatoes, and beans; also berries if we happen to have a good crop. If the peach crop in the "Sand Hills" is good we can buy a truck load real cheap, and we sometimes can as many as a thousand gallons. In this work one has to plan long distance ahead to get things to work out satisfactory in the end. Then, too, it gives the children something worthwhile to do and is good training. Years ago when we first began to haul peaches from the "Sand Hills," they gave us all we wanted but they were culls, and we had to peel them by hand. Oh! how tired the girls would get peeling them. Then the truckers got in the game and bought all the culls. Now we buy the run of the orchard, which gives us a solid peach. Then instead of peeling them with knives we make a strong solution of "Red Devil" lye and dip them in it and it takes the peeling off, making the peach as slick as a peeled onion. We then run them through five tubs of rinsing water which gets all the lye off, and the peach is ready to be sliced and put in the can. Peeling peaches by this method will fill at least one-fourth more cans. It is real interesting work to can using the method we now use. Wish you could drop in sometimes when we have a canning day.

ernment and a third group being prepared to live in a new village which is being planned by the municipality.

The program includes a school for some 140 children who would otherwise be deprived of any educational opportunity, two dispensaries, and medical and social welfare services. The head of this mission is also the agency representative on CASAS, which is the government department responsible for housing and also has recently been elected a member of AUSA, the government department responsible for the allocation of relief funds provided by the United States Government.

In Greece two workers are at an impoverished Armenian village on the outskirts of Athens and at Elleniko, one of the most heavily bombed communities in Greece. Here they work closely with Pierce College for Girls, an institution of the American Board of Foreign Missions. The Service Committee representatives maintain close relations with the Near East Foundation, the Greek War Relief and Friends of Greece as well as with the American Board.

In Germany the Service Committee has its representative working with the World Y.M.C.A. Prisoner's Aid and the World Council of Churches. The Service Committee has recently voted to sponsor the work just now being begun in Stuttgart and Frankfurt areas. They will work primarily with youth in the Stuttgart area and at Vilbel, one of the men will have responsibility at Boys' Town, part of a strategic youth rehabilitation program being undertaken by the churches of Frankfurt.

At its New York headquarters the Service Committee is carrying on a sewing project in which materials are purchased, cut in New York, and consigned to various women's church groups throughout the country to be made into garments for distribution by service Committee workers, and other relief agencies, in parts of the world where there is desperate need.

"The Congregational Christian Service Committee during the past year (January 1, 1947 to January 1, 1948) has made the following shipments in bales: 62 to England; 29 to France; 58 to Italy; 89 to Greece; 10 to Finland; 11 to the Netherlands; 10 to Austria; 5 to Czechoslovakia; 57 to Germany; 5 to Poland; 15 to China; 5 to Hungary and 11 to Japan, making a total of 367 bales."

The Service Committee, in addition to the projects reported, has several interesting and strategic opportunities for work in Europe ahead of it. It expects to cooperate in a work camp at Arnheim in Holland which is to provide a youth center for Dutch young people and in a series of Work Camps to be conducted under the auspices of the Dutch Church in three centers of the British Zone of Germany next summer.

The World Council of Churches refugee department has requested the appointment of a representative of the Service Committee to head up work among refugees and displaced persons in Austria. The reconstruction department of the World Council of Churches has asked the Service Committee to consider a Christian democratic cooperative farm project in Bulgaria.

$59.00. If such graciousness does not move one's heart to God in thanks for such blessings I would not know what would. We feel so unworthy as we try to render service to these congregations from week to week. They are ever mindful of us and seem to appreciate our efforts so much we cannot help but rejoice. We pray God's blessings on them, and us, that we may be able through His power and spirit to do our best to reach every unsaved person in these communities for Christ. We need the prayer of all Christians that the Lord may guide us as we labor in His vineyard in order to do our best for Him and the Church. Great opportunities lie ahead, may we be able to grasp them, and be victorious through Jesus Christ our Lord.

NEWS AND VIEWS

On Monday night, January 26, Isle of Wight Congregational Christian Church unanimously voted approval of the Merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

The Sprunt Lectures will be given at Union Seminary, Richmond, February 22-27 by Drs. Frank Price on "Christian Missions in a New Era," Harris E. Kirk on "Preaching Values in the Epistle to the Romans," and Raymond I. Linquist on "Christian Sources of Confidence."

ELON COLLEGE MUSIC DEPARTMENT GAINS STATE-WIDE RECOGNITION.

On a Sunday afternoon, almost anywhere in North Carolina, you can tune your radio and hear the Elon College Music Department present their regular Sunday afternoon program. The program is from 2:00 to 2:30 P. M., and features the Elon College Choir under the direction of Professor John Westmoreland; and the head of the Music Department, Professor Fletcher Moore, as organist.

The program was inaugurated last year, as broadcast by radio station WBBB of Burlington, N. C. It was an immediate success. The listening audience was insistent that the program be revived when school opened last fall. At the present time there are twelve radio stations in North Carolina and Virginia that carry the program through the facilities of radio station WBBB.

The program, religious in its content, is interspersed with choir selections, the organ, religious readings, and special numbers by members of the choir. The Christmas program presented the last Sunday before the holidays was only excelled by the presentation of Handel's Messiah, which was also broadcast by station WBBB.

Under the guidance of Professor Fletcher Moore, who assumed his position as head of the Music Department last year, the Elon College Music Department is becoming one of the most outstanding of any college in the State of North Carolina. Its graduates are in great demand and are having no difficulty in finding positions in churches and public schools.

At the present time tentative plans are being made to take the choir on a concert during the spring vacation. However, no definite decision has been made at this time, and if such a trip is made, full details will be carried in the February issue of the Alumni News.

The students who are in the Music Department and those who are in the College Choir should take great pride in their accomplishments. We alumni are always proud of our Alma Mater and its accomplishments. To you, who comprise the group who presents these Sunday afternoon broadcasts, we wish to say that what you are doing not only brings credit to yourselves, but to your Alma Mater, her alumni, and friends.

THE SUPPORT OF ELON COLLEGE THROUGH THE APPORTIONMENT PLAN.

By STANLEY C. HARRELL.

There should be an increasing awareness of the responsibility of the Christian Church for education. Sound hopes for a better world of the future can be fulfilled only through a program of education based upon Christian principles and practices. Such a program of education can be formulated and promoted; but it is going to require the best thought and the most loyal support of Christendom.

Every local church is, at least potentially, an educational institution. It must educate if it is to maintain its own corporate life. It must educate if it is to be a factor in the development of a wholesome community life. The local church must be a training school if it is to have a part in the making of a Christian world.

The local church can and must meet a part of its educational responsibility through its church school. There is, however, a large part of the educational task for which the local church shares the responsibility, which it can meet only in cooperation with other churches. It is at this point that the Apportionment Plan of the Convention enters the picture. One of the Convention's larger apportionments is for Elon College.

The Apportionment for Elon College is the opportunity for every local church within the Convention to have a part in the larger educational program for which all churches are responsible. It is a medium through which every member of every local church may have a part in an enterprise which is absolutely essential if our world is to be the sort of world in which Christ's kingdom may come.

Education has become big business. It calls for tremendous expenditures of money. The demands for money to support the educational program will increase rather than diminish. Since the demands are so large, there may be those who feel that since they are unable to make large gifts that their giving will not be worthwhile. The truth is that the task requires so much that only by the combined efforts of those who can give small gifts and those who can give large gifts, can the needs be met. If your church can not meet its entire apportionment, it can certainly lend the encouragement of its best effort. A beginning now will make possible the doing of larger things in the future.

Investing Money in Elon College

By I. W. JOHNSON.

People are interested in Money. I saw a grandmother put a coin in the hand of her latest grandchild, with the remark: "If she clutches it in her hand, she will take care of money; if she lets it slip she will be careless and extravagant." The grandmother was taking an early appraisal of the Usually there is too much importance attached to the ability to make money. Basically, it is a special gift, although it can be cultivated by a knowledge of the principles of thrift, industry and investment.

The major problem for the Christian is the proper use of money. Unmake it." That is the opinion of the writer. Over a period of years the majority of people do not know what to do with money after it is in their possession. They either lose it, waste it, foolishly spend it or invest it at a loss.

The investment of money and the charitable use of it, is the most challenging phase of its importance. Giving may be a profitable investment with valuable returns and satisfying results. Such a possibility lies in the field of giving to Elon College. Naturally, Elon College, like an individual, uses some money from which no direct profits, in money, can be expected. The method of computing profit, gain or returns is to include the entire field in computing the values involved. The coal burned in the furnaces, the water in the tanks, the cutting of grass on the campus are parts of the whole, but they have a part and place as well as the erection of buildings, the employment of teachers or the transaction of business in the office.

At the present time Elon College is undertaking to erect, or to plan the erection of, adequate buildings for its growing needs. A larger endowment is greatly needed. The Special Endowment Fund of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial should be completed. These present efforts are offering to the public a great opportunity to invest in a great program. The word invest is used here advisedly: Money invested in buildings or equipment for constant use should be regarded as an investment, if its use is to help humanity in the years to come. A useful building has a long term value. An investment in an endowment fund, from which returns are to be received annually, is not "pouring money into a rat hole." It is inspiring to think that money given to Elon College, for buildings and endowment, will produce valuable returns to those who enroll as students, and through them to the social order of the future. Young men and young ladies of today will by these investments, be better citizens of the future because of these investments.

Elon College offers a fertile field for financial investments. The risks of loss are not great. It is operating on a sound business basis. Its financial investments are carefully made. Its financial methods are economical, conservative and carefully planned. The returns should be approved by thoughtful people who are interested in the future of young people. It pays to invest in Elon College. It is a good investment.

economic possibilities of the innocent child. This incident suggests an interest in money.

The first consideration is the possession of money. This may be by gift, inheritance, or by what is usually called making money. Money may come by the labor of one's hands, trading or investment. Whatever the means, or the method, there is an interest in having money. That is the stake of the gambler and the business man, the thief and the honest toiler.

der ordinary conditions one is face to face with the decision whether to use money for pleasure, personal needs, investment, or charity. Or to put it in other words, to spend, to invest, to save or to give it away. The thoughtful person may include all of these possibilities in the full and final plans of life. The consideration of these possibilities will probably lead to one conclusion: "It requires more sense to take care of and properly use money than it takes to

NEW DAY IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

The religious education movement came into its own three decades ago. Directors of Religious Education were trained and appointed to service. A supporting literature was developed. The new movement had its influence on theology and architecture. The churches were carried forward on the strength of a new optimism. All indications pointed toward the Golden Age.

Then came two world wars with their frustrations and disappointments. The religious education movement was thrown out of gear. Theological adjustments were necessitated. Our religious Utopia had proven to be a mirage.

We now face a new day in religious education. Some of the romantic ideas have been dissipated, so that more sober judgments should ensue. The best in the old curriculum, plus the new insights and equipment of today, a chastened and realistic theology, a sane and growing literature, together with enlarged departments of religious education in church related colleges and theological institutions, all point to a new day in this important field.

We need to accentuate this movement in our Convention. Thus Dr. William E. McCormack has stated the problem: "In religious education we have one more step to take. It still receives too little, and too little is expected from it. We shall do well to give young people the means for cultivating their souls. The churches can do no better than their members' support allows. We must find a way to lay this need upon the hearts of people so that religious educational facilities and personnel and techniques are supported splendidly."

How true this is, not only on the church level, but also on the level of higher education! A new day in religious education is at hand, provided we are willing to study the literature, rethink the theology, utilize the leadership, acquire the technique, support the agencies.

CHRISTIANITY ON THE CAMPUS.

The National Lutheran Council met in Richmond last week. The $4,000,000 goal of Lutheran World Action for 1949 occupied the center of attention in the body. The Lutherans have given approximately $23,500,000 in money, goods and clothing for overseas relief since 1940, it reported.

The Lutherans also gave attention to the educational bases of world action. Dr. Morris Wee, executive secretary of the Student Service Commission of the Council, declared that "Pagan influences on the American campus call for an aggressive student ministry of the Lutheran Churches of America. The spiritual vacuum which endangers all society in our time, is the fruit of an educational policy which for 30 years has ignored God." He emphasized the fact that "what the students think today will be the conviction of America tomorrow. The imperative before the church is to shape the thinking of students so that they will recognize religion as a necessary and accountable factor in education and all of life. The Christian Church must challenge the irreligious educational philosophy and make its religious witness on every campus in America."

Dr. Wee reported that the Student Service Commission is expanding its student work in the United States and Canada to achieve this goal. Lutheran student service centers are to be built on 35 major campuses and a special ministry is to be inaugurated.

THE PENDULUM SWINGS.

In the years between the two wars a very definite turn from religion was noted in many institutions of higher learning. Students rebelled against compulsory college chapel, and voluntary chapel services where held were rather poorly attended. The attitude of many college professors, particularly in the social sciences, was non-religious, if not openly anti-religious. Many of the more stable teachers, of course, maintained a more rational attitude. The governing bodies of numerous church colleges minimized their affiliation with any religious body and thus became known as non-denominational schools.

Now, we gratefully realize, the picture is changing. Colleges are asking for definite affiliation with the denominations responsible for their founding. President L. E. Smith is giving able leadership to this movement in our own denomination, which lists the following colleges: Beloit, Carlton, Defiance, Doane, Drury, Elon, Grinnell, Illinois, Knox, Marietta, Olivet, Pacific, Piedmont, Schauffler and Yankdon. Both religion and education should profit by this new alliance.

PRAYER FOR ELON.

Eternal God, the creator and giver of light, whom it is our privilege to love with all our minds, we invoke thy blessings upon our College. May it ever foster sound learning, honest industry, and pure manners. Forbid that its true light should be hid under the bushel of human error. Bless thou the president and the faculty. Make them the torch bearers of the truth and the standard bearers of thy cause. Guide thy sons and daughters through days of preparation, and then give them great tasks in thy Kingdom. Guard them from the selfish use of talents given them by thee.

We thank thee for the history of this institution, for those who founded it, and for all whose lengthened shadows have given it strength and permanence. May they see the travail of their souls and be satisfied. Mercifully forgive any sins of thought, word or deed. May it stand as the shadow of a mighty rock during all the stormy days that lie ahead. Increase its benefactors, multiply its beneficiaries. May it prosper as the green bay tree, yet forbid that it ever should be more concerned with the endowment of man than with the endowment of God. Crown all earthly knowledge with heavenly wisdom, and may all earthly studies lead to the perfect knowledge of thee, whom to know aright is life eternal. Amen.

Christian Education for Our Times

By W. W. SLOAN.

Education should be more Christian. Where? In the grade school? In the high school? In college? In the church? In the home? Probably every one of us answers "Yes" to each of these questions, but we immediately put another question, "How?"

We recognize that if education is to be made more Christian the good people of our churches are the ones who will do it. They want to do it, but again comes that bothersome question, "How—how have more Chris-the church and the home. Elon College has an opportunity to contribute to each of these agencies. Some students for the first time discover what Christianity is in religion classes in college; others get a much greater understanding of the purpose of Christ and the satisfying opportunity for service to mankind the Christian religion provides. But Christianity is experienced not only in the classes in religion. Elon secures teachers who are well trained in their field and are

An encouraging number of Elon's graduates become full-time religious workers. Most young people going out from Elon enter into the life of local churches. Possibly our churches should give more responsibility to their young people returning from college and when they are at home during vacations. They can't be expected to fit into the same old groove—they should have made some progress since they were high school boys and girls—but their advice and leadership should be sought.

These Elon products can help others get a more valuable worship experience, a more reasoned understandtian homes, a more efficient educational program in our churches, make our public schools more Christian?"

How can our college help us? It can't do the job itself, but it can give us suggestions, guidance. It can help by training young people to be efficient Christian leaders as they return to their communities as business men, physicians, dentists, teachers or ministers. It can also help the communities where our churches are located by giving aid and encouragement to readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN as they turn to teachers and students for help.

The three outstanding influences in our lives which make us more Christian or less Christian are the school, also Christianity is discovered in the history class, the chemistry class, the Spanish class. Christianity is experienced in the pupils' activities outside the classroom.

Such a background leads Elon graduates who become teachers in our communities to teach Christianity by example and word while teaching courses in Bible, arithmetic or football. Public school teachers are enabled to discover that although our American and Protestant tradition separates the church and state, it encourages Christian principles and living in the school room and in all the activities of pupils and their entire community. What one believes is that by which he lives.

ing of the Bible and an application of the teachings of Christ to the problems of the twentieth century. They can be used effectively in Daily Vacation Church Schools, in boys' and girls' clubs, in making use of the splendid Sunday school and young people's society materials now published by our own denomination.

The teachers of religion at Elon are not only highly educated and extensively traveled scholars. They are practical men who continue to serve as pastors in order to "keep their feet on the ground" and practice what they preach about making religion work in the local community. Thus does Elon College contribute to—

SUFFOLK LETTER.

January and February comprise the College Period in our Convention calendar. February—College month—has a fifth Sunday—College Sunday! Let us make that Sunday something special for our College. It is so unusual for February to have a fifth Sunday—the College Period can scarcely ever end with a “Fifth Sunday,” therefore, I am proposing that we, in all our churches, ask for one dollar from everybody that attends Sunday school of church on that day—and that this dollar be used for the construction of the heating plant.

Make it a free and friendly offering—given by all who would like to join in with such a gift, and with no aspirations cast upon those who cannot. It may be that some father would say to himself: If it is a good idea, and I like it—I shall give each member of my family a dollar to take to Sunday school today, and as we each go to our several classes we shall drop it in the “Fifth Sunday Offering for Our College,” with the designation that it be used on building and equipping the new heating plant. If he has more dollars than children he can make such upward adjustments as his generosity demanded, and vice versa. Big thing is to have him give freely and gladly. It is that sort of giving that blesses the giver and the cause to which it is given. That sort of giving is creative, and is good in the sight of God. Exodus 35:21—“And they came, every one whom his heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the Lord’s offering to the work.” Exodus 35:29—“The children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the Lord, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring, for all manner of work, which the Lord had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses.” Exodus 25:2—“Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering.”

“Yes, a “Fifth Sunday in February Dollar” for Elon, would make few of us any poorer, and would make many of us very much happier and richer, and our College that much nearer the completion of its heating plant. Perhaps you have already contributed—well, remember the verse: “. . . of every man that giveth willingly with his heart.” Of it your class would be proud, or your department in Sunday school, or your church. You would have done something definite for a great need at Elon right now—and gladly! The College could arrange it so it could be counted on your church’s gift to the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Fund if you so desire. The main idea is to give the dollar. Just say to yourself, if my dollar will help to put the new heating plant on the College campus, here it is. If all of us will say that it will help to the tune of several thousand dollars! God grant that thousands of us may!

WHAT THE CONVENTION EXPECTS OF ELON COLLEGE.

By W. E. WISSEMAN.

First of all our college should create a Christian atmosphere for all students who come on the campus. For if this distinctive Christian atmosphere is not present then the primary purpose of establishing a church related college is lost.

Besides providing a Christian atmosphere for all students, our college should recruit and train a group of young people for full time Christian service. Future leaders of our churches and of our Convention should be receiving training now at our College.

And finally our college should serve as a center for all activities of the Convention. A place for committees and boards to meet—yes! But more than that our college should be the hub around which the spokes of our Convention revolve.

ELON COLLEGE IS SUPPORTED BY OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

By H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Our Sunday schools can do much for Elon College. In the first place they can receive an offering for the College on every fifth Sunday during the year, or better still give the Sunday school offering of every fifth Sunday to the College. If every Sunday school in the Convention would adopt this policy a very substantial sum would be raised for the College. And the Sunday schools would be the better off. If your Sunday school has not adopted this plan, start with the fifth Sunday in February.

Then, too, the Sunday school can do a splendid bit of educational work in behalf of Elon. If every Sunday school would present a program about the College, as well as receive an offering for the College, our men and women, our young people, and even our boys and girls would learn more about the College and become more interested in the College. This plan would bear much fruit in the present as well as in the future.

And of course the Sunday schools can furnish students for Elon. In practically all our Sunday schools there are splendid young people, who are planning, or ought to be planning, to go to college. Our Sunday schools ought to encourage these young people to go to our College. In many instances these young people would return to furnish leadership and inspiration to the Sunday schools from which they went to college. But in any case the Sunday school would be helping our Church College and the Kingdom of God.

THE CONVENTION’S SUPPORT OF ELON COLLEGE.

By F. C. LESTER.

Elon College owes its life to the Southern Convention, as a child owes its life to its parents.

In like manner the Convention is indebted to Elon College. This child of the Convention needs financial support. Children expect it of their parents, and rightly so. Elon has always received financial support from the Convention, does now, and will continue to do so. It is easy, and truth, to say that the support is inadequate. But it is considerable. The $12,500 in the apportionments is only a part, usually a small part, of what the College receives from members of the Convention annually. In the main, it was the Convention members who bought the land, erected the buildings, supplied the furnishings, established an endowment, and who now give annually for the running expenses of our College. President Smith is not the only one who knows that more money could mean a better college. We all know that. But we also know that other “children” of the church must be supported. Sometime, perhaps, we will make it a fair divide.

But money is not the only thing children need. At a certain age they may seem to think so, but it is not true. They need guidance that is

OUR WOMEN SUPPORT ELON COLLEGE.

By MRS. O. H. PARIS.

I think perhaps we have come to think of Elon's needs too much in terms of money. Of course, that is a major necessity if the College is to expand, keep buildings in repair and meet the needs of students and faculty. But just as a person, in order to do their best, needs more than the cold, hard material things of the world, so does Elon College need more than the things money can buy. A person to feel secure in our world today must have friends—friends that they can rely on—friends that never let them down—friends that understand and defend them—Elon College needs friends.

Women don't always have a lot of money to give, but by just being real friends to Elon the women of the Southern Convention can make a really great contribution—a friend that speaks a good word for the College—a friend that defends it in the face of criticism—a friend that understands its ups and downs. We can be a friend and serve our College by seeing to it that our Church and Sunday school support it in apportionment giving. Only recently in answer to a letter sent out from the Woman's Board, appealing to the women of the Convention to see that their church brought up to date its Staley-Atkinson-Newman apportionment one woman writes, "I have checked with my pastor on my church's apportionment for the Elon College fund and I find that it is more than paid up to date." That's the kind of thing Elon needs—women behind the lines pushing—in homes, in churches and in communities. If enough women had been on the job in the local churches, Dr. Smith would not have had to announce that he failed in his efforts to secure the College's full apportionment of $12,500. Then, too, we can serve Elon in a very great way by influencing our own young folk and our neighbors' boys and girls to become students there. Really it isn't too much to say that the women of the Convention have it in their hands to "make or break" Elon College. We know its worth, we know it deserves our support, so let's be its friend—the kind of friend that Elon needs, the "friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

SEND BOXES TO ANGIE.

Many people might like to send a Friendly Service box to Miss Angie Crew in Kobe College, Japan, not only because it is one of our projects this, but because we are interested in Angie and her work there. She knows where the needs are and can use a great deal of thing we can send to her. The boxes can now weigh twenty-two pounds instead of eleven, as stated in the Year Book. Thirteen boxes have gone from individuals and from the Missionary Society in Asheboro. One individual in Winston-Salem has sent about eight boxes. See the Year Book for a list of things she would like to have.

Elon College Is Our Church College

WHY MY SONS AND DAUGHTERS WENT TO ELON COLLEGE.

By MRS. J. E. RAWLS.

I have three sons and five daughters. My husband died in 1938 from an automobile accident. He and I were students in Elon College. We knew something of its high standards of scholarship and training. Naturally, we selected our Alma Mater as the Eye and Ear Infirmary. Every one of my sons and daughters has received their collegiate education at Elon College.

Ann Rawls married Dr. J. B. Newman, a dentist of Burlington, N. C.; Mary Sue married James E. Parker, a Shell Oil distributor of Suffolk, Va.; Emmaline married O. M. Bentley, assistant district attorney for tian character. The scholastic standards of teaching, the spiritual emphasis in religion, the moral requirements in character building furnish a worthy basis for preparing our youth for life. This is evident in professional life, in business activity and in home building. I am glad my sons and daughters know the value of being graduates of Elon College. They, at college for our sons and daughters when they were ready for admission. It is our Church College, and loyalty to our own institution and church was involved in that decision. We believed that it compared favorably with other similar institutions in every vital respect. It has met our expectations.

My youngest son is a member of the senior class and plans to enter a medical college next September. Two other sons are physicians—one a member of the Lakeview Hospital Staff, Suffolk, Va., the other is taking post-graduate work in the New York

Birmingham, Ala.; Marcella married W. M. Saecker, an employee of Holland and Beamon Co. of Suffolk, Va.; Margaret at present is working at William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va.

Elon College has a high standard of moral and spiritual ideals for its students. This, coupled with its high standards and scholastic requirements, makes it a valuable institution in training our young people. Certainly I have been well pleased with our college. The money invested in a college education at our Elon pays high dividends in training and Chris-least, have had an opportunity to share in its ideals and to meet its standards of life.

God bless Elon College.

WE SENT OUR CHILDREN TO ELON COLLEGE.

By J. A. KIMBALL.

We sent our children to Elon College—first, because we did not know of any better college and perhaps no other college quite as good.

Second, because we wanted to be loyal to our church in every sense of the word. We wanted to be loyal to our college because it was founded by the men of our church, some of whom gave the best of their lives that Elon College might become an institution that the Christian Church could well feel proud of. Some of these men were Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. J. U. Newman, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and to this list I would love to add the name of Dr. W. A. Harper who to me was an "intellectual giant." And now Dr. L. E. Smith whom I could not fail to mention because he did so much to keep the doors of the College open at a very critical time during the life of the College.

We wanted for our children the best education we were financially able to give them. Naturally our first thought was Elon College, which seemed the answer to our wants and needs. A college not too large but that the student would come in fairly close relationship with the teacher. Close friendships in many cases resulted in a fine influence over the young minds. To me this is one of the greatest and richest characteristics of the small college. We sent all of our children, five in number, to Elon College and the spiritual atmosphere there was so fine that when one of them finished, he went to Yale Divinity School to prepare himself for the Gospel ministry. Hence we are glad we sent all of our children to Elon College.

I WENT TO ELON COLLEGE.

By FRED P. REGISTER.

I went to Elon College and I'm proud of the fact I learned to love her after I was actually a student there, having entered very prejudiced against her. With the exception of my own family, I went against the advice of all my close friends when I entered Elon. God had called me to preach, and I wanted to prepare myself. I was advised to the effect, that Elon would destroy my spiritual life, and take away the reality of God. I asked God to decide, and you may differ with me here, but I believe He did. I was thoroughly convinced I was going where God wanted me to. I am still convinced.

The first few months I was on my guard, because I was afraid some big heathen would reach down and shake my faith. I soon learned that the faculty was there to help me realize my plans. I've never known any one group of people so interested in me and my future. I appreciated the fact that they were concerned with me as an individual and not just as a student in their classes. This personal relation between professor and student is part of Elon.

I entered and left Elon a poor boy, and yet my relationships with the business office were pleasant. I was a working student my entire stay, and I wasn't branded as belonging in the lower caste either by students or administration—I looked to the dean and president for personal advice and help and I always received both.

I've yet to see the man who came to Elon and went away even with as little as he brought. A man who loses his faith at Elon surely didn't have much to begin with.

I'm proud to be an alumnus of an institution who says, who so ever will may come, had there been large financial barriers I couldn't have gone to school. I thank God for Elon and she has not only my best wishes, but my prayers, too.

MY SON GOES TO ELON COLLEGE BECAUSE—

By I. H. VICKERY.

1. The Christian Teaching.—The Christian training and influence at Elon College proves to be of great benefit to any young man in college. This feature is very necessary in the shaping of young men's lives of today when Christian men are needed so badly in the world. This advantage can only be obtained in a Christian college.

2. The Scholastic Teaching.—I am assured of his getting the best teaching at Elon because of the quality of her faculty, and close cooperation of the teacher and pupil at Elon. The pupil has the opportunity of presenting his individual problems to his instructors and receiving the necessary assistance. Any young man graduating from Elon College is assured that his is equal to the training he could get from any other college.

3. The Friendly Spirit.—It does one good to stand by and observe the friendly air that prevails among the student body and faculty. Every one seems to be carefree and happy, and to have a good word for the other fellow. You can not stay on Elon's campus long without catching this friendly spirit whether a student or a visitor. It is like one big family as each one helps the other in any way he can.

4. The Church's College.—Elon is a Congregational Christian College, and, being a member of the Congregational Christian Church, I feel it is only my duty to support my Church and her College by sending my son to Elon. Furthermore, I feel that it is a privilege to send my son a Christian College. It is the Christian duty of all the churches and their members to support and patronize their college, not only by sending their children, but financially as well. So I have not only a son at Elon College, but a daughter-in-law also.

WHY AND HOW TO RAISE THE STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

By JESSE H. DOLLAR.

It seems to me the "Why" is more important than the "How" in the above title. There are three reasons why the churches can not afford to fail in this undertaking:

1. Three of our great church leaders are named in the title of the fund. It is to be a memorial to them for what they did. It is to be a living memorial which will continue to serve the cause they loved and to which they gave themselves without reservation.

2. We said we would raise this fund in their memory! The effort has already dragged into an embarrassing length of time. The churches of the Convention voted enthusiastically to lost our desire to honor these men, but that we have not taken the time to see this program through our local churches. The longer this campaign continues, the more we should be embarrassed to have voted a movement, honorable in itself, to honor three great men and then allow it to drag into drudgery rather than having it climax in a great spiritual blessing.

3. This memorial fund should be raised in full, immediately, because the purpose of the fund is already being served through the establishment of an additional professorship in the department of Christian Education, but, it is doing so on borrowed money which Elon College advanced from its improvement fund and the money thus advanced is now desperately needed as the improvement program moves forward.

As to the "How raise the fund?" the plan might vary with every local church, but it is doubtful that the effort would fail in any case if each pastor and his deacons or finance committee, or official board would sit down and look at this opportunity and obligation and make their own plans. The difficulty is not to be found in the way to do it but in the willingness to do it. May the spirit of God urge that willingness upon every pastor, and every church that this which we have said we would do may be done immediately and joyously.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

To School Boys and Girls:

Many of you who read this page go to school. Some of you walk, some of you ride in automobiles and many more ride in a school bus. Traditionally children aren't supposed to like going to school but that is an exception rather than the rule I think. Many of the boys and girls whom I know tell about happy times and pleasant things they do in school.

This week many ministers and former students are writing in these pages about our church college. It has a very wonderful name. It is Elon College. "Elon" is Hebrew and means oak. It is well named. When I first visited there as a three-year-old the only thing I remembered was the great trees and the many squirrels that ran up and down their branches. Now I have a three-year-old who has been to see some of the same trees but a newer generation of squirrels.

My next visit left impressions of happy young men and women who went about the campus. Later I learned that this was "school spirit" and Elon is noted for its fine spirit. To be able to enter a college a student has to prepare very thoroughly. Half-hearted attendance, lack of preparation for lessons and not learning how to concentrate will guarantee failure in college if not in high school.

Many of you are already planning to attend a college. Some of you may be considering Elon. It has beautiful brick buildings and is small and quiet. That is, the town is quiet, college students are usually rather noisy. I was myself! Its traditions are great. The greatest recommendation for Elon is the fact that it is a church-sponsored school. That means that every student is an individual, personally helped and given the support not only of his family and friends but of his church. Church-related colleges are usually small and family-like.

I hope that many of you will enter college, not just for the factual information you will gain, but because it equips one to think through problems without becoming scared or panicky. It enables one to use the information at hand to the very best advantage. Christians should be fearless and a Christian with a college education is the strongest and bravest person.

If, however, you should fail in school, do not let it "get you down" as we say. Honest failure is a real part of life. Repeating a subject will help you in many ways. I hope that if any of your parents read this that they, too, will remember that to fail is often to succeed. Great men have failed, all of us do, often we fail in some way every day. Failure is one of the greatest subjects in all of life. It can ruin you, or help you. Use failure if it is ahead of you and this is mid-term in school year.

Not all people need to go to college or to go for four years, but if you can or do, make every minute count. It is a time for work, not frittering!

GROWING UP WITHOUT DADDY.

By J. C. BAKER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Young Mrs. Clement looked sadly at Paul and Sally, happily skipping home to her. "Poor youngsters!" she murmured, choking back a sob. "How can they be so merry when their daddy is dead!"

"Momee! Momee!" they cried, romping onto the porch; then they smothered her with noisy kisses.

"Can I have a bike?" Paul, nearly seven, asked breathlessly. "I could carry the groceries from the store on it for you."

"'May I, darling,'" Mrs. Clement corrected gently. How was she to tell him a bicycle would cost more money than their limited budget would allow?

"And I'd ride it, too," five-year-old Sally added importantly.

Visions of broken bones and doctors' bills flashed before Mrs. Clement's anxious eyes. "Don't they realize we're all alone in a heartless, cruel world," she thought, angry in spite of herself.

"For my birthday next week?" begged Paul, his dark eyes—so like Paul senior's—showing the urgency of his desire. "All the other fellows in my grade have bikes."

"No!" Mrs. Clement snapped. "Do you think I'm made of mon—?" She stopped, deeply ashamed of herself.

Paul drew back, a hurt look darkening his handsome little face. Sally burst into sobs. "I want Daddy!" she cried.

"My dears!" Mrs. Clement drew them close. "Mother didn't mean to scold. It's just that we haven't very much money and—"

"Why do daddies have to die then?" Paul asked reasonably.

Suddenly, Mrs. Clement realized she must not frighten the children with her grief and worry. She could see that they were already wondering whether they would be able to buy food enough for their meals.

"Let us think about lunch now," she answered, giving Paul's hand a reassuring pat and mustering a gay smile. "We are to have dumplings! Nobody is going hungry or cold. But our money is like a jigsaw puzzle; each dollar has to go into some particular place."

And she told them a little—just enough to set their minds at ease—about their finances, making it sound like a game. When Sally would be older and in school all day, Mrs. Clement explained, Mother would get a part-time job, and then things would be somewhat easier. Even children no older than Paul and Sally could, their mother found, understand why the major part of their income must go for a comfortable home, suitable clothing, and nourishing food.

Without any loss of lightheartedness, both children became much more careful not to waste electricity, food, and school supplies. Then, one day they came to her with a carefully thought-out suggestion.

"Mom," began Paul excitedly, "we've been looking at the prices of different things in the markets. Couldn't we buy vegetables and meat and breakfast foods that would be just as good for us, but cheaper?"

"Perhaps we could," was the answer.

"Then, in a little while, Brother could have his bike!" put in Sally.

"To be fair I think we must divide the savings," answered Paul bravely. "Momee ought to have a wrist watch; other mothers do. And Sally ought to have something nice."

"A big doll!" exclaimed the little girl rapturously. "But you can have your bike first, Paul."

Mrs. Clement saw that her children were attacking their problem in a sensible manner, so she encouraged them. She realized that to be happy they must, as far as possible, live as did those children both of whose parents were still with them; and she determined she would never again allow the emotional stress of her deep sorrow to make the children feel underprivileged and insecure.

THE CONVENTION'S SUPPORT OF ELON COLLEGE.

tempered with wisdom and firmness and love. Yes, our College needs guidance by the Convention, if it is to be a child of the Convention and secure financial support.

And the College needs the love of the Convention. Suspicion and aloofness will freeze the heart of any child, whether a person or an institution. When we really come to love our college, it will be easy to get students and financial support.

MY APPRECIATION OF ELON COLLEGE.

By MRS. A. W. ANDES.

Since I was a small child I have been proud of our College at Elon. I can remember vividly from years ago to the memorable occasion when past presidents and representatives of the College would visit our local church. Our people were enthusiastic supporters, recognizing the College as an integral part of the Southern Convention.

As I grew older I began to think about attending Elon College myself but when the time came circumstances denied me this opportunity. Later, however, I married a graduate of Elon and a minister of our church. My husband became a trustee of the College, and in this way I came into intimate contact with its problems and ideals. My husband was proud of Elon, of his connection with it, and he believed in it with his whole heart and soul.

It was only natural then that when possible my children should become students of Elon. Two of them as students there entered the ministry and afterwards attended seminary. It is not for me to evaluate their work, but I have faith that they along with many others from Elon will make worthwhile contributions to the work of the Southern Convention.

I have long known the officers of Elon College, especially its president. Their labors and fortitude in the face of adversities and difficulties merit our praise and admiration.

For very personal reasons, then, I have a great love for and interest in Elon. My own several visits there at conferences of various kinds have deepened and increased this love.

But aside from these sentimental attachments I feel that the College is indispensable if our Convention is to make progress. Many of our ministers come from there, and that is certainly important, but the College also prepares enlightened, intelligent, and interested lay leaders. Upon them many of the responsibilities of leadership will fall. Nowhere else could this training be given so effectively as at Elon.

While walking across a university campus some time ago with my son, I remarked upon the fine plant, the splendid buildings, and beautiful grounds. "Yes, mother, this is a wonderful place, but I am thankful that I had the privilege of attending my own church school. There we knew everyone, the other students, the faculty, and the administration. The inspiration of those contacts is lacking here."

Elon College is dear to me. What it has meant to my family cannot be reckoned. I believe the same could be said by many others who have seen or who have been touched by the uplifting influences which come from Elon.

MY CHURCH SUPPORTS ELON COLLEGE BECAUSE—

By ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

Elon College is a Christian institution. Elon College prepares missionaries, teachers, ministers and countless other young men and women for life's duties and responsibilities in various fields of activities, including that of home making.

Elon College was first conceived in the minds of our Christian leaders as a training school for ministers who might be taught the arts and the vital truths of Christianity. From this humble beginning it was seen that an ever expanding program was necessary to include young people in all walks of life. Through the years of her history, now almost three-fourths of a century, most of our ministers, missionaries, teachers and other Christian leaders in our churches of the Southland have received their training at Elon College. This has been especially true of pastors and teachers, in the record of whose work all of us might justly take pride.

Elon College is ours. Every church should be proud to be part owner of such a valuable institution—one that has made and is still making a large contribution to the Kingdom of Christ by helping to develop Christian character and in the field of Christian Education.

Secondary, of course, is the consideration of Elon College's physical plant, valued at more than two millions of dollars, now debt free and owned by the churches of the Southern Convention. I am happy to think that my church is part owner of this worthy institution.

And last, but by no means least, my church supports Elon College because our church of today craves for the Church of tomorrow that preparation of mind, heart and hand which will make real in every avenue of life, Christian experience and Christian service.

A LAYMAN'S APPRECIATION OF ELON COLLEGE.

By GEORGE T. GUNTER.

As a layman why should I appreciate Elon College? At the present time I think that I can appreciate Elon more than at any time in the past. First, I can appreciate Elon because it is our college and for what it has done for me.

In the second place, Elon has played such an important part in the training of our leaders—and especially our ministers. Let me here mention my home church. During my life we have had one minister who was not trained at Elon College. All of the others obtained their important training (or part of it) at Elon College.

MINISTERIAL STUDENTS AT ELON COLLEGE.

By C. BAXTER TWIDDY.

The Ministerial Association, this year, has around twenty-five active members who are studying and preparing themselves for several fields of Christian service. Approximately fifteen of this group represent those preparing for full-time ministry. There are others, not active in the M. A., who are also planning to become ministers and religious education workers, but are unable to attend regular Monday evening meetings. A complete total would reveal more than forty ministerial students at Elon College, representing several denominations.

An effort has been made on Monday evenings and will be made during the year to discuss practical phases of service for the minister, as well as for other workers in the Church. Four meetings were given to the discussion of worship in the Church, with emphasis on music, symbols, meditation and prayer. At future meetings there will be speakers and discussion on "The Minister and Youth," "Place of the Minister's Wife," "Recreation in the Church" and other subjects important to the "preparing" minister.

An offspring of the Ministerial Association is the Friars' Club, organ-

THE POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

LESSON VII—FEBRUARY 15, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: You shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you.—Acts 1:8.

LESSON: John 14:25, 26; Acts 2:1-4; 3:1-4:31; Galatians 5:22-26.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Eph. 6:10-20.

The Promise of the Holy Spirit.

On several occasions, Jesus assured the disciples that God would send the Holy Spirit to them after He had gone from them. "But the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, He shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I said unto you." This is only one of the several instances in which Jesus assures His disciples that after He has gone from them in the flesh, He would be with them in the spirit, in the presence of what He called the Comforter or the Holy Spirit. Furthermore He told them that it was expedient that it should be this way. While He was with them in the flesh, He was limited by the flesh. But in the Spirit He would be everywhere and always available to them.

The Function of the Spirit.

The Holy Spirit was to perform many functions. For instance in the scripture for today's lesson, Jesus says the Holy Spirit would teach His followers, and also remind them of the things He had told them. On another occasion Jesus said that the Holy Spirit would "testify" or bear witness of Him. Again He said that the "Holy Spirit would reprove or convict the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." The Spirit was to "guide them into all truth," and would speak what God would have Him speak. Furthermore the Spirit "would show them things to come," and take the things of Christ and sow them unto His followers. The Holy Spirit above all things was to give them power. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." And that power was to be a source of joy and of courage and confidence. In short the function of the Holy Spirit is to do what God Himself, through Christ did and is trying to do in the world.

The Coming of the Spirit.

Pentecost marks the anniversary of the coming of the Holy Spirit, the fulfilment of the promise of Jesus in regard to His coming. Warned by Jesus to wait until they had been endowed with the power of the Holy Spirit before going out to do His work, they had been of one mind and in one accord in the Upper Room, where they spent much of the time in prayer. And then the Spirit came. The account of His coming has some strange factors in it—a sound as of a rushing mighty wind, cloven tongues like as of fire, medley of tongues familiar to men from all parts of the world. These audible and visible accomplishments of the coming of the Spirit need not overly concern us. They did not overly concern the writer of the story himself. For towering above them and giving meaning to them was the fact that the living God came in personal presence and power to be with His people. The Spirit of the living Christ became everywhere and always available. That is the central and meaningful fact about Pentecost. It might be added that Pentecost, like the Resurrection, affords us grounds for faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. He is not slack concerning His promises. He said He would rise again the third day from the dead. And He arose. He said He would send the Holy Spirit in due time. And the Holy Spirit came. His word is the word of God's Gentleman. He can be trusted anywhere and everywhere and always.

The Work of the Spirit.

Space forbids an extended discussion of the work of the Holy Spirit. But as one reads the Acts of the Apostles carefully he discovers some interesting and stimulating things. For instance the apostles found a new fulness and fineness of life when the Spirit came. They lived more abundantly, more radiantly, more vibrantly because they were filled with the Spirit. And they had a new joy and happiness. There is a great note of joy and praise running throughout the pages of this stirring book. They were radiantly happy men. And there was an amazing spirit of courage in their hearts. Indeed this spirit was so manifest that it amazed the rulers before whom the apostles were arraigned. It was when they perceived the boldness of Peter and John that they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus.

One suspects that our lack of courage for Christ is due to our lack of the Spirit of Christ. Finally the Holy Spirit gave the disciples a sense of power, amazing power, transforming power, power the possession of which left them, as well as others dumbfounded. This power expressed itself through them by signs and wonders and mighty works. "Ye shall receive power," said Christ, "after the Holy Spirit has come upon you." And they had power and to spare.

What was the secret of this amazing experience? How did they get and keep the Spirit? In brief they got the power by prayer and kept it by obedience. They surrendered their lives to God, waited upon Him, and obeyed Him. And then as now, God released His power through those through whom His power can express itself. Let us not think that the Holy Spirit is the special possession of a few select men, or that its power was reserved for men who lived nineteen hundred years ago. "How much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to those that ask Him," said Jesus as He talked with His disciples. We, too, can have the Holy Spirit if we ask for Him and if we obey Him.

The Fruit of the Spirit.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control." Note that Paul does not say fruits, but fruit. It seems to indicate that we ought not to be content with one or two, but that all nine are to be in the Christian's life. This is a rather disturbing verse of Scripture, a searching, stabbing word that goes direct to the heart. How much of these qualities of life do you have in your heart? If these are the fruit of the Spirit, then the absence of them must mean that to say the least, we do not have the measure of the Spirit to bring forth this fruit of the Spirit. A Christian is not simply a person who is negatively good; he is good for something, he brings forth the fruit of the Spirit. And it is only as he abides in Christ who is the fruit of the Spirit. And it is only as he abides in Christ who is the Vine that as a branch he can bring forth fruit and that His fruit will remain.

Life is the acceptance of responsibilities or their evasion. To every man the choice is continually being offered, and by the manner of his choosing you may fairly measure him.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

ward making education more Christian in the church.

Most Elon young people eventually establish homes of their own—a surprising number have done so before they became Elonites. It is fitting that the college should stress a course in "Marriage and the Home." Seldom will children be religious if the parents are not religious. Most of us do more real learning in the first five years of our lives than in the next seventy. This learning is mostly in the home. It is there that our basic attitudes are formed. Christian education for our time must emphasize

TRAINING FOR CHRISTIAN WORK AT ELON COLLEGE.

By FERRIS E. REYNOLDS.

Should training for Christian work be confined to the circle of those who have committed themselves to full-time Christian service? The emphasis upon specialization, which is a part of our modern temper has called for a definite "yes" in answer to this question. All too frequently it has been taken for granted that the only people who need to know the Bible, our Christian heritage, and the arts of service in Christ's name are those who intend to become professional leaders in religion. Those who pur-

Why should we spend the time, energy, and money to provide Christian training for our young people? Why should we urge our young people to cultivate the arts of Christian service? Because we believe in the "Way of Life" advocated by Jesus of Nazareth; because we believe that the Founders of our Church and College were right in affirming that training for life means training for Christian work; and, because we believe that to affirm these things and to pursue policies that deny them is a sin against God's truth. Christian training, therefore, at Elon College is not an affair of one department or one section of the student body. It is the

the home. Is religion something for every member of the home, or is it a childish thing? Are God, the teachings of Jesus, a scale of values talked about in the home? The homes of graduates of Christian colleges are seldom broken by divorce. In homes of such educated Christians religion can be talked about openly, honestly, not furtively, fearfully. Christianity can be practiced joyously, intelligently, for in the educated Christian home the aim of Jesus is fulfilled, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Elon contributes to Christian education for our time by enabling the school, the church and the home to be more Christian.

sue the other vocations of life have all they can do to make a success in their own chosen life's work without "dabbling" in other fields.

Now, have we accepted generally the proposition that training for Christian work should be pursued by professional leaders only? No, we have not agreed to this—consciously. In theory, at least, we are convinced that Christian training is actually the same as training for life. And yet, how successful are we in withstanding those powerful influences that urge us to deny our convictions when it comes to matters of actual policy? That is the really significant question as far as the future of our Church and College is concerned.

foundation—purpose of the entire college program.

Does this mean that the training of our candidates for the ministry, the mission fields, and other full-time Christian vocations is to be neglected? Not at all. It means rather that the group from which these leaders may be drawn is increased from a few dozen to hundreds. It also means that our Christian leaders will have in their churches lay people who are trained in the arts of Christian service. Seeing we are committed to this high and holy task of training the youth of our church and country for courageous and effective Christian living, how shall we escape, if we neglect so great a calling?

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

This is the thirtieth of January and we are still greeted with snow, sleet and freezing rain. We have been greeted with this kind of weather since Christmas Day. The roads have been so slick most of the time that it makes traveling dangerous. So far, the Orphanage children have met with no accidents or falls that have given them any trouble. The barn boys have been very much handicapped on account of the continued cold and rough weather in handling the herd of cattle, but they have not shirked their duties at all. Each one has done his full duty without a single word of complaint.

They have been further handicapped by our dairyman, Mr. Hilliard, having pneumonia during all this rough weather. He has been very sick for nearly two weeks, but I am happy to say he seems to be on the road to recovery at this writing.

I also want to give credit to the little boys who feed the hogs. You can realize that feeding hogs in bad snowy weather is a very undesirable job. But they have been faithful, too. We must not forget the little boys who roll in the coal and fill the stokers. They have been very faithful, also, in keeping them going and the buildings have been kept warm and comfortable, except when something happens to the stoker. Sometimes a belt will break or a pin will shear off and there is some delay in fixing it. This, too, is unpleasant work in bad weather.

Little Jackie Wilkins had his fourth birthday on January 26. "Jackie," as we all know him here, is a stout, ruddy-faced little boy. I think he is the most popular child that we have ever had here. Everybody loves "Jackie."

The Huber Class in our South Norfolk Church has adopted him to clothe, and they also send him presents from time to time. "Jackie" has a friend in Richmond, Va., who sends him different things from time to time. She sends him red-stick candy, which pleases him very much. A lady in Charlotte, N. C., sends him presents to make him happy, and a good lady in Alabama is interested in "Jackie," too.

But getting back to "Jackie's" birthday. We wanted to make him happy on his birthday, and money had been sent in to give him a birthday party. I had the bakery to make him a beautiful cake and I bought ice cream for the occasion. It was a beautiful cake, all dressed up. On top of it was "Happy Birthday, Jackie" and we also had four little candles on it. We allowed "Jackie" to invite his little sister and four other little friends to enjoy the occasion, and they all did look very pretty sitting around the table. After they were seated the rest of us who were looking on sang "Happy Birthday" to him. I think "Jackie" enjoyed every minute of the occasion and was very happy. Thanks to the friends who made it possible.

ized this year especially for the "minister" with the purpose of discussing the many problems that must be faced and solved. It meets informally every two weeks with our sponsor, Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, of the Religion Department.

Several of the members are doing part-time work and others full-time work as ministers. One is religious education director at a nearby Congregational Christian Church. More will be taking part-time work during this year.

Well trained ministers are needed today as never before. It is while they are at Elon that they receive much of this training. We pray that we shall be prepared to do the job well.

FULL TIME CHRISTIAN WORKERS BEING TRAINED AT ELON COLLEGE.

By SHIRLEY C. JOYNER.

Frequently we are prone to feel that the things about us are not progressing as they should; but the progress of Elon College is evident in many ways and it is about one of these signs of progress that I write.

That sign of progress in the college, which we are exceedingly proud to report, is the increasing number of girls enrolled for the purpose of preparation for full time Christian work, either as religious education directors or missionaries in foreign fields. There are now eight girls in school striving to secure the best education possible to prepare them for the varied fields of full time Christian Service. These girls are outstanding on campus and class for their friendliness and dependability. The Ministerial Association has very graciously welcomed the girls as members and in return they have proven themselves by taking a very active part in all its functions.

The subjects taken by these girls are quite similar to those taken by the Ministerial Students, and they are under the same capable leaders—with Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, Chairman, Dr. W. W. Sloan and Dean D. J. Bowden.

We, as tomorrow's full time Christian workers, appreciate your many thoughts and prayers and our prayer is that we may utilize the knowledge obtained here at Elon College to greatly multiply the Kingdom of God.

Harsh counsels have no effect; they are like hammers which are always repulsed by the anvil.

Pilgrim Fellowship

"Youth at Work in the Church"

FOR YOUR LENTEN OBSERVANCE.

Sometime this week you will be receiving from the Field Woker's Office a packet of materials for Lent. I have just finished re-reading the worship services, the letters from the officers of our national Pilgrim Fellowship, the needs of the still suffering countries of Europe—and I was struck again with the title: "Our Bitter Need—and Theirs." Perhaps you won't understand the title on first looking at it; but you will see its significance when you have read all the packet through, from the first page to the last.

I believe this is one of the finest and well-worked-out pieces of material I have seen for young people's groups. There are five services of worship and excellent thoughts for discussion, devotional messages, and presentation of facts.

Lent begins on Wednesday, February 11 and continues through Easter. It is one of the most significant periods in our Christian calendar—we must make more use of it!

If you'll remember, in the Plan Book for young people's societies, we suggested that in other suggestions for February you study Lent and its meaning. This would make a lovely way to begin your Lenten Season. Then, continue with "Our Bitter Need—and Theirs."

Another piece of Lenten material ready for you at the Pilgrim Press, at 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass., is Lenten Devotions, which we recommended in the Plan Book. They are five cents a copy; $4.00 a hundred. Using Lenten Devotions for Young People will be another way in which to enter the time of Easter and the Day of Resurrection.

YOUTH SECRETARY VISITS U. S.

Miss Jean M. Fraser, Secretary of the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches, arrived in the United States aboard the Queen Mary which docked at New York City recently, it was announced by Rev. William Keys of the American Committee for the World Council.

Miss Fraser, an internationally known youth leader, will spend six weeks in the United States studying American youth work and making preparations for the youth activities of the first assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held at Amsterdam, Holland, in August of this year, Mr. Keys stated.

Miss Fraser has had wide experience in international youth work and took a leading role in the great world conferences of Christian youth held at Amsterdam in 1939 and Oslo in 1947.

Miss Fraser will represent the World Council of Churches at the annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education in Grand Rapids, Michigan, from February 8 to 14. While in the United States Miss Fraser will study the work of the United Christian Youth Movement and local and state Christian youth councils. Miss Fraser also plans to consult with UN leaders at Lake Success on youth problems.

A native of England, Miss Fraser was active in the English Presbyterian Church and the British Student Christian movement before her appointment as Secretary of the Youth Department of the World Council in June of 1947. She has served as Youth Secretary of the British Council of Churches.

The 1948 Lenten Message

By TRUMAN B. DOUGLASS, Executive Vice-President

The Board of Home Missions

With what strange mingling of joy and perplexity we ministers welcome the coming Lent! Joy: because without explanation or apology we may ask our people to turn their thoughts toward the deepest things of our Christian faith. Perplexity: because in the presence of these supreme events—commissioned anew, by the coming of this season of devotion, to make known the heart-shattering truths of our holy faith—all of us feel as inarticulate as little children.

Yet with what gladness we may enter this season when we are upheld in our ministry by a spirit of waiting and expectancy in the life of the whole Church! We are freed from the nagging of the peripheral and the incidental. The sponsors of indubitably good but somewhat trivial enterprises seem to understand that during Lent we are about high business, and they do not ask us to "speak a word" in behalf of the neighborhood garden club. The cry for contemporaneity—the demand that our sermons be as immediate in their reference as the newspaper (and as superficial)—is less insistent, and thirsty souls are willing to taste again of the cup dipped from the well of living water. We are permitted to speak the dear language of our Homeland. Words like "grace," "judgment," "redemption"—distinctively Christian words, for which there are no secular synonyms—come naturally to our lips.

All this is a part of the unfettering of faith and devotion which comes with the Lenten season. For we cannot draw near the Cross of Christ and imagine that the trivial is important or that the things which look well under the klieg lights can endure the white radiance of eternity.

But how shall we speak intelligibly of the realities which move our own hearts with passion and awe? Dare we make even an attempt to communicate the fullness of Christian faith, undiluted by the shrewd qualifyings to which we sometimes resort to an effort to make it "acceptable" to the mind of our time? The world's way of apprehending truth (as an enhancement and enrichment of the self) is utterly alien to the way in which the truth of the Gospel apprehends us (and shatters the self).

Some years ago, Professor William Pepperell Montague published an essay in which he contended that every man, and every church, needs two creeds. The one creed will be said. The other will be sung. The creed which is said will be precise and discriminating as disciplined and incisive thought can make it. It will be rigorously honest: therefore it may often exhibit glaring omissions and confessions of uncertainty. But the creed which we sing will be vibrant with the fullness of a faith opulent in trust and hope and love—which go so far beyond our poor knowledge, which is always "in part." It will sing not only our individual faith but that of the whole Community of Faith, the Church which began and ever renews its life in the certainty that God has disclosed Himself to us in the crucified and risen Christ.

Let us have no doubt that it is by proclaiming its faith in such a way as to awaken the response of faith that the Church renders its supreme service to the world. The deepest need of our stricken humanity is not for more knowledge, not even for more humanitarian concern. It is for faith. The most dangerous contender for the allegiance of men is not Communism nor any other organized movement; it is rather that nihilism which has seized these spirits of millions of our fellows, which asserts quite simply that the meaning of life is that it has no meaning. It has gripped not only the despairing multitudes in war-ravaged countries but great numbers in our own land also. It cannot be dissipated by more adroit philosophical argument but only by a living faith which relates the whole of life to its true Center, in God. You and I cannot awaken and establish this faith in the hearts of men. But God in Christ can do it. Our ministry is to be faithful witnesses for Him.

EVANGELISM.

Let us not forget that every week we are working on that Evangelistic Crusade. The weeks are passing by, and before we realize it the day for the mailing of our reports in will be here, March 31. Every pastor will want to have some new members to report.

Prayer must be the beginning, the ongoing, and the medium of praise for the final results. Prayer will open the way. Prayer will show us the road clear ahead. Prayer will give us essential inspiration and help from the "Lord of the harvest." Prayer will do something to our own lives so others will help us.

Prospects are essential cogs in the wheel. It will not matter so much how you learn who needs to be won for the Christ and the Church, but it does greatly matter that we know who they are and where they are, and that we go after them. Many pastors have a mental note of several persons whom they expect to win. Let them put their names down on paper, and pray for them, and find someone who will help them win them. Many are the boys and girls who may be won through the Sunday school. Many others who may be won by persistent visitation, or calling.

Personal witnessing, or personal work by the pastor, the Sunday school teacher, the good churchman, and the women of the church, will bring results.

Preaching, yes, and "drawing the net" following the sermon, has brought many of the Church's best workers into its membership. Let us ministers give our people the opportunity to publicly profess their faith in Jesus Christ as their Savior and Lord. Winning others to Christ is our great business. Let us be about it.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

Now have the homely things been made Sacred, and a glory on them laid.
For he whose shelter was a stall,
The King, was born among them all.
He came to handle saw and plane,
To use and hallow the profane:
Now is the holy not afar
In temples lighted by a star,
But where the loves and labors are.
Now that the King has gone this way,
Great are the things of every day.

Ministerial Relief

A Midwinter Meeting Message

By PERCY C. LIADD.

I want you to think with me for ten minutes about our pensioners and try to do what Ezekiel did, and sit where they sit. What about the year as it seems to them, the year that we are considering?

A number of years ago, when my wife was secretary of the Christian Association at Smith she asked the Student Association president to lead a certain meeting. "You know I can't do it, Miss Sanderson, why do you ask me?" "Oh, you will do all right, don't be afraid." She consented. Early in the service she announced a hymn. "Shall we sing No. 285? We will rise, and remain rising." "There," she said later, "didn't I tell you."

This would seem to be a good parable about current prices. They have been rising, and they remain rising, and the President's Economic Report to Congress puts it in a nutshell. He compared the prices of January, 1946, with the average of 1935-39. Call that average par. January, 1946, rent 114 per cent, wearing apparel, 144 per cent, food, 141 per cent, all items 131 per cent. At the end of 1947, see how the figures stand. Rent, 117 per cent, apparel, 190 per cent, a jump from 144 per cent, food, 202 per cent up from 141 per cent, all items 162 per cent—an increase from 131 per cent. In New York City the figures for food should be revised to 220 per cent. They are still rising. In fact, the current rise is faster and faster. Since last June, wholesale prices have risen at an annual rate of 20 per cent and retail prices 12 per cent. Retail food prices have gone up at an annual rate of 15 per cent and fuel 36 per cent. It is, of course, these last items which affect our pensioners most sharply, because for low and fixed incomes, the smaller the income, the larger the part of it that has to go for food and fuel. Will they keep on rising? Let the Yale Review speak what seems to be the fact:

"If consumers could be persuaded by appeals from Washington to spend less and save more, if business men could be persuaded to let their inventories run down and to postpone all plant extensions not urgently necessary; if farmers could be persuaded to send more cereals to market and feed less to livestock; if bankers could be persuaded to cut down on loans to business or to consumers; if labor leaders could be persuaded not to ask for higher wages—the inflation could be brought to a halt without any exercise beyond present levels of the anti-inflationary powers of the federal government."

If one is connected with the Board of Ministerial Relief he is saying, "I wonder what our 486 pensioners are doing. I realize, of course, that few of them are living on our grants: they couldn't live on $277 a year, or if you add the Christmas check, on $342. But with what they can earn, and their annuities, what their children, or friends, or what old age relief adds, how do they get along!"

One of the pleasant things about the work of the Ministerial Relief is reading the letters as they come from the pensioners and others we help. Just from the correspondence (just the past few days) I take a suggestion or two as to what all this is meaning to our pension family. If you have tears do not prepare to shed them now, but rather enter understandingly into their situations, that is all. Here is an old gentleman who is living by turns with his sons. He writes, "I pay my way." We know what that means in the matter of board. Another, employed in the business of his son, says, "I cannot practice the small economies we should like to because my wife is an invalid." It's clear that he is having a tight squeeze. Another, better situated, is strong and vigorous. He has set to work to earn, and he is succeeding, what it costs to buy meat today. Still another, a woman minister, says that her grant is $27 a month, out of which she pays $16 for a room, leaving $11 for her other living. "Fortunately I have friends," she said, "and I do not want." A widow told us that she bought 30c worth of meat which would stand her three days. A pensioner on the Coast said that he overheard someone complaining that he could hardly get by on $5,000 a year. "What would he do if his income was $70 a month!" Again, there was a minister so placed that, with supplies, children and our grant he is making the grade, with care. Think of this ancient of eighty-seven, savings lost, wife dead, living alone, with our grant about his total income, what the present prices are doing to his budget.

As a denomination we are engaged, under the perfect leading of Dr. Scribner, in the sustained enterprise of helping our ministry to provide adequately for their retired years. We are making progress. But even with the higher level of salaries, a wide space remains before the goal is reached. Relief is still essential and will remain so. Shall we not try to keep the measure of the aid at the point it was in 1940 and in 1945? Your Ministerial Relief Division therefore respectfully suggests, if it joins harmoniously with the total Home Missions agenda, a lifting of the present grants covering this year by 37 per cent.

A widow who makes her home with a daughter leaves us with a haunting thought, "Here and all over the United States, prices are high and everything we need is so high, and it keeps us wondering."

To give real service you must add something which cannot be bought or measured with money, and that is sincerity and integrity.

LENT BEGINS.

We come again to that season which eventuates in Holy Week and Easter. During this period the deep tragedy of our age may be studied anew in the light of the Cross. Sin and suffering confront us on every hand. We look to Calvary not alone for light, but for forgiveness and healing.

Throughout our Convention we face high and holy tasks: the completion of The Christian Sun campaign for subscriptions, the discharge of our stewardship in relation to Christian education at Elon, and the institution of the Evangelistic Crusade. These Kingdom building enterprises may be doomed by our lethargy or spurred to glorious fruition by our zeal. We dare not fail. Who will lead in this high endeavor?

THE MIDWINTER MEETINGS.

What and where are they? The Midwinter Meetings were held at Grand Rapids, Michigan, the last week in January. The ecclesiastical mill ground morning, afternoon and evening in the Pantlind Hotel. Meeting under the auspices of the Home Boards, there were sessions for the state superintendents, women state presidents, Pilgrim Fellowship, the Council for Social Action, Church Extension Division, Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction, the Division of Christian Education, the Missions Council, and the American Board. Messages given at some of the sectional meetings appear in this issue. A "Program of Advance," about which we shall be hearing later, was submitted. Even this editorial newcomer at these meetings was able to sense something of the amazing scope and vitality of our denominational enterprise.

PREACHING MISSIONS.

The weakness of the usual preaching mission is just that it is a preaching mission. People attend services and hear good preaching, period! Underlying this innocuous name, however, lies the assumption that it is more than a mere preaching mission, that it is a mission in which preaching is one means to an end, namely the regeneration as well as the edification of human souls.

Norfolk and Richmond have just completed two preaching missions which represented the combined Protestant strength of the respective cities. These missions were set up on a pretentious scale and no pinch penny methods were used. Nationally known speakers were engaged. Dual speakers were used at each service in order to bring variety and impact in the gospel presentation. No effort or expense was spared in securing adequate publicity. In the face of a gigantic snowstorm, Richmonders came and overpaid a $10,000 budget which was set up solely on faith.

Dr. Blanton Belk, chairman, expressed this hope for the Richmond mission: "That lives may be changed, bent and broken homes may be mended, management and labor may work together for the good of the nation, and all of us may listen to the voice of God." No one knows to what extent these hopes were realized; but throngs attended, prayers were offered, multiplied testimonies were given, and many decisions were recorded.

The Protestant pulpit is not impotent. God has not left himself without effective witnesses in our generation. A resurgence of spiritual power is given to the Church when preaching is put in its proper setting.

We need more and even greater preaching missions. Evangelism is not antiquated. Christ's touch has still its ancient power. Puny efforts are unworthy of God's blessings, but a mission commensurate with the needs of the hour and the demands of the gospel is assured of success.

THE STATUS OF THE MINISTRY.

"Year after year we depend on other denominations for from 50 to 60 per cent of the new ministers entering the pastorates of Congregational Christian Churches. We have concentrated on other aspects of religious work and have taken a laissez-faire attitude towards ministerial supply for our churches," reads the report of the Commission on the Ministry made to the Superintendents' Conference meeting, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

In the report, made by Rev. James F. English, Dr. Frederick L. Fagley and Dr. Horace F. Holton, the Superintendents, key men of the denomination from all over the United States were bluntly given the cold facts, both complimentary and critical.

The Congregational Christian Churches have pioneered in the field of social improvement since the days of Beecher, and in the founding and fostering of Christian schools and colleges with high academic standing, the report stated. In the area of church unity and cooperation with such groups as the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Foreign Missions Conference, and the World Council of Churches, etc., they have been in the vanguard.

They founded the first foreign missionary society in the United States of America, the American Board of Foreign Missions, and they pioneered in home missionary work through the American Missionary Association which has for generations led Protestantism in work for the Negro people, the report continued; but in the case of securing and training from among its own ranks the young men and women to fill its pulpits, the Congregational Christian Churches are open to strong criticism.

"We have offered to young students and to ministers of other denominations such opportunities for service that we have received a constant inflow for our churches," the report said. "These men come to us by their own free will. . . . They bring the rich inheritance of their denominational fellowship and thus greatly enrich our own. . . . They attain places of leadership and become truly one with us in every phase of church work. Their presence makes the Congregational Christian Churches a great interchurch fellowship bound by no sectarian spirit, but awake to every need and alert to every opportunity to make vital the life and work of the churches."

In spite of this the report roundly condemned the tendency to depend upon sister communions for from 50 to 60 per cent of its new ministers and declared the Congregational Christian Churches should be recruiting young men for the Christian ministry from its own congregations.

The report of the Commission on the Ministry deprecated the falling away in many denominations of the number of young people preparing for the ministry and cited this as another evidence of the "growing secular nature of society."

The report recommended a program to double the present number of seminary students; to secure adequate salaries and comfortable living conditions for the ministry; to see that theological students are adequately prepared and guided in their early years in the pastorates to improve the aid to ministers in securing pastorates and to make provisions for more adequate pensions.

The Department of Higher Education

By PRESIDENT BRYANT DRAKE, Doane College
An Address at the Midwinter Meetings

The Post-War Emergency Program has made it possible for assistance to be given to centers for Ministry to Students in over forty colleges and universities, and in two regions, New England and the state of New York. This is a great enterprize which must not be dropped when the program is completed. In fact, the calls for help have been so urgent, and the opportunities have been so clear and enticing that there is a problem of maintenance at the present level, for appropriations have reached the upper limit.

There is not time to tell the story in any detail, so I will endeavor only to give you an idea of what the Department of Ministry to Students, and now the Department of Higher Education, have been concerned about. It is the same concern which founded Harvard College three hundred years ago, which secured the sacrificial gifts of life and money that established Congregational colleges in New England, in the states farther west, and finally on the Pacific coast, and even to the uttermost parts of the earth through the American Board, and in the Southland through the American Missionary Association. This magnificent story of the founding of colleges through three centuries is now being continued in the support of ministry to students in universities and colleges, and in the nurture of genuine church-related colleges today. A new chapter is being written in this story by you.

Specifically, our concern for higher education is due to our belief, consistent with our tradition, in the necessity of education to train leadership. The charters of our colleges state this faith repeatedly. Every denomination is interested in this problem, but Congregational Christian Churches are doubly concerned, for it has been many decades since we have reproduced our own Ministry. However, we have some reason for encouragement, for reports from our colleges indicate that some of them have in their present student bodies 40, 18, 16 . . . young men looking toward the ministry. Ten per cent of the graduating class of one of our colleges are now enrolled in seminaries. Young men in our University Student Centers are planning on the ministry, and this investment in Christian Education is producing leaders for the foreign field as well as for the home.

No less important is the lay leadership which is being prepared by this investment in education. I wonder what proportion of you who listen to me are the products of an investment made ever so haltingly in a former generation. Today we have many potentially great churchmen coming up. I have met the leaders of our Pilgrim Fellowship movement, and one cannot be pessimistic about future lay leadership after participating in conferences with them, and observing what many of them are now doing in service to the churches.

The paramount interest in our student work is the deepening of the spiritual lives of students. The drinking, sexually unrestrained student, the student who is interested only in social pleasures and athletics is not the most serious problem; rather, it is the student who is completely the disciple of the secular way of life, and who is frankly after all he can get for himself. To far too great an extent such a student is typical. But there is another sort of student who is clean and fine, and who seeks guidance on how he can invest his life in business or profession so as to make the best contribution to his community. Such a student has comparatively little interest in superficial things, but is asking penetrating questions regarding the nature of Reality and how to know the good; he is interested in every theological problem which the Church has faced, and is ready to apply the Gospel to the vexing issues of contemporary life. This student did not just happen; he has been helped to become what he is by the interest which the churches have taken in him, and he has reached a certain spiritual maturity through friendship with a student worker or college chaplain, and the discussions and activities sponsored in the religious program in colleges and student centers.

There are other concerns of course—personal adjustments, meeting specific individual problems, the social life of students on big and lonely campuses, and the various needs involved in college life.

The magnitude of the program for which the Department of Higher Education is responsible is impressive. There are ten seminaries listed in our Yearbook which should certainly be included in any survey of our higher educational interests. In addition are the six AMA colleges, two Junior colleges, and seventeen colleges associated together in the Congregational Christian College Council. The AMA group has been under the special care of a Division of the Board of Home Missions for one hundred years, and the denomination takes much pride and pleasure in their success. One of the seminaries receives $3,800 from the Board of Home Missions to assist temporarily in a significant program of development, and one Junior college is assisted by the Board. The seventeen colleges have a combined enrollment of about 11,000 students. Their combined assets would make an impressive total, endowment alone reaches the figure of $19,000,000. A conservative estimate of the sum which these colleges must raise this year in order to balance their current expense budgets would be around $600,000. Of this amount probably about $50,000 or eight per cent, will be contributed by the Con-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One hundred seventy men and women from the Suffolk churches launched a religious census campaign Friday at a 6:30 supper in Fellowship Hall of our church. Details of the campaign had been worked out by the Rev. John Halko, executive secretary of the Federation of Churches, Washington, D. C., along with the pastor and secretary of the Main Street Methodist Church here in Suffolk. The census is to be taken on Saturday and Sunday, and within a week every church is to have complete prospect lists along with other valuable information. From that prospective list our Christian church will expect to gain a goodly harvest of new members.

Mr. Halko in giving his instructions to the canvassers last night brought out the fact that already on the rolls of the churches were enough people, if they could be brought to renewed interest in, and consecration to, the work of their churches, to startle the churches of America. By the interest created in the taking of this census, and the organized efforts which are to be put on by our churches following the canvass, we are hoping to greatly increase the average attendance in both the Sunday schools and the worship services of our churches.

Directly following the Pastors' Conference held the first week in January at Elon I appointed two visiting committees to assist the pastor in calling on members of the church—a committee of young women who meet me just after prayer meeting each Wednesday night, and a committee of young men who meet me after the evening service every Sunday. Each member of these committees is given the names of two families on whom he is to call within the week. He is asked to get someone—wife, or husband, or neighbor—to go as an assistant on the call. At the meeting a week hence report is made on the two families visited, and two new names are assigned. Thus seven women, and eight men, are given a total of thirty families on which to call every week.

The primary purpose of the call is to increase Sunday school and church attendance by increasing the number of families who will strive to come every Sunday. In other words we are seeking to increase that number of persons who go to church every Sunday. However, from time to time other calls are made, such as on new

PASTORAL PRAYER.

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN,
Mason City, Iowa.

Our Heavenly Father, Thou God of life and man's eternal destiny, in Whom we live and move and have our being; and by Whose help we are able to attain and achieve—we thank Thee for the observations and experiences which have made Thee known to us. We thank Thee for every thing that reminds us of Thy presence in the world, and for every experience of life and every gift in nature and in art that makes us think of Thee and that causes us to realize our dependence upon Thee.

We bless Thee for the inspiration of all noble lives made known to us in history or living in our own day. We bless Thee for sacred memories, for the inspiration of sweetly solemn thoughts, for moments of high resolve, for the challenge of noble purposes; and for the consciousness that we are Thine, that Thou art ours, and that Thou wilt never leave us nor forsake us.

We thank Thee that Thou hast called us to be partners with Thee—to be co-workers together with Thee in Thy work of Kingdom building—that "All unseen Thou walkest by the toiling servant's side, and comfortable words Thou speakest while Thy hand upholds and guides." Grant, O God, that we may ever be faithful in meeting our responsibilities to Thee and to our fellowmen in our high privilege of living and working in partnership with Thee. We know that Thou wilt always do Thy part—help Thou us that we may always do our part.

We pray for our nation and for all the nations of the world; we pray that all the leaders of men may seek Thy leadership. May they not be content with the wisdom that is theirs, but may they seek that wisdom which cometh from above—that they may lead the world to a brighter day.

In the name of our Leader and Partner Christ, we pray. Amen.

persons in our city, or on the sick, or on the bereft. These callers have had a good time, and they are doing a good work. I want to increase the list of callers just as rapidly as I can. As this number increases I shall be able to increase interest in the work of the church in several directions, I am learning that young men, and young women, are ready to undertake to do really definite assignments in their church if given such assignments. It is one thing to get up in the pulpit and ask people to work for their church, and quite another to see a member and given him a particular job to do. Most of us ministers are not asking enough of our members. We are trying to do too many things ourselves, consuming our own valuable time, and robbing others of the privileges of doing something definite and thrilling for his church.

NEWS OF ELK SPUR.

It has been a long time since we have had a piece in THE CHRISTIAN SUN about our church at Elk Spur, so we decided that we should write and tell you what we have been doing.

In the year 1947, we made great progress in the church. Mr. and Mrs. Gleason were with us until September. They were such good workers and so understanding with the people here. When they left us it was a big disappointment to all. We have made many new improvements in the last two years. We have fifty new song books, new seats, also a piano, new doors for the front and back of the church, and have also had the church and roof painted. We raised money enough for all of this in a short while.

When we were left without a pastor we carried our Sunday school on with an average of about sixty until Christmas. On December 22 we had a very interesting Christmas program—with about one hundred and twenty-five present. All went away with a treat and a true spirit of Christmas in their hearts.

Since the bad weather began we have closed our Sunday school. We did this only because we felt it was too cold and snowy for the children. We expect to begin as soon as the weather permits, and then the children's voices will again be heard in the dear old church as they sing "Praise Him, Praise Him."

We are very thankful to the Mission Board for all they have done for us in the past and we are hoping and trusting that in the spring you will be able to send us some one who will meet up to the standards of Mr. and Mrs. Gleason.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

ELON COLLEGE SERVES OUR CHURCHES.

Elon College was founded by the Christian Churches and has throughout its existence served the churches. Most of our pastors and lay leaders of the Southern Convention received their training at Elon. The College has been an inspiration to the entire life of the Congregational Christian Churches of the area. Many of our national church leaders were trained at Elon. Because of the development of the church life in the area—in which Elon has had a most important part, we have been able to attract many good pastors who otherwise would not have come to the Southern Convention.

Not only has Elon served in helping to produce leaders for our own church but her graduates have blessed other communions and in many communities of the South Elon's sons and daughters are helping to lift the level of life.

Besides the contribution the college has made to our leadership, Elon has always made her facilities available for conferences and various types of meetings of the church. Today the Convention Office occupies rooms made available to us free of charge. This characterizes the administration of the college which feels that since Elon was founded by and is owned and operated by the churches of the Southern Convention, Elon ought to do all she can to further the work of the entire church.

During the crowded hotel facilities and difficult travel conditions of the past few years, the Convention would have been at great cost and other difficulties had not Elon opened her facilities to board and committee members for various types of executive meetings. During the past year a dozen or more meetings have been held at the College and always the administration has welcomed these servants of the church.

Elon College serves the Church. Elon College is owned and operated by and for the Church. It is ours—faults, virtues, and all. Since it is ours we ought to support the College with our prayers, encouragement, and gifts. We are now in the midst of the College period of the Convention. Send a gift to Elon for the completion of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education. It is also a good time for your Church to send its apportionment contribution for the College.

WM. T. SCOTT.

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE ABOUT ELON COLLEGE AND ENROLLMENT OF OUR CHURCH YOUNG PEOPLE.

Elon has the largest enrollment in its history. The facilities of the College are crowded to the limit. Hundreds of young people will make application for admission at the fall term of 1948. The College cannot possibly admit anything like all those who apply. It is the desire of President Smith and the College to make places for our own Congregational Christian young people. However, if we wish to have our young people attend Elon—it is absolutely necessary that they apply at once. Otherwise other young people will be admitted, and when the college facilities are filled—it will be impossible, though regretful, that room cannot be made for late comers, even our own Congregational Christian youth. Therefore—parents—pastors of Congregational Christian families, please send the name and application of your young people to Elon College at once.

WM. T. SCOTT.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Weather conditions affect church attendance in cities, towns and rural sections. The weather during recent weeks has not been conducive to attendance at worship services. When the members of the church cannot or do not attend services, it is difficult for them to keep up with their pledged and voluntary contributions. Even though we are in the midst of the College Period when the College is supposed to receive increased financial support, our receipts for the College have been the smallest in many, many months. As the weather clears up, we are hoping for more generous contributions from more of our churches and Sunday schools. The College is increasingly dependent upon the Church for its support and inspiration and is grateful for every dollar contributed.

Mr. William W. Clemes, until recently, a public relations director for the Veterans Administration, became on January 1, the director of the Missions Public Relations Office of the Home Missions Council of North America and the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

Mr. Clemes succeeds George Dugan who resigned the directorate in the late fall to accept a staff position with the New York Times, where he is covering conventions and conferences of religious organizations and writing special articles on developments in the churches.

Born in Meerut, India, of missionary parents, Mr. Clemes speaks Hindustani fluently. He received his pre-college schooling in India, graduated in 1939 from Willamette University, Salem, Ore., and did graduate work at the University of Oregon, Eugene, where he taught anthropology, history, and religion as graduate assistant.

As a member of the Smithsonian Institute's Anthropological Expedition in 1938, he assisted in excavation and research in the Aleutian and Commander Islands. His pre-war foreign travel also took him into Japan, China, the Philippines, Malaya, Egypt, Ceylon, Baluchistan, Iran, Turkey, Greece, Italy, France, England and Alaska.

The bravest are the tenderest. The loving are the daring.—Longfellow.

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

September 28, 1947.
Shaowu, China,

Dear Friends:

This week has been genuinely one full of excitement and (I hope) significance. Dr. Yao has come and gone, and the hospital has had its grand opening! After all these months of anticipation and fanfare, Dr. Yao planned to come very quietly and unobtrusively, stay only three days, and steal quietly away. For his was the sad job of resigning as superintendent and taking his wife back with him to Foochow, thus depriving the hospital of a badly needed doctor. At the hospital Board meeting they pled with him to reconsider, then asked that he continue in his present status of superintendent in absentia. They proposed that he accept the title of honorary superintendent with no actual responsibilities but lending the use of his name to the hospital for added prestige. He refused all of these proposals; and now his only connection with the hospital is as a member of the Board. He will, of course, continue his efforts to procure CNRRA supplies for us as they are distributed from time to time. The hospital Board elected Dr. Chu, our pediatrician recently arrived, as the new superintendent. He vigorously protested, saying that he didn't want any administrative responsibility. When they suggested that the surgeon from Chunking might agree to come next summer and take it over, he agreed to serve as acting superintendent until that time.

Dr. Yao meant to come up here unobtrusively and leave after three days. But he arrived last Sunday afternoon and couldn't get a bus out of here until yesterday morning. Since this was the first visit home in more than twenty years, and since he is one of Shaowu's most distinguished alumni, he was feasted and feted to the limit. I got in on several of these feasts and have altogether attended six in the last seven days. My stomach knows how Dr. Yao felt when he finally got away yesterday! They finally decided on a moment's notice to have the grand hospital opening which had originally been planned for the time of his triumphal homecoming. So Thursday morning, September 25, some eighty-odd invited guest assembled—the elite of the town—in the lower floor ward which had been cleared of beds for the occasion, decorated with streamers, a flag, a rostrum, and dozens of complimentary red banners. We had scripture and prayer, long speeches by the various notables present, including a history of the whole medical enterprise in this area over the last seventy years presented by the pastors, etc. We wound up with hot cocoa, cookies, and a little taste for everybody of ice cream from the Jacksons' refrigerator. This last feature was the most successful of all because although the guests were "big shots" some of them had never tasted ice cream before in their lives. After the ceremony we held open house in the hospital and clinic and conducted the guests all around for tours of inspection. The whole place was cleaned and shining, and really did look quite impressive—especially when compared with its appearance when we first arrived six months ago.

October 5th.

These last few days have been busy and eventful ones. Frances Whitaker has been here a week now (or two feasts, however you chose to measure time!). Although she has not officially started work yet, since all her baggage is on the slow boat with the x-ray, she has been looking around and getting acquainted, already making her influence felt. There is a large building on the Jacksons' "estate" which used to be a girls' school, which she has announced she would use her own money to help repair, fixing the upstairs for a nurses' home where she, herself would also live, and the downstairs for the nurses' school. In addition to her other duties, she is also going to pinch-hit for Dr. Hsu in the OB and GYN clinic. She is not a doctor but has had special training along those lines and the Shaowu women are definitely not willing to let men-folk interfere in such matters, no matter what their qualifications!

Dr. Chu who succeeded Dr. Yao has been superintendent a week. He is proceeding cautiously, getting everybody's views before making changes. He has a lot of ideas on how to run things which are definitely more acceptable to us westerners than those of the Yao regime. He is certainly making himself well liked by all.

November 4th.

We just arrived late yesterday from our nineteen-day tour of the North Fukien area and it was certainly an unforgettable experience. We were disappointed in only one respect—we did not meet up with any tigers or bandits. The last famous man-eating tiger had finally been bagged near one of the towns we passed through just two months before, after killing 116 (?) victims! As for the bandits, everybody in Shaowu was worried to death for fear we would be captured and held for ransom, and didn't want us to go. We took the precaution to leave on a moment's notice two days before our scheduled date of departure, and each day's trip we started early and traveled fast with the resulting disadvantage that nobody along the way was expecting us. We heard rumors of bandits shortly before our trip but everybody was peaceful and cordial to the nth degree but didn't leave us any thrilling tales to write home!

We rested over Sunday at Pastor Liao's house. He lives in the house

AMERICAN BOARD SECRETARY TO VISIT SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

Mrs. Ralph R. Shrader, of Boston, Mass., secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, will be guest speaker at the Women's Rallies in the Southern Convention this spring, and will be available for personal conferences and for speaking engagements in local churches. Mr. Shrader is to be guest missionary representative of the Missions Council and the American Board among the churches of the Southern Convention.

Born in Kansas, Mr. Shrader was educated at Washburn College (A. B.), Chicago Theological Seminary (B. D.) and the University of Chicago (M. A.).

Mr. Shrader is familiar with the orient, having served as an American Board Missionary in Foochow, China, teaching at Foochow College. He has been a pastor in the U.S.A., his last church being the Bethany Congregational Church, Montpelier, Vt.

Mr. Shrader flew to the Hawaiian Islands by Pan American Clipper in January to visit the Congregational Churches established there by the American Board in 1820, and now comprising the Hawaiian Evangelical Association with its own missionary work.

"With racial backgrounds of Caucasian, Chinese, Filipino, Hawaiian, Japanese, and Portuguese, the people of the Hawaiian Islands live and work together in an amazing exhibition of 'one world' in microcosm," declares Mr. Shrader.

When asked about the possibility of Hawaiian statehood, Mr. Shrader says: "Popular sentiment for the most part is in favor of statehood." He also says that the sugar and pineapples are still the two big industries in the Islands. From the educational point of view, Mr. Shrader points out that the Kamehameha Schools for boys and girls of Hawaiian blood, the Mid-Pacific School for students of Oriental background and Punahou for Caucasians, Orientals, and Hawaiians were founded by Congregational missionaries or Hawaiian royalty who became Christian.

Mr. Shrader will be available for conferences and speaking engagements before and after the Rallies.

Use of Mr. Shrader ought to be arranged as near the Rallies as possible, thus avoiding unnecessary travel.

To arrange dates for having Mr. Shrader, write to Dr. W. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C., for engagements.

formerly owned by the George Shepherds which he has rebuilt along more Chinese lines. We visited all the church and local dignitaries and were duly feted and feasted. The next morning we left with Pastor Liao and his horse as escorts. He became quite sick with bronchitis the first night and after resting the next day we made him ride home again. Another frail old former lay preacher escorted us—and out-walked us to the luxurious quarters of the local police commissioner, who is a Christian from Foochow. He gave us two armed policemen to escort us on to the home of Pastor Fan in Tianglo where we rested and called on dignitaries. We visited some famous caves just outside of town which Dick says are in the same class as the Mammoth Cave in Kentucky although not as extensive. gregational Christian Churches through the Board of Home Missions (possibly $25,000), by the State Conferences, and local churches. Our Evangelical and Reformed brethren have budgeted $280,000 in their National Missions for ten colleges and seminaries.

Our record is somewhat better in the support of the Ministry to Students in universities and colleges. We will produce almost $65,000 from the Home Board and the CWVR for work in over forty institutions and in two regions. The Wisconsin State Conference provides full support for its student work at Madison which calls for $7,000. Other states match funds provided by the Board, and in some cases provide all of the funds necessary for some centers.

The budget for Ministry to Students is provided by the Post-War Emergency Program from receipts from the CWVR, increased apportionment giving, and from the regular apportionment. The CWVR giving of course is on the basis of service to returning veterans registering in the colleges and universities. It was the intention to manage the budget so that the program undertaken could be carried until July 1, 1950, but the commitments which have been made will call for at least $10,000 more than our most optimistic estimates lead us to expect from the above sources. This poses a serious problem, for urgent new demands are being made upon us to open student centers in places worthy of all assistance that we can give.

As you consider the responsibility and opportunity of our churches in Christian Higher Education you can be confident that here is a program which demands larger support. It is not permissive, but mandatory. Talk about Universal Military Training! This is a four-year, a seven-year program of training leaders for a field force which will serve on the frontiers. If our churches are to have strength, and if our denomination is to be vital and growing, attention must be focused at this point, for it affects every board of the churches and every division. This is a matter of training leadership and of instilling a Christian World View. It is investing in foundations. It is making a dollar go the farthest, and by investing here we enhance the value of every other investment in our vast denominational enterprise.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Young Friends:

Today is the birthday of a great man. Do you know his name? We of the South are learning more about Abe Lincoln and I hope we continue to do so.

Tomorrow is a great day. It is the first Friday in Lent, and that means it is the World Day of Prayer. All over our nation and all over our globe women and children will be praying for peace and brotherhood. In America our offering goes to help four groups of people: migrants, hundreds of them, who move from crop to crop with their parents; share-croppers, those people who live on someone else's farm and have so little of the "share." There are many of these people in North Carolina and Virginia. American Indians, living in crowded reservations they still need friendly help with their children, schools and churches; Union College for Women, money is sent to help educate young women in China, Japan and India. I hope that some of you will attend a World Day of Prayer service in your school, church or community. Here is the closing prayer for the Children's Service written by Arthur Fingerhood of Dayton, Ohio, who attends a Week Day Religious Instruction Class:

Our Father, as we leave today
We pause in thanks,
And we think of You as our Father.
Amen.

I have been receiving some very nice letters. Mrs. T. S. Scott of Pfafftown wrote to say she was interested in sending Christmas cards to Dorothy Jackson. Next there came a letter from Mrs. Orva Brown in Asheboro telling of the work her Kindergarten class was doing which included sending pictures to Dorothy and enclosing a letter that Mrs. Jackson had sent her class. Mrs. Jackson wrote that the pictures arrived in time for some pastors who were having a meeting in Shaowu to take back to their home churches. Just following this I had a letter from the Jacksons myself in which they were telling me about the great difficulties of cooking on an open fire. They told some of the good things that were happening, too.

Last week I had a card from Mrs. Wisseman who is the Children's Superintendent of the Mission Convention. In it she happened to mention that Muriel Lester was going to be in Greensboro for the World Day of Prayer. I received this card as I was leaving my home to go to a luncheon where Miss Lester was to speak. I was happy to see her and talk with her and I want to end my letter to you with a few things about her.

Muriel Lester was born sixty years ago in England, the daughter of a well-to-do family. After growing up she decided to give up carefree things of life and to live in a simple way with poor people. She is best known for her work in Kingsley Hall, London. Now she travels all over the world and speaks to people from her experiences and urges them to do good and help others to do good. She is tall, has medium brown hair that is gray-streaked and which she wears up on her head. Her voice is only faintly British, her manner quiet, but her face is radiantly lovely with her own good works. She is a great woman of our day and I hope that some of you will hear her speak.

CHILDREN "CATCH," TOO!

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Our seven-year-old neighbor, Kathy, frequently asks after telling a joke or story, "Do you catch?"

Her question reminds us that children generally "catch" as quickly as their elders. Anyone who questions this should try to recall experiences in his or her own childhood. Not only are many adult jokes understood by young boys and girls, but deep hurts and petty annoyances are often suffered by them because of a careless lack of consideration on the part of their seniors.

Well do I remember the discourtesy of a grown-up sister of a chum of mine. The family lived across the street from us. One day she and I happened to be the only persons in her mother's living room for a few minutes, and every one of those minutes was fraught for me with astonished embarrassment. I was subjected to a continuous fire of questions. The most personal family matters were inquired into. The question I have never forgotten was, "Does your father carry a mortgage on your house?"—he probably did; don't most young fathers? But by that time I was indignant and resentful; so even had I known, she would not have received any information from me.

One of my friends told me of an unhappy experience she once had during her school days. She was standing in line, in a grocery store, when a man stepped from behind and took her place. His order took some ten or fifteen minutes to fill, and the result was she was late in reaching school. The principal happened to be in her classroom when she entered and he reproached her teacher for allowing tardiness.

Perhaps those are extreme cases. Nevertheless, I am sure many of us do and say some things, thoughtlessly, in the presence of children, which would be better left undone and unsaid. How many more friendly relationships would be established between children and their elders if children were treated with the same courtesy that adults usually show to each other.

I often think of the forbidding manner of the father of two very lovely girls—childhood companions of mine. Amazing as it is, I never heard him say a kind word or saw him smile. There was something so formidable about him that children usually avoided the house when he was there. One Sunday morning, however, I did go to my playmates' home. I was "as good as gold" the short time I was there. But this correct behavior did not win proper politeness from my host or a chance to visit with my friends. Without explanation or apology, he asked me to go home. Hurt to the point of humiliation, I went!

If we want our children's friends to remember us with respect and a glow of pleasure, we must treat them with kindness and consideration—exactly as we would treat older guests.

A charming woman in my home town, who lived in a big brick house—how clearly I recall it!—always said my name with a winsomeness of speech and never failed to give me a pleasant smile; sometimes she gave me a rose from her conservatory. In my heart I still cherish her a happy memory. And then there was my beautiful grandmother, who looked like an exquisite cameo—she told me I was one of her favorite grandchildren; and, too, her half-sister, of whom I think after all these years with deep love—she called me "Sugar"!

Do any of us, ever, forget "the roses" given to us as children?

Let us bequeath happy memories to our sons, our daughters, and to their little friends for the enrichment of their future years and ours.

Book Reviews

MY DEAR EGO. Fritz Kunkle. The Pilgrim Press. Boston. $2.50.

How is your ego? You do not know? Then you should read Fritz Kunkle's book! He calls it "A Look in the Mirror."

Ministers will find therapeutic as well as homiletic value in the book. Anyone who can help the minister bring his own ego under the light of the Eternal has rendered an immeasurable service. Dr. Kunkle's book helps do just that. No minister should dare undertake the responsibility of dealing with human life and destiny without the psychological insights found in this volume.

Young people and all who deal with young people will find help in the author's discussion of boy and girl relationships. All who have to cope with the problems of group relationships should have a clear conception of the "we experiences" as set forth by Fritz Kunkle.

Line drawings in silhouettes form by Janet Smalley are inserted at delightful intervals. Who could ever forget the old dragon (symbol of our fears, conflicts and tensions) cornered, killed and dragged off triumphantly by the tail by the shining knight in armor? R.L.H.

HOUSE DIVIDED. Ben Ames Williams. Houghton Mifflin Co. Boston. $5.

I have just finished reading the 1,500-page House Divided by Ben Ames Williams, and this "House" is also divided! How should I read it—as a reviewer, a native Virginian, perhaps as a Richmonder, as one who dotes on history, especially Southern; or as one who has listened to many tales of Civil War days and their hardships? No matter how I read it, read I did, and all of these elements climaxed in the conviction that here is an honest account of what the South was really like; no magnolias, no tall and thin cavaliers, but honest-to-goodness, smelly, sometime hateful, sometime kind, living Southerner, mostly Virginians.

The story concerns itself with an "aristocratic" Virginia family named Currain, consisting of three brothers and two sisters, their fame and fortune and its demise follows through four generations. The author really thickened his plot when he added blood relationship between the ardent Currians, and the backwoodsman, Abe Lincoln. The slow moving account depicts ably the days before, during and at the close of the Civil War. Not only is it an accurate picture of Confederate life, but a picture of great ambitions and human emotions.

We, of the South, need to read historical fiction like House Divided. It gives us a slant on how and why the break came without the cold bitterness of the text book or the often highly romanticized version. There are colloquialisms aplenty. The proper emphasis has been laid on slavery and the Richmond of the 1860's all but lives. The people of the North need to read this book in order that they, too, may see in an easier light the bitter dose that fell to the proud South. There is no stirring of strife in these pages, but an earnest effort to tell the tragedy through one family and their friends.

Mr. Williams records in the foreword that he read no Southern fiction while his plot was brewing but he spent countless days and nights on research that resulted in a flawless setting. A relative of General James Longstreet on the maternal side, Ben Ames Williams has added family history that makes an interesting and lively addition to the Currain family and its relationships.

There are three divisions: Over-ture, Advance to Gettysburg, and Retreat to Appomattox. On this framework hangs the true threads of Southern life—plantations, town houses, big, little and old Currains, their "people," neighbors, family and local strife, duels, births, deaths, religious services, feasts and fasts, and the despoiling thread, the divider, Abe Lincoln.

To read this book is to refresh oneself on the greedy, spoiled, ambitious but too frequently inferior Southerner—Virginian, Georgian or Carolinian, who made the war possible. To read this book is to learn anew that civil strife cuts so deep and destroys so cunningly that many, many generations are required to cauterize, stitch and heal the wound. To read this book is to find new hope that there are men in our midst who have studied the past objectively and see hope of a newer day without division.

MODERN JAPAN AND SHINTO NATIONALISM. D. C. Holtom. The University of Chicago Press, Chicago, Illinois. 1947.

In 1943, in the midst of our war with Japan, D. C. Holtom, the leading non-Japanese authority on Shintoism, delivered a series of addresses at the University of Chicago. The lectures were published under the above title. In 1947 the book was revised by the addition of two chapters. The early chapters show the significance of Japan's state religion (Shinto) in her war of aggression. The last two chapters describe the revised status of this religion under the present regime and its possible value as a "cultural resource" to Japan and to the world.

Mr. Holtom writes with understanding based upon first-hand experience, having spent thirty years as a representative of the American Baptist Foreign Missions Society, teaching the history of religions in some of Japan's leading colleges and seminaries. His style is scholarly and his interpretations are supported by numerous quotations from authoritative Japanese writers. The book is not easy reading but it is challenging and rewarding to the reader who seeks to know the Japanese mind. Here is an explanation of the mysterious power which Shinto has held over the Japanese people, how they came to believe in the divinity of their emperor, and how they conceived world aggression as their divine mission.

Now, under the new regime, Shinto assumes a new role in Japanese culture. As the state religion, it had previously subjected Christianity as well as Buddhism to its control. It has now lost, according to Mr. Holtom, "the last vestiges" of its political character, and the Japanese people are accorded full religious freedom. The directive for disestablishment of State Shinto was issued on December 15, 1945, and two weeks later the emperor publicly renounced his divinity. Thus the Japanese state lost its superhuman basis of authority; it is no longer a divine but a secular institution. Many years of education will be necessary, however, before the Japanese people may distinguish between the myths upon which State Shinto has flourished and the actual truth of history. Under the new regime, Shinto is permitted (as a religious sect without national affiliation) to determine its own future: "The fate of Shinto," writes Mr. Holtom, "will depend in a large measure on whether or not it has within itself the possibilities of permanent contribution to a cosmopolitan society." These possibilities, however, are large, he continues. The view that "the Japanese man" is sadistic, treacherous, and dominated by the worship of power is as erroneous as the (Japanese) view that he is highly ethical. THE FELLOWSHIP OF CHRISTIAN BELIEVERS.

MEMORY SELECTION: There is one body and one spirit, just as you were called in the one hope that belongs to your call, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and through all and in you all.—Ephesians 4:4-6.

LESSON: Acts 2:37-47; Ephesians 4:1-6, 11-13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ephesians 4:1-6; 11-13.

Powerful Preaching.

When a man, any man, but especially an unschooled fisherman, preaches a sermon, that results in the conversion of three thousand people, it must be a powerful sermon. And there must be a reason for it. If one studies Peter's sermon at Pentecost he will discover several factors that entered into it. In the first place Peter was speaking through the Holy Spirit. He was filled with the Holy Spirit and the Holy Spirit was giving him utterance. He was being taught of God what he should say and he was fearlessly saying it. Any message spoken by the Holy Spirit has power. Furthermore Peter was sustained by the fact that the "eleven stood up with him" and stood behind him. His personality and his message were reinforced by the prayers and the sympathetic support of his fellow-disciples. A praying church would make a preaching pastor. Then, too, Peter preached a Scriptural sermon. To be sure he had nothing but the Old Testament, but he used that. But the heart of his sermon, indeed the text and the context, were Jesus Christ, the Son of God, going about doing good, suffering, crucified, buried, rising again from the dead, and ascending into the heavens, where He as Lord had sent His Holy Spirit. This sermon magnified Jesus Christ as Lord. Its center and its circumference was Jesus Christ. That gave it power, convicting, convincing, converting power. In agony of spirit men cried out "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" All too much modern preaching fails to convict and to convince men of sin. Perhaps we have too much intelligence and not enough of the Holy Spirit in them. Which does not mean of course that a man should not use his brains in preparing and delivering a sermon or a Sunday school lesson. But it does mean that the aid of the Holy Spirit should be sought and that prayer should undergird and permeate the message and the messenger.

Joining the Church.

"And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." That was a healthy increase. In fact that would be too many people for one church to receive at one time now—they could hardly be assimilated. How did they get into the church of that day? What happened to them anyway? Well we saw first of all how they had been convicted of their sins and convinced of the error of their ways. That conviction led to repentance, and through faith they received the forgiveness of their sins. They repented and believed. Then as a sign or symbol of an inner change, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. How? The record does not state. It may have been by immersion. It may have been otherwise. The method of water baptism was not crucial or vital. The fact of the baptism of the Spirit was. It was natural that these people should have then had a great peace in their hearts and great joy in their lives. They did eat their meat with gladness, and they praised God. They had begun to learn the meaning of the more abundant life which Jesus said He had come to give. Make no mistake about it, becoming a Christian made a difference in the lives of these members of the Early Church. Their new life began in an experience of the saving grace of God in Christ Jesus.

Having Fellowship With One Another.

They not only joined the church; they continued their fellowship with the church. To be sure there was no organized, closely-knit church in that day as we now know it. But there was a fellowship of believers, and they sought it as a means of strengthening and enriching their faith.

"They continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, and in the breaking of bread and in prayers." There was no New Testament then, nor for some time after this, but there was the apostles' story of the life and work of Jesus. There was the quickening and strengthening of faith that came through worship, and the common meal, as well as the Lord's Supper. New-born Christians make a grievous mistake when they do not form the habit of attending divine services of worship, and of seeking the fellowship of God's people.

Helping One Another.

These early Christians made fellowship mean something, too. They shared with one another. There were some in need and those who had shared with those who did not have. They bore one another's burdens and so fulfilled Christ's law of love. And because there was this spirit men and women daily came into the church as they were saved by the Lord. One of the vital characteristics of the church is its warm fellowship with one another in Christ Jesus.

The Unity of the Church.

The Church of Christ is divided, alas, there seem to be so many diversities in it. But there is a fundamental unity beneath it, an indestructible unity if you please. The body has many members, but it is still a unity. The Church, as the Body of Christ, has much diversity, but a basic unity. Indeed there is but one body—the body of Christ, there is really but one church; there is one Spirit—the Holy Spirit and no church or group of churches has a monopoly on the Holy Spirit; one of our calling—if any man is saved he is saved by faith in Jesus Christ, that is the only hope he has of salvation; one Lord—one Lord and Master of us all, the Lord Jesus Christ; one faith—many differences of belief, many shades of opinion, many creeds, but only one faith; the faith by which we are saved, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; one baptism—only one baptism; oh yes, there are several forms of baptism and there has been such discussion and even heat over which is the correct or the best way to be baptized, but there is only one baptism that really counts, the baptism of the Holy Spirit; one God and Father of all—only one God, there are no other gods, and that God is the God and Father of us all. It might be well to emphasize that on this Brotherhood Sunday at the beginning of Brotherhood Week. For if there is only one God then all men are brothers in Christ. Science has made the world a neighborhood. Religion must make of it a brotherhood. Unless we learn to get along together we shall all perish together. And we must to get along together as brothers. Not dominance but cooperation is the watchword.

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

with soot as these were from the pine torch flares which are the only source of light.

Everywhere we found ruin and desolation and a depression of spirit which everybody blamed on the ravages of the Communists. This group overran the area fifteen years ago before their famous long march to the Northeast. I do not blame the Communists themselves, for the people admit that much of the damage was caused by government troops and local bandits after the Communists left. It is just a picture of what happens to a country in time of civil war and disorder, and makes me sick to think that the same thing is happening all over North China today. Some people were killed initially and others, mostly the Christians and more progressive elements in each community, were scattered and disappeared. All the churches and business houses were destroyed and the life of each village was disrupted enough so people lost their ambition and morale, disease got a start and has kept them down ever since. Nanping and Yangkou, the two cities which they never reached, are the exceptions. They are full of life and enterprise and present a marked contrast to the rest of the area.

In the problem of rehabilitation of the area, I suppose the two key factors are health and education. I have already told about Shaowu itself. Here there are our hospital and the Catholic Hospital, and the County Health Clinic which gives free vaccinations and fights plague. There is an excellent government senior high school, two government junior high schools, several mediocre primary schools—government- and church-supported. In two of the larger villages we passed through in Shaowu County there were government primary schools housed in brand new (or newly whitewashed) buildings, with attractive landscaping, so that the prospects for the education of children in those areas looked good. In T'aining there is a primary school; Kienning has a church primary school, a government junior high school. Tsianglo, the brightest spot in the picture educationally, has an excellent government primary school and junior high school, well housed in old Confucian temples, with clean, attractive grounds; and they have just this year opened a senior high school, started privately by a large group of the local community leaders, supported by them, and run by the best educational man in this part of the country. That shows what a local community can do if it has a mind to. We heard that the county seat of one of the other counties we passed through has government junior and senior (?) high school, but we didn't see it ourselves. In contrast, Yangkou, so thriving in other respects, has nothing but one miserable government primary school. Nanping, of course has had the Methodists and the government continuously for years, so they are probably well supplied with everything. But there you see is the picture of the educational opportunities for the new generation which is inheriting the task of rebuilding this area back up to its former status of two million population, etc.!

But to get back to medical facilities: Tsianglo had the most businesslike county health clinic we had seen, with two doctors and some nurses to give out-patient treatments. There was also an old graduate of the Provincial medical school in private practice, but the people said that only the richest could go to him because he charges so much for his medicines. "Dr." Yu, one of the pillars of the Tsianglo Church, owns a drug store and also sells a western medicine, and takes care of all the Church people there; but he never had any medical training.

We ran into a remarkable situation in Yangkou. There our host, Dr. Yu, had worked under Dr. Bliss in Shaowu many years ago, and had studied enough medical books on his own so that he was able to pass the government examinations for a license to practice medicine in 1926. Ever since he has been practicing medicine, but this year he has gotten the urge to start a modern hospital. At first he wanted it to be a branch hospital under ours, but since we were in no position to help him, he went after things himself. He wangled a lot of CNRRA supplies from Foochow, got the local citizenry to raise an endowment fund—in addition to putting a large chunk of his own fortune into the enterprise. And now he already has four nurses imported from Foochow—we have only one such outsider to date. He wants to buy a microscope and an autoclave from us. The only thing that has him stopped is the matter of a hospital building. He took us through the various possibilities; the only one anywhere near feasible used to belong to the Church but was given to the government for their primary school. But we wouldn't want it back anyway because the floors and ceilings are so rotten they actually sag as in an exaggerated cartoon, and I was literally afraid to go upstairs for fear the floor would collapse under my weight. I see nothing for him but to start building a new building, which is much easier said than done with present-day prices. Meanwhile he is carrying on his flourishing out-patient practice in his own home, and cheerfully gets up at any hour of the night to go on a house call—something which is quite rare even among qualified physicians in China. He doesn't know beans about the theory of medicine, but he has picked up a lot of practical knowledge and skill during his twenty years of practice, and has the confidence and admiration of all the people of Yangkou and neighboring villages, who depend on him as their only source of medical care. With this amazing spirit and enterprise, he is certainly more of an asset than liability, despite his lack of formal training. He wants me to come down to Yangkou for four months and teach him modern medicine. But he is fifty-two years old, and I can't even speak his language adequately yet—at least for explaining technical matters, so what good could I do?

Shaowu looked mighty good to us when we finally pulled in, and our homes seemed mighty comfortable. In contrast to most of the places we had passed through, Shaowu seemed quite refined and civilized. The hospital people gave me a welcome that was heart-wringing in its extravagance. They had apparently done perfectly all right, while I was gone, but are all quite discouraged now because of the recent spurt in prices. I told them that the Nanping hospital had solved that problem easily enough; they simply decided to double all wages and patients' fees, all up and down the board. The boys here said that they could afford to do that in Nanping where they had already established a reputation and could attract the wealthiest patients. But here, the fact that prices have doubled does no mean that everyone is twice as rich, and if we pulled that stunt the patients would stop coming. But meanwhile they were afraid that what staff we have would be tempted to go to places like Nanping, where they could be guaranteed higher salaries. Institutional loyalty is a fine thing, they said, but you couldn't sit back and watch your family starve. So I am not sure just how receptive they will be to all my glowing reports of the opportunities we have in North Fukien for expansion and service, etc.

Best regards to all.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

We always like to get off with a good start. We seem to make better progress all day through if we can get a good start in the morning. If we have a long trip to make, the earlier we can get on the way, the better we like it.

It seemed that we got a good start the first of last year, 1947, and it seemed that everything was encouraging all the year through. We had pretty clear Sundays most of January and February. People got out to church and the collections were good. They really were encouraging all through the year.

It has not been so encouraging so far this year. The weather so far has been cold and the ground covered with snow and ice most of the time since Christmas Day. Collections have not been so good as last year. Up to February 12 last year, 1947, the churches had contributed $2,026.99, and Special Offering amounted to $1,654.26, making a total of $3,681.25. The income so far this year from the churches amounts to $855.04 and from Special Offerings we have received $1,245.24, making a total of $2,100.28 up to February 12, 1948. Not so encouraging, is it?

I do hope when the weather breaks up and warmer days come so people can get to church that you will think of the Orphanage and double your offerings and help us catch up with last year.

This year will make thirty-two years that I have been Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage. We want to make it the crowning year of our work here. We came so near reaching $50,000 during 1947 that we decided to set our goal at $50,000 for this year, 1948. And we ask our church people to give a little more and help us reach it, and make it the crowning year of our work here as your Superintendent. I think I would be the happiest person in the Christian denomination. Let us make up our minds now to see to it that we will not stop until we reach it.

Easter will be here on the 28th of March. The good women have all through the years sent in new Easter dresses for the girls and little spring suits for the boys. Oh! how happy they are to get them, and how pretty and happy they look on their way to church on Easter Sunday morning, all dressed up in their new outfits. I wanted to call this to the attention of the Women's Missionary Societies and the Ladies' Aid Society, so they can make their plans to make the children happy at Easter.

are not a racial inheritance but a social product; human nature is flexible.

There are problems in the adjustment of Shinto to the new Japanese culture, but they are not insurmountable. Military defeat, we are told, has destroyed the myth of divine mission and supernatural protection; "The Japanese people, if left to their own choice, will never want to go to war again." The Japanese, furthermore, have a deep regard for benevolence, justice, sincerity, and world peace. Given proper recognition and status among the nations of the world, says Mr. Holtom; given a "vital stake in genuine democracy at the world level," the Japanese nation will make a vital contribution to world order.

TEACHING THE WORLD TO READ.

Frank C. Laubach. The Friendship Press. New York City.

The book was written in answer to many requests for information on the mass literacy programs developed by Dr. Laubach in 90 language areas around the world. The development of picture-word-syllable charts, word lists and literature, teacher training, and the mobilization of community interest and support behind such a campaign are described by Dr. Laubach.

It was during his thirty-year service as a missionary to the Moros in the Philippines that he started an educational program to teach adults to read in their own language. Since 1934 he has traveled to India, Africa, the Near East, Central and South America, setting up literacy programs with the cooperation of local governments.

Dr. Edward L. Thorndike, Professor Emeritus of Education at Teachers College, Columbia University, recommends the book to "all who seek to promote the welfare of the world by the education of its backward people."

SMITH.

We, the members of the Board of Deacons of the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, Va., hereby express our appreciation of the good life and long and faithful services of the late Deacon R. Lee Smith, who passed away after a long and lingering illness.

Mr. Smith was quiet and modest in spirit, friendly in attitude, and faithful in the performance of his duties. He loved his church and as long as his health permitted he attended the services of worship. He tried to live a consistent Christian life and had the respect and confidence of those who knew him. He was devoted to his family and his home was characterized by a strange atmosphere and a wholesome religious spirit.

We hereby express our sympathy to the members of his family circle. May the grace of God sustain and comfort them.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. W. B. WILLIAMS,
L. J. BROWN,
H. S. HARDCASTLE,

RUDD.

We, the members of Monticello Congregational Christian Church, submit the following in honor of our beloved member, Miss Tora Rudd, who passed away on September 26, 1947.

Miss Rudd became a member of Monticello Church at an early age, and was a faithful and consecrated leader of the young people for many years.

She was a versatile and devoted Christian leader. Her interest in the betterment of humanity led her into many phases of work. Not only in the church but in the school room, N. Y. A., and Red Cross work as well.

Prior to her decline in health, she was Young Peoples worker in the Burlington Church for a number of years where she formed many lasting friendships.

Her interest in her church and community was not lost in her many, and varied contacts. We shall miss her, but feel that her influence for good will continue on, in the lives of others.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we are grateful for what her life has meant to us as individuals and also, for what it has meant to those whom she served.

2. That we realize God doeth all things well. While we mourn the loss of one who has meant much to us, and others as well, we bow in humble submission to his divine will.

3. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, one sent to the family, and a copy be entered on our church record.

Respectfully submitted,

RUSSELL McKINNEY,
Mrs. J. E. CUMBIE,
WILLIAM SMITH,
Committee.

BEALE.

On November 15, 1947, our church and community was saddened by the death of our friend and brother, Ernest L. Beale.

As an attorney-at-law actively engaged in his profession until death, he was at all times an interested and active worker in all uplifting civic and community enterprise. He was a loyal and faithful worker in the Franklin Congregational Christian Church of which he was a member for more than forty-six years. During those many years of service to his church he had served as Deacon for thirty-seven years, had been Secretary and Treasurer of the church, Superintendent of Sunday school and teacher in the boys' department and the adult department. His services were not limited to the church of which he was a member as for many years he had served on important committees of the Eastern Virginia Conference and the Southern Convention.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That our church has sustained a great loss in the death of our faithful and loyal brother.

2. That we hold in fond remembrance his high and devoted Christian life and strive always to emulate those noble and Godly principles of our church for which he so earnestly worked to uphold in his life.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy be spread on the minutes of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church and a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

J. LETCHER ELEY,
DARDEN W. JONES,
L. B. NORFLEET,
Committee.

ALLRED.

On May 26, 1947, God in his infinite wisdom called home brother David T. Allred at the age of ninety-five years.

He had been a faithful and devoted member of Concord Christian Church, Caswell County, N. C., for fifty years.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.

2. That we extend to his family and loved ones our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and pray God's blessings on them.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy placed on our church record.

Mrs. W. R. SIMMONS,
WALTER B. SIMPSON,
EMMIT B. TATE,
Committee.

ELEY.

Mrs. Annie D. Eley, widow of the late John W. Eley, of Suffolk, Va., died at her home at 118 Franklin Street. She is survived by two sons: John C. and Claude E. Eley, both of whom live in Suffolk, and one grandson, Claude E. Eley, Jr. Mrs. Eley had lived to a ripe old age, been a faithful member of the Suffolk Christian Church, and several of its organizations; and had contributed well of her talents and interest as a good citizen of her community. She not only was greatly loved by her family but by her large circle of friends.

The funeral services were conducted at her late residence by her pastor, the writer, assisted by Rev. H. S. Harcastle of Newport News, Va. The large number of beautiful floral offerings were a fitting tribute to her noble life. May the heavenly Father's blessing be upon those who are left behind.

How One Church Increased Its Membership

By ALFRED WESLEY HURST

The Cleveland Park Church of Washington, D. C., had a net increase in its active membership during the past three years of 37 per cent. Several factors have contributed to this increase. One is the fact that our church is located in a large residential area which is not over-churched. Moreover, Washington has experienced a great increase in population in recent years.

In the second place, the church has followed a very definite plan of recruitment. This includes a training class for church membership, covering a two-year period, for seventh and eighth grade boys and girls. During the last month of the course the minister takes charge of the class to prepare the boys and girls for confirmation the second Sunday in June. In addition, a pastor's class is conducted during the Lenten season for young people of high school and college age who for various reasons have not had an opportunity to receive such training. These are received into membership on Easter Sunday.

Twice each year for three successive evenings a group of visitors has gathered at the parsonage for supper and instructions from the minister, who has given instructions while the visitors were eating, in order to save time. The importance of the work was stressed and rather concrete suggestions made as to how to carry on a successful visit. As soon as the supper was concluded the visitors were given assignments and sent out promptly to spend the evening not only in friendly visitation, but for the definite purpose of extending an invitation to unite with the church on a specified day. Usually this membership Sunday has been set so that the minister will have an opportunity to call on those who express a desire to join before the actual day of freedom. This group of visitors has not been large but it is in no small measure responsible for the marked increase in our membership.

In the third place the minister keeps a complete file of prospects. Into this file go the names of all who have expressed an interest in our church, no matter how slight that interest may be. It may be a Sunday morning visitor, a guest at the Women's Association or the Men's Club, the Young People's Society, parents of the Church School children or new people who have moved into the community who as yet do not have a church home. At frequent intervals the entire congregation is asked to register on cards provided for this purpose. An information coupon on the church calendar provides for registration of such matters as "newcomer," "visitor," "desire a visit," "interested in becoming a member," etc. Every member is urged to consider himself a member of the lookout committee and report names of people who he thinks might become interested in the church. Names gathered in these and other ways are placed on our mailing list, and are sent literature and invitations to church meetings from time to time. Also the minister and the deacons and deaconesses call in as many homes as possible.

The philosophy back of our recruitment is that no matter how inviting a church program may be, it is impossible to build a church without personal contacts. It has been said that of those who unite with a city church not more than 5 per cent take the initiative. Our experience here would bear that out. If the masses of unchurched people in our urban centers are to be reached the church must go to them where they are, and extend a hand of friendship and of love.

I have said nothing of the church's program as a factor; This has been assumed. The most important element in the growth of any church, urban or rural, is a program of the highest quality, providing for all ages as well as interest groups, helping people to meet their problems and thereby grow toward Christian maturity. No church should be satisfied with less than the best in its program for adults, young people and children.—The Middle Atlantic Conference Edition of The Missionary Herald.

Why I Favor Union With the Evangelical and Reformed Church

By ALBERT W. PALMER

Moderator of the General Council

We Congregational Christians here in America are this year in the valley of decision regarding a proposed organic union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. We have over one million and one hundred thousand members and they have over seven hundred thousand. Together, we should soon be a body of two million strong. In national distribution we supplement each other admirably. We are strong in New England, where they do not exist. They are strong in Pennsylvania, where we are weak. Our ancestors were English people who came to this country seeking freedom in 1620 on the "Mayflower" and other less famous ships thereafter. Their ancestors came to Pennsylvania from Germany, Switzerland and Holland a hundred years later, also seeking freedom. We are descendants of the Protestant reformation as expressed in Calvin and John Robinson; they look back with reverence to Calvin and Zwingli. Both Robinson and Zwingli were less austere than Calvin and their greater liberality of spirit has developed appropriately in the freedom and liberality of the two denominations which have sprung from them.

The proposed "Basis of Union" appeals to me strongly as both fair and democratic. It will preserve and combine the best traditions of both groups. No one denomination has the whole of Christianity in its keeping. We Congregational Christians have something to give, and also something to learn. Let us welcome this opportunity to enlarge our household of faith. The things that unite us are the great truths of the gospel—the things that separate us are secondary and capable of reconciliation and adjustment. United, we shall form an influential and representative Christian body in American life than either of us can be alone.

Of course, primitive Congregationalism knew no such organization as we find necessary amid our modern social order. Such institutions as the Association, with its oversight of church and ministerial standing, the State Conference, with its paid superintendent, the various missionary societies, yes, even the General Council itself—all these are relatively new features which have arisen to meet new needs. But they have been proper and natural developments in the historic evolution of Congregational church government. They prove that it is possible to have organizational efficiency without encroaching unduly on the freedom of the local church. They expand the fellowship feature of Congregationalism without destroying the equally important local autonomy feature. It is in this same truly Congregational way that, in my judgment, we shall be proceeding under the proposed union. After all, if Congregationalism is a living thing, it must be able to change and grow, and not be imprisoned in the rigidities of past tradition. We must develop into the kind of church that will serve the present age effectively—a creative laboratory, not a historical museum.

Some suggest that Christian union should come by federation. That certainly is one way; and the proposed merger is neither a substitute for, nor a block to, all the federation possible. It simply makes us a stronger, and therefore, more helpful participant in all the federation we can possibly achieve. Isn't this a good formula for Christian unity: Let those denominations unite that can unite; and, beyond that, federate with all others so far as they can do so with sincerity and in loyalty to those historic truths they hold in trust for all mankind.

I believe that this union, if entered into with high devotion to Christ and his cause and in mutual trust and love for one another, would mean a great spiritual awakening in all our churches. We shall stand together with newly discovered comrades in a common loyalty to a religion of faith and freedom. We shall be able to face a troubled and divided world as fresh witnesses to the strength and unifying power of the gospel of our Lord!

NEWS AND VIEWS

Two of our Eastern Virginia ministers, Drs. I. W. Johnson and F. S. Lewis, are on vacation in Florida.

First Church, Norfolk, has announced its plan to secure a ten per cent increase in membership by Easter.

The Elon Alumni Banquet for Eastern Virginia will be held Friday evening at Suffolk Christian Church.

The book review on Modern Japan and Shinto Nationalism, which appeared in last week's issue, was written by Dean D. J. Bowden of Elon College.

Rev. Carroll H. Beale was the guest preacher last Sunday morning at Oakland, and Rev. H. E. Crutchfield preached at Liberty Spring in the afternoon.

The Knights of Pythias were guests last Sunday morning at the Suffolk Christian Church. Dr. John G. Truitt preached on "The Beauty and Glory of True Friendship."

Rosemont Church, Norfolk, held a special service last Sunday evening commemorating the 38th anniversary of Scouting in America. Rev. H. G. Council preached on the subject: "Preparedness for Life."

AT LEAST TEN PER CENT.

Remember, "... and to seek a membership gain of at least ten per cent in each church." We made that resolution—fifty pastors, in solemn sacred assembly January 6, 1948, at the Elon Convention of Pastors. That would mean 148 new members in the Suffolk Church. That seems like a large number for us to undertake.

Let each pastor figure it out for his church, or churches. It will look large for each pastor, no doubt. But will we continue to put resolutions on our records without trying to carry them into completion? God's servants with the resources of heaven back of us, and the urgent need before us, should consider very seriously before we pass that resolution up with some rationalistic shrug of the shoulder.

In union there is strength. Let us get somebody else in our local church to see the need of winning others to Christ. One of the surest ways to increase the community's interest in our church is to get the church to doing something. Here is a challenge to increase our membership by at least ten per cent. To do that there must be prayer, and performance. To do that there must be increased faith and religious zeal on the part of the pastor and a number of his members. That result alone is greatly worthwhile. But the help of new people to enter into the faith, and to share the fellowship of the church is supremely worthwhile. Perhaps many of us will not be able, with our little faith, to reach the goal in full, but we cannot excuse ourselves until we have tried.

Let us get others to join with us in putting this job over. Having found the prospects let us create in the hearts of our coworkers the desire to win them, and then go after them enthusiastically, sincerely, and with the spirit of prayerful helpfulness. God will bless us and that right early.

CONFERENCE OF CHILDREN'S LEADERS TO BE HELD IN GREENSBORO.

Key leaders in children's work of nine denominations met Friday, January 9 at 12:30 P. M., at the First Congregational Christian Church, Greensboro, N. C., and began plans for an Interdenominational Regional Conference for Children's Leaders to be held in Greensboro, April 7-9, according to Miss Frances C. Query, of the staff of the North Carolina Council of Churches and chairman of this Regional Conference.

This spring's conferences will be one in a series of twenty-nine meetings sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education, to be held in the United States and Canada. It will follow up the International Children's Conference that was held in Des Moines, Iowa, last July.

Miss Ruth Elizabeth Murphy, Director of Vocation Religious Education for the International Council, Chicago, headed the list of those who attended Friday's meeting. Others present were Mrs. W. E. Wiseman, Greensboro; Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Elon College; Rev. Thomas Inabinett, Wilson; Miss Jessie Leonard, Lexington; Mrs. E. K. Bodie, Kannapolis; Miss Sara Little, Charlotte; Miss Ruth Day, Greensboro; Mrs. O. D. Nelson, Greensboro; Mrs. J. H. Cole, Greensboro; Mrs. J. A. Dillard, Winston-Salem; Miss Hattie Parrott, Raleigh; Mrs. R. A. Bradley, Durham; Miss Frances C. Query, Durham.

Denominational leaders of Christian and Children's work in surrounding cities and states, delegates to the Des Moines conference, and others will help to plan the regional meeting which will bring a selected group of children's leaders to Greensboro in the spring for this Conference.

Major purposes of the regional meeting will be to highlight the need of children for religious training with a view to reaching and teaching all children of the nation and to provide practical help in various leadership responsibilities and in interpreting timely source materials.

The Commands of Human Needs

By VERE V. LOPER, Pastor, First Congregational Christian Church, Berkeley, Calif.
Message Given at the Midwinter Meeting in Grand Rapids, Michigan

During World War I, two chaplains happened to be on the same landing craft as they approached a defended beach. A Catholic chaplain seeing a boy fall under fire in the surf jumped into the water and attempted to rescue him. He in turn was struck by a bullet. His companion, the Protestant chaplain, started to rescue him. The commanding officer cautioned: "You must not go." The chaplain insisted, "I have orders from a higher command." Called by the need of his fellow chaplain, he plunged into the water to save him.

In the complexity of human life, we frequently hear conflicting voices bidding us to obey. As Christians, we have in common the necessity to heed the higher command which we believe to come from God himself. We are convinced that we hear this higher command of God speaking through a wide variety of the vehicles by which God makes His will known to us. The Father spoke to the chaplain through the need of his fellow chaplain. He obeyed. God spoke to Jesus through the cry of two blind men: "Have mercy upon us, thou son of David." Jesus obeyed. Many times God speaks also to us when we confront human need in his Presence. We, too, must obey.

I.

The command of need is, first, that we shall listen with sympathetic concern to the cries of need which come from every part of our globe. The demand is that we shall live in our world as it is. The expectation is that we shall be as concerned about the distress of the other children of God as we expect Him to be attentive when we appeal, "out of the depths, I cry into Thee, O God."

This command of need may seem almost too modest an expectation of us. Yet it is one which we can answer. We can not meet all of the needs of the world. We can not even answer the total needs of those to whom we are bound in intimate ties of friendship. But we can keep our ears unstopped.

Furthermore we will never do anything until we do listen with genuine concern to the appeal for help. This is the beginning of all that we may accomplish. It is the driving power by which we move forward. God can not do anything through us until we first learn to share His agony for the suffering of men. God can frequently do more through us than we dream if only we come to know and care how "the other half" live in the slums of America and the war-torn debris of Europe and Asia.

Frequently when all that we can do is to make our concern evident, we will have lifted some of the burden from other shoulders. Even when men feel that they must endure without help a situation which can not be changed, they yet receive a lift when they know of the concern of others for them. The burdens are lighter when we do not walk alone.

We have not heard all of the calls of distress which we might have heard. But we have been reasonably obedient to the command—"hear the cry of the world." We have heard at times when the cries were only the silent yearnings of human hearts. We might well recall some which have come out of our experience. Here are some that I have heard or you have related. They are real and and they are typical of those which we have all heard. We did not stop our ears to them.

"I am an English pastor. With a sad heart I look at debris which was once my church. One generation built it. Many loved it. You can not destroy a human life, but you can obliterate a building. I am one of 14,000 English pastors, a still greater number of continental Protestant pastors who will never again see the outward form of the Houses of God which they loved."

"I am a policeman of the Hague. They called a sudden inspection of our clothes. I am one of the ninety per cent who were wearing only the outer clothing and the shoes furnished me by the police department. It was a humiliating experience but perhaps it is as well that our need for clothing should be known."

"I am a mother of France. My baby has only a sixty per cent chance to live, but at least she has a mother and father. They are not publishing her picture to locate her parents. However she is one of the 40,000,000 children of Europe and 64,000,000 of China who will not have enough to eat if you do not act quickly."

"I am a woman of Austria. Perhaps you saw me on my hands and knees following the harvesting machine to gather the stray grains of wheat which may fall."

"I am a German father who was on that train which struck a cow and killed it. I was among the first off the train. Fortunately, I had a knife and was able to cut some of the meat from that carcass which became bare bones so rapidly. I took off my shirt and wrapped the meat in it. I took it home to my children."

"I am a man without a country. My home was the Baltic states. My only crime is that I refuse to live in my country as long as communists dominate it. I am what they call a displaced person. I am one of millions without a home. Some of your Congressmen do not care to have me in your country. I wonder if they would not welcome me if they really knew me. Meanwhile I look out at you from behind barbed wire. Apparently this is the only place that God's children in all the world can find for me."

"I am a missionary of China. I have come back to work in the institution to which I gave my life. I found my college in ruins. I stood

DOCUMENTS ON UNION.

The question of church union is unavoidable in any representative gathering of our churches today. The Midwinter Meeting did not escape it. After prolonged discussion the following statement, presented by the Rev. Howard Conn, was adopted by those present:

"The ministers and lay people assembled at the Mid-Winter Meeting of the Missions Council of our Congregational Christian Churches entered into a discussion of the proposed union of our churches with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Both proponents and opponents were represented in the discussion and the atmosphere was one of earnest inquiry and tolerant understanding. The entire group was heartened by the further interpretation of the Basis of Union as approved by members of the Joint Committee and recognized this interpretation as a clear-cut statement of intent to preserve the traditional polity of the autonomy of the local church. The hope of the overwhelming majority of those present was that we may continue to move toward the consummation of the proposed union as a vital contribution to the ecumenical movement."

The interpretation referred to in the statement appears on the back page of this issue. It has been released by Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, Chairman of the Education Committee appointed by the Executive Committee of the General Council, with the following notation.

"The comments on the Basis of Union were drawn largely by Dr. Alfred Grant Walton as a series of interpretations which, if agreed to by responsible leaders of both the Evangelical and Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian Churches, would clarify important points of issue regarding the Basis of Union, and give assurance that our essential Congregational Christian polity and freedom would be protected and preserved.

"The members of the Joint Commission on Union whose names appear here have agreed upon the accuracy of these comments and interpretations. The members of the Executive Committee of the General Council likewise concur in believing that these comments are a true interpretation of the essential articles of the Basis of Union.

"A number of persons present at the Midwinter Meetings said frankly and openly that this clarification changed their own position from questioning or opposition to approval of the Basis of Union. It was the request of this meeting that the Executive Committee take the appropriate steps to submit these two documents to the ministers and people of our churches for their information also."

It is earnestly hoped that these documents may have the studied attention of our readers and that all who have viewed the Statement of Purpose with misgivings may find herein satisfactory clarification.

FUNERAL STEWARDSHIP.

Mr. Rees M. Evans, a long time member of the Congregational Church of Ipswich, S. D., died and funeral services were conducted by the Rev. David Graham on November 23. By request of the family floral tributes were kept to a minimum and donations were made to the building fund instead. On the day of the funeral, according to the report on "The Pilgrim Herald," $63.00 was turned over to the Treasurer of this fund. This practice continues the precedent set at the death of a Mr. Bebermyer some time ago. Who dare follow in their train?

HOMILETIC ANNIVERSARY.

"The Colorado Pilgrim" gives an interesting account of Dr. Warren H. Denison's visit at Rifle, Colo. While conducting a series of stewardship institutes in the state, Dr. Denison visited Mrs. Horace Mann and her daughter's family. His first sermon fifty years ago had been preached in the church of his friend, Rev. Horace Mann, then pastor of the Christian Church in Rifle. President Theodore Roosevelt was a friend of Mann's and when he came West on a hunting trip he spoke with Dr. Mann at our nearby church at Fairview, which was a mission church of the Rifle Christian Church.

Congratulations, although belated, to Dr. Denison. It is our hope that he may continue preaching and conducting stewardship institutes for years to come!

BRAVO, METHODISTS!

The Methodists are to be commended for their carefully formulated plan to enroll their membership as total abstainers from all alcohol. The plan, preceded by an educational campaign, and followed by a tabulation of results, should greatly strengthen the temperance cause. February 15 was Temperance Day in Methodist Churches. How we need to tackle the menace of alcohol within as well as without the Church!

A century ago Theobald Mathews, a Roman Catholic priest, called his people together in a school room in Cork, Ireland, and challenged them to pledge themselves to total abstinence. Sixty responded and the greatest temperance campaign of history was launched. It swept over Ireland, Scotland, crossed to England and America. The Columbia Encyclopedia gives 7,000,000 as the estimated number of converts to total abstinence resulting from this campaign. Another mighty resurgence of the temperance movement is past due.

Fate often puts all the material for happiness and prosperity into a man's hands just to see how miserable he can make himself with them.—Don Marquis.

"Above All Selfish Fears and Cares"

A Meditation on the Union

By TRUMAN B. DOUGLAS

When two denominational families within the Christian Church are considering union with one another, there comes a time when they may properly hear those words from a familiar form of invitation by which worshippers are bidden to the Table of the Lord's Supper: "Lift up your minds and hearts above all selfish fears and cares." After the issues have been weighed and the organizational details worked out, there is a time when prudential matters and questions of expediency ought to be laid aside. There is a time when debate needs to be silenced so that we may distinguish between those concerns which belong to the realm of "selfish fears and cares" and those which are quickened by eagerness to know the mind of Christ. There is a time when we are required to open our hearts to God's searching and let Him ask us whether we are being directed by our trust or by our fearfulness, whether we are acting in the boldness of the Gospel or in the timidity of those who shrink from every prospect of change in their accustomed ways, whether our loyalty is to the mind of Christ or to the traditions of men.

We believe that there is a mind of Christ for His Church. All programs, politics, administrations, proposed changes are by Christian people to be judged by their consonance with what we are able to know of His purpose and will. Any union of churches will be fruitless unless it is entered upon as a response to God's specific calling to us in this moment of history. But something disastrous will happen in the life of our fellowship if this should be God's calling and we should reject it.

Why do we believe that our fellowship is being called into this union? Why do we believe that it is much more than merely a "good idea" for joining the strength of two bodies of churches, that it has the character of a divine imperative?

We are being called, first of all, because God is deeply disturbing the mind and conscience of the Christian Community concerning its divisions. In the hearts of multitudes of Christian people there is a profound uneasiness and contrition at being partitioned from one another in separate groups. These groups no longer represent, in their dividedness, convictions sufficiently central to the Christian faith to justify the continuance of this separation. We are not required to pass judgment upon the historic disputes and decisions which led to these divisions, but we are required to look into our own hearts and ask whether we can allow ourselves to be complacent toward their perpetuation.

We believe that our disunity conceals the nature of the Church. The Church in its deepest nature is the New Society in which the alienations of culture and history are overcome. It is the New Race which denies all races. It is the New Nation which rejects all nationalisms. But the Church as the Community which transcends these separatisms is not made visible before the eyes of men so long it is unable to transcend the divisions between one body of Christians and another.

We believe that our disunity hinders the witness of the Church. Jesus prayed, "That they all may be one, . . . that the world may believe." The world today does not believe, and the Church must ask in all humility how much of the world's disbelief is due to the fact that we are not one. We cannot in our disunity bear witness to the reconciling power of the Gospel. When the churches of America plead with the members of the United Nations to heal their differences, it can scarcely fail to be noted that these pleas are spoken in the voices of two hundred and sixty-five denominations who themselves have been unable to get together.

We believe that our disunity seriously impedes the mission of the Church. The Protestant churches today are fighting a series of guerilla actions instead of pursuing a grand strategy in the warfare of love. They cannot in their dividedness meet the assaults of anti-Christian movements which are closely articulated and able to demand the utmost in discipline and obedience for the sake of the cause.

A divided Protestantism will continue to want for leadership. Some of the ablest students in the seminaries are turning away from the parish ministry because they contemplate with dismay the multitude of competing churches, many of them engaged in a heart-breaking struggle for bare survival, which simply do not provide a dedicated leadership with man-sized jobs.

Until Protestantism begins to overcome its divisions it must continually apologize for the waste of money and effort which its separations entail. The gains in cooperation during the past three decades are not enough. The mere maintenance and management of the machinery of cooperation have become a burden of no small size. When one considers the amount of time and energy spent in the negative task of trying to keep out of one another's way, one is overwhelmed by a feeling of waste and futility.

We are being called to take one step away from this crippling separateness and toward the unity of the Church of Christ. What other denominations shall do is not at the moment our responsibility. Nor are other and more inclusive plans sufficiently far advanced to permit us to take decisive action in their favor. The call of God to further the unity of His Church comes, like every call of God, with immediate particularity. It comes to our particular fellowship at this particular time in the particular form of an opportunity to join the life of our communion with that of a sister denomination. We cannot by ourselves accomplish the full "reunion" of the churches, but we can demonstrate that the power to break down the walls of partition is at work among us.

We are being called into this union because our Congregational Christian heritage and experience have been fitting us to give leadership in venturing something for the cause of Christian unity. When in 1648 the Cambridge Platform was finally accepted by all the churches of New England, one of the deputies elected to the Synod gave his explanation of this unanimity. The Platform was subscribed to by the churches, he said, not because "a Synod hath spoken it, but because the Lord hath spoken it by His Spirit."

When the churches of our fellowship vote, as I believe they shall, to unite with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, it will not be because a Committee on the Union has counselled it but because the Spirit of God has counselled it, moving upon the hearts of this company of His people.

For this freedom were we Congregationalists set free. Our liberty is freedom to walk with boldness and expectancy in new ways. Even if the conditions of union required us to alter some of our cherished customs of church life (which they do not), we still should have to ask in all prayerfulness whether a freedom which can be defended only at the cost of perpetual separations is an

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Will God have to look somewhere else than in our own Christian homes for recruits to the mission fields and the ministry? Are our children being considered in the light of the world's urgent need for Christian instruction, direction, and hope? History teaches us that the nations have been inventing bigger and more effective instruments of war and destruction, and have not been throwing them aside but using them. Recently as we all know some fairly destructive ones have been invented. It will be a sight to see them in full action!

The world needs the Christian teacher—thousands of them; the world needs the Christian missionary—thousands of them—and along that way we could go adding the minister, the physician, the nurse, inventor, scientist, the Christian citizen ad infinitum. Without these in the coming day we may not need much of anything else.

I am writing these lines on the World Day of Prayer. What a fine thing it would be if every Christian parent prayed this day that God would use their son and daughter—their children—to help bring enough Christian thinking into the world to lead it into the ways of brotherhood and constructive sharing and fellowship. Will God have to go elsewhere than right in our own Christian homes to find boys and girls who will devote their lives to such an aim? The Church and the Christian home have no bigger question to answer than that. The Church and the Christian home should be giving a great deal of thinking, and doing a great deal of praying, along that line.

Having made those statements I wish to take my hat off, then, to the Christian lay people in our churches who are doing such fine work in Sunday school classroom, woman's missionary society, and through children's and youth organizations toward leading us all into the ways of bringing up our children in the atmosphere of Christian world thinking. Every pastor, and worker in our church should encourage everyone who has any hand in the training of our children—and especially those who have a hand right now in seeking to put this world Christian thinking into the heads and hearts of the young parents of little children.

And would it not be a good thing for us all—pastors, parents, teachers and leaders to humbly seek divine wisdom and foresight in this very, very important matter? Should not our Church, and churches, be alert to the training of our children as never before? To do that most effectively has not the church got to be more alert than ever to ministering its message of love and guidance to the makers of our homes? Today and early tomorrow this sickened and frightened world needs the help of the Christ as it may be ministered through the parents and the children of Christian homes. On this World Day of Prayer let us pray for the blessings of our children as they shall take their places in tomorrow's world.

NEW OFFICER ADDED.

It has been very gratifying to see how many young people's societies have added another officer to their cabinet—that of a reporter.

The reporter is responsible for the "publicity" of his society, seeing that the news about the activities are sent to me at the Convention Office for THE CHRISTIAN SUN or sent to Baxter Twiddy at Elon College, N. C., for the Convention newsletter, Youth Outreach.

Have you had a particularly good meeting lately? Did it "go over" better than some? Tell us about it—how it was planned, where you got the materials, who spoke, how you carried out your plans, what kind of "follow up" you had, if any.

Was your last party or social a lot of fun? Was it one of those good times you're going to remember for a long time? Tell us about it—where you held it, some of the things you did that were fun, what preparations went into it, what the refreshments were!

Did you have charge of a church service for the whole church recently? Was it different, yet inspirational? Tell us about it—who led, what kind of special music or reading or speaking you had, the theme of the service.

Has your group done something in the way of outside activity? Tell us about it—was it packing a box for Church World Service? Taking the younger children of the Sunday school on a party? Planning with your minister to help him in the Evangelistic Crusade? Assisting in the choir?

Helping form a new Sunday school class? Sponsoring a food sale? Buying some equipment for the church? Going on a "retreat"? Helping in your church's building program? Other things I haven't mentioned???

The projects and activities that you carry out may be just what another group would like to know about—then, using you as an example, do it, too!

Put your reporter to work! Send your news items and "write-ups" to: Mr. Baxter Twiddy, Editor, Youth Outreach, Box 42, Elon College, N. C., or to: Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., and we'll see that your group is "known for its good works" and its good deeds!

BETTY CHICOINE,
BAXTER TWIDDY.

P. S.: We'd like to suggest that you send in one news item once a month.

A LETTER TO THOSE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF YOUR CHURCH.

I've just finished compiling a list of Adult Advisers and Presidents of the Young People's Groups for the Southern Convention. The only records I had to go by were the annual reports sent in by the churches for their Conferences—and some of them were quite incomplete.

Some churches reported that they had no young people at all, but gave names of a President and Adult Adviser! Some churches said they had a young people's group, but listed no President or Adviser! It was hard to know what to do in such cases. However, I made a list, of sorts, so that I could mail materials, announcements, letters, and so on, for young people and their workers, in each church.

I discovered some facts about the young people's groups in the Convention, though, that I'd like to pass on. Out of the 191 churches listed in the Annual, four sent in no report; but from the 187 who reported, only 96 churches said they had a young people's organization! Only 96 churches gave the name of the President or the Adult Adviser with whom I might discuss matters of the young people and through whom I could reach the young people.

I know that in the other 91 churches there are young people and live organizations, too! I'd like to know about them—their activities and the part they play in the life of the church. If you have a young

News of Elon College

THE HEATING SYSTEM AT ELON COLLEGE.

Our fears have been realized. The heating plant at Elon College has broken down. We have a fine student body, a good faculty, and a fine spirit on the campus—everything that it takes to make a good college—but you can't conduct a college in dead of winter without heat for the comfort of faculty and students.

For two years the dangerous condition of our present heating facilities at the College has been brought to the attention of the Board of Trustees of the College, the officials, the ministers, and the churches of the Southern Convention with the repeated request to heed earnest warnings and respond to desperate appeals that there might be adequate heat for the College. The appeals were received and responded to in many instances but not in sufficient numbers to secure necessary facilities in time to pay the bills when they were created.

The Board of Trustees met at the College on February 10—one of the coldest and most unfavorable days from the standpoint of the weather that we have had in this section for years. On the evening of February 9 one stoker gave out completely, leaving only one boiler to operate. Toward the middle of the day it was necessary to let the fire die out of that one so that the other might be repaired. By working into the night on February 10 both boilers were put into operation. Today, February 12, one of the boilers is out of commission again. It will not be possible to get parts before Monday. Weather reports are to the effect that Friday and Saturday of this week will be the coldest days of the winter. Faculties and students are patient but restless and are becoming resentful.

I am aware that this report will not remedy conditions immediately, but our people should know the inconveniences and perhaps hardships that the students and faculty endure at the College. In laying these facts before certain members of the Building Committee, they received such reports with the shrug of the shoulder with the remark, "Oh, well, the boilers have lasted for forty years. They will certainly last another year." But unfortunately such remarks won't provide heat for the College.

The purpose of this report is to call to the attention of all who are interested and to make an appeal once again to our churches and to our friends for funds with which to pay for the heating plant now being installed. It should be stated again that the funds secured for the purpose of paying for buildings and improvements were lent to the Department of Christian Education for the purpose of establishing the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation. Payments on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation to be used to repay the loan. The Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation has been set up and the new professor added to that department at the beginning of the current college year. To date $72,345.76 has been received on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman foundation, leaving a balance of $27,654.24 to be collected. A total of $3,761.50 is due in pledges from individuals, and $35,629.98 is due from churches, making a total of $39,390.78 due in pledges. Many of these pledges were made to be paid on a five-year basis, and of course could not be collected earlier. However, if churches and individuals who have unpaid pledges could make an effort to send another payment now it would help tremendously. There are 109 of our churches, or more than half, that have neither accepted their quotas nor sent in contributions. There are six of our churches that have not accepted their voluntary quotas but have made some contribution. In the face of the existing emergency, would it be possible for these churches to send at least a token contribution? Any help that they may give to relieve the present situation would be

THE FIFTH SUNDAY.

Our Sunday schools and churches of the Southern Convention make monthly offerings throughout the church year to the orphanage and missions. They are asked to make quarterly offerings to the College. These quarterly offerings are comparatively infrequent but when they do come, they bring relief and encouragement.

Two very unusual things are happening this year: "Believe it or Not"—February with only twenty-nine days has five Sundays, one Sunday out of less than six days instead of one out of seven. The first and last days are both Sundays. The other unusual thing is that the College is facing a tragic emergency. The heating plant that has been in operation forty-three years has about failed completely. We have been without adequate heat for the College for this entire week, without any heat for a part of two days. No one needs to be reminded of the extreme weather that we are having. With the usual heating facilities at the College completely disrupted, no one needs to be told of the discomfort and suffering that both students and faculty members have been compelled to endure.

We are working as faithfully and as hard as we can, and we are getting along very well, but the new heating plant must be completed as quickly as of tremendous help. Won't you please heed your college's appeal?

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
January 26, 1948.

Dear Friends:

Can it be that Christmas was over a month ago? I hope time doesn't go as fast with you as it does with us. The only time that really seems to drag is that required for the arrival of the new member of the family due in March. Dorothy is fine now and we will leave in a month for Foochow where a hospital with every facility is available. We will go by sampan (an oversized rowboat) to Nanping (125 miles) in three days. If the water is high enough, we can make the remaining distance (125 miles) in one day by a charcoal burning steam launch. We hope the weather is warmer than it is now. The ground is covered with snow, and the thermometer says 24 degrees, the coldest this year. Since Chinese homes, churches, hospitals and schools have no stoves, we wonder how they keep warm. Dorothy, Frances Whitaker and I sit huddled around the fire as much as our work will allow. We brought a small stove with us from America and we are surely thankful to have it. We heard over the radio that in the Eastern states it has really been cold with temperatures around zero, so we ought not to complain.

We have been very pleasantly surprised to receive some very useful and unobtainable Christmas gifts from friends in America both for ourselves and for our Chinese friends. We had forgotten how good fruit cake, prepared puddings, toll house cookies and candy could taste. When the mailman came with word that there were some packages at the post office waiting for us, I went right away to get them.

Unfortunately China's desperate economic situation has caused the government to levy high customs duties on all imports, amounting on the average to 50 per cent of the value. So after settling for customs, I came home with my arms full of "surprises." Dorothy caught me with the camera as I came up the steps loaded down, and we hope you will be able to see the pictures sometime, too. We had a wonderful time opening them all—and still better—using and eating them. Our Chinese friends were thrilled with the things we shared with them. A bundle of clothing for babies arrived just as a nurse in the hospital (her husband also works in the office) had a baby, and she was tickled to get them. The young people were given their first taste of chewing gum. The tablets, pencils, paper, crayons, etc., will come in very handy in the Sunday school and summer vacation Bible school. The Christmas cards were as popular as could be. Many thanks to all of you who sent them.

I recently saw in THE SUN a list of instructions given by Mr. Harvey Meeken for sending parcels to China. To that I would like to add, if I may, the following suggestions based on the experiences we have had at this end. It goes without saying that only things should be sent which are not obtainable here because of high postage rates and high customs fees.

1. There is no duty and a low American postage rate on books, Christmas cards and printed matter if they are sent in separate packages and not included with other things. The outside of the package should be marked: Printed Matter—No Value.

1. In valuing things, mark them at the wholesale value (about two-thirds of retail cost). We have been told that this is within the requirements of Chinese law. Used things should be valued very low and marked Used. The highest duty is on new, ready-made clothing. Used clothing has no tax if plainly marked Used Clothing—No Value. It's a "good ole American custom" to mark the value way up for insurance purposes, but if you send a package to China, it's not a good idea.

3. Large heavy packages have less chance of coming through safely than small light ones. Most packages have come in pretty good condition—which speaks well for your wrapping; as they do take a beating.

4. Finally, if it is at all possible, even if it means sending less things, if you will send money to the American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston (for R. L. Jackson), to cover the customs, it will surely be appreciated. If you send approximately 50 per cent of value, it will cover. This is especially true of things for the hospital.

5. We have received no small number of letters asking, "What can we send which will help you in your work and personally?" To sit down and write a letter to each one is time consuming and difficult as we don't know whether you want to spend fifty cents or a thousand dollars. So we have gotten our heads together and prepared a list which can be used by those who want it.

Although we live much more simply than ever before, and although the people of Shaowu are economically much better off than in other parts of China, still our living standards are much higher than for the majority of people living around us. For that reason, we prefer that if you wish to do something for us you give the money toward one or more of the projects listed below.

1. The most important is the general support of our work. In 1948, the Southern Convention is seeking to raise $10,000 to provide funds for the work here. This money helps pay pastors' salaries, hospital doctors and nurses, our salaries, etc. Every bit of it comes to Shaowu. Contributions should be sent to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, North

2. The training of ministers, both in America and in China is a pressing need at this time. The women's missionary convention of the Southern Convention has very generously voted to set aside their life memorial and life membership fund to aid ministerial students in completing their theological education in America. There are three young men whom we hope to be able to help in this way. Your support of this project will be greatly appreciated, and we hope will pay big dividends in the future of the North Fukien Synod. There are several other young men who do not have the preparation and training to qualify them to come to America to study; but they are capable and earnest young men. These we hope to be able to help send to Chinese seminaries (Nanking and Foochow). At the present high cost of living, it costs about $10.00 a month (U.S.) for a student to attend seminary. Contributions for this work should be sent to the American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, marked: "For training ministerial students—North Fukien Synod, China."

3. Money is still needed for medicines, particularly malaria medicine. There is no limit to the need as the whole area is suffering from this disease which saps the strength and vitality from so many people. Money for this may be sent to the American Board and marked for "Shaowu Medical Work."

4. Six dollars (U.S.) per month will pay tuition, board and room to send a student to primary or junior high school. Children of poor parents can thus be helped to secure an education. This money should also be sent to Boston and marked "Shaowu Children's Educational Fund."

In addition, for those wishing to send packages, the following are most useful and unobtainable here:

Hospital—hand lotion and cream for nurses' use in cold weather; blotters, pen points and ink tablets; nipples (we now have plenty of bottles); pictures for public health and health education.

Gifts for the Chinese—fountain pens, either new or used; watches; soap, tooth brushes and paste; pocket knives; harmonicas; flashlights.

Items for Our Work—religious records for phonograph; mimeograph ink; cardboard cut-out figures (e.g. Christmas creche, figures, Bible characters, etc.); coloring books; knitting needles and wool yarn (avoid pale colors); religious pictures, S. S. leaflets (delete English writing); Christmas cards; games (Rook, Flinch, jigsaw puzzles, etc.), new or used; tennis net and balls; locks with two or three keys; K-135 Kodachrome film; 124 roll film; peanut bulbs for flash-light outfit; two bicycles for use of ministers serving rural parishes.

For Personal Use of Missionaries—toilet soap (do not pack with food); vegetable seeds for garden; glass mason quart jars; vanishing cream, hand cream or lotion; mild white laundry soap (not in same package with food); steel wool; good quality white cotton stockings for nurses—size 10; wool anklets—size 9½; white tape—various assorted sizes; foods—baking chocolate, chocolate chips, chocolate milk drinks, nuts (except peanuts, which are plentiful), candy, powdered milk, coffee (for percolator), jello and puddings, dehydrated or dried fruits, vegetables and soups, vanilla tablets, canned cheese, salad oil.

in the basement of the main building and looked straight through three floors to the sky. Only the sky seemed familiar."

"I am a child of India. You have heard that your garbage would start a fight in Rangoon. This is correct and I would be among those fighting for some of the scraps which you throw away."

"I am an American girl of Japanese descent. You remember the awful day when I had to leave your home and my beloved University. You know my Japanese father, who is not permitted to own property in California, but so loved America that he gave each of us American names—Marie, John and Ruth. He was not rugged enough for the evacuation camp. He is gone and I am eager as ever to express my Christian life by being a nurse but doors are shut every where in my face. You remember how eagerly I studied until 2 and 3 A. M. even when it was not examination week. Can you not help me to get a chance to study to be a nurse?"

"I speak to you from behind bars. The bars however are not those of a prison. If you inquire, 'What is thy name?' I reply, 'My name is Legion, for we are many.' I have found no Christ to heal, but my father and mother worship with you each Sunday. Surely, you can minister to them."

"I am a veteran. I was a Navy flier. I went through the thick of it. I heard all about that nonsense of 'no atheists in foxholes.' I never felt the impulse or (prayer did not belong in in that situation) the necessity to pray then. But as I face the problems of this University, my home, and the life ahead, I need to pray and I don't know how. Can you help me?"

These are typical cries from the multitude. We have heard them and known what Georgia Harkness meant when she said, "I listen to the agony of God." We, too, have listened and will listen. We will dare to live in this world and hear its cries of need.

We will "wait upon the Lord" as He comes to us in the noblest experiences of life that we may "renew our strength to minister to those whose cries of need he commands us to hear."

II.

The second command of need is that we shall do something practical to alleviate distress. This we have done. We have fed the sheep. In places such as Greece and China where our missionaries have been at work, the feeding has been done literally by the hands of our own servants. Within recent months we sent $10,000 worth of powdered milk to India and other quantities to Japan; $10,000 in Christmas food went to Europe; 500 pounds of candy brought joy for the children of England. This is but a slight indication of what we have done to feed the hungry.

We have clothed the naked. The Church World Service clothing barrel fills so rapidly outside our church office that the weekly visits from the clothing department will not suffice to provide for the steady flow of clothing out of our stocked closets to the shivering backs of suffering peoples.

Out of some of the ruins of the world, we are helping to reconstruct homes, schools, hospitals, churches. Our American young people have shared in building a school in France and a city set on a hill near Frankfurt. Our unit at Naples was so effective in getting people out of caves that they have been made official advisers for housing in Naples. Four hundred libraries for carefully selected books have been put into the studies of ministers and seminaries in twenty-two countries. We are rebuilding mission stations.

We have remembered the phrase of Peter, "Such as I have I give to you." He gave health to the beggar. We have helped to bring health to a world where the aftermath of war has been disease running rampant across the world killing more than fell in battle. Scientific studies to build health have been made in Italy. Nurses and doctors driven from their

Little Friends:

Do some of you like to study or read history? It was my favorite subject throughout my school days. When I entered college that was the subject I chose for my major, or the course that I would devote the most hours of work. Even today I like to recall dates and incidents and I am especially interested in the history of our Church, and for the next few weeks I shall write about some of the men who made history in the Christian Church. I am beginning with a very romantic one whose name was Joseph Thomas but who was known as "The White Pilgrim."

Joseph Thomas was born in North Carolina near the Haw River in the year 1791. When he was just a little boy he was separated from his parents, we do not know why, and lived with unkind people. His boyhood was filled with hard work and unhappy times. Later his older brother took him to Virginia and sent him to a school near his home. On a summertime visit, in his teens, he was attending a camp meeting when he decided to become a Christian. He was baptized by James O'Kelly and began to preach although he wasn't yet twenty years old.

His health was poor and he probably had tuberculosis but whenever possible he traveled alone or with other ministers teaching and preaching. He was noted for his beautiful manner of speech—eloquence described his sermons. So the years passed. He was married and lived in the Valley of Virginia when he decided to give up fashionable living and "fashionable raiment" as he said and began to dress simply in white clothing and that is how he got his name—White Pilgrim. He wrote and was interested in music and in 1815 published his Pilgrim's Hymn Book. After a visit to the West he went to New York where he contracted small pox during an epidemic and died in 1835.

Our church at Haw River has a memorial window to Joseph Thomas. Have some of you seen it? I have stopped there several times during the week and have never found the church open. Unfortunately I have never been nearby on a Sunday. I do hope some day to see it.

The one picture I have seen of the White Pilgrim shows him in a white suit with a white tie and long hair—parted in the middle and combed behind his ears. His expression is serious but he also has a serene look.

Here is a stanza from a poem about the Pilgrim written by the Rev. John Ellis:

I came to the spot where the white pilgrim lay,
And pensively stood by his tomb;
When in a low whisper I heard something say—
How sweetly I sleep here alone.

INTERRUPTED.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

The baby had been edging along the floor trying to reach a red plastic ball. Finally he succeeded. He clasped it tightly with his chubby hands and was about to find out how it tasted, when his mother, having suddenly decided it was time for his ride, took the ball away from him. Stiffening with anger, he cried lustily and long.

No wonder! His investigation was thus rudely broken up; he had been absorbed—learning about the ball. A young child's span of attention is never very long, so a little more witchfulness and patience on this mother's part would have made it quite possible to avoid interrupting the baby. Those few moments of attention were precious. The child was developing the ability to concentrate.

Jack had all his blocks, the tenpins, and the dominoes in use as construction materials, for he was building a wonderful castle. He had now only the tower to finish and was so engrossed that he did not hear his big brother come in. Brother had been under tension in school that morning and had nursed his grievance all the way home. To relieve his feelings he kicked out a corner block from under Jack's castle. The imposing structure fell with a crash.

Screams, tears and sobs followed, but what Brother did not know was that he had really harmed little Jack. Both boys needed help badly. Brother—to work off irritation without injuring anyone or anything; Jack—to meet disaster and disappointment with, "I'll try again."

Margie had come with her parents to call. Five-year-old Dorothy was given permission to have a tea party.

The children spread the little table and set out the dishes. Dorothy, with sparkling eyes, kept tiptoeing to her mother for whispered conferences about the sandwiches, cake, and milk.

This took a long time. Just when everything was ready, the callers had to go—there was an engagement to be kept. The sparkle went out of Dorothy's brown eyes, and after Margie left she cried as if her heart would break.

The grown people could have prevented this disappointment had they seen to it that the little girls planned only such a tea party as could be carried through.

It was Tom's turn at the bat. His mother appeared at the back door. "Oh, Tommy! I forgot to order eggs this morning. Run to the store and buy a dozen. Now!—don't wait!" The thrill of the game was lost. His turn would not come again before the boys had to go home.

That was the way with Mother—always interrupting him at the critical moment. She never took the trouble to see what he was doing. Yesterday, she called him away from the last chapter of Treasure Island. He missed the force of the climax, for, when he read it later on, he had forgotten much of the setting, and thus the keen interest he had had in the story was lost.

Of course, our boys and girls should be helpful and should conform to the household rules—eating, sleeping, and dressing, each at the right time—but, just as truly, we who are parents should consider our children and plan our work so as to avoid interrupting them at moments when they are deeply absorbed. We should let them have the exhilaration that comes with sustained interest and the satisfaction that crowns a purpose, however trivial, when it is carried through to the end.

"Youth at Work in the Church"

THE PROPOSED UNION AND THE PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

In the event that the Congregational and Christian Churches unite with the Evangelical and Reformed Churches, there will, of course, follow a union of the Youth Groups of the two denominations.

The following is a Basis of Union of the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Congregational and Christian Churches and the Youth Fellowship of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches.

It has been prepared by a Joint Committee of Pilgrim Fellowship and Youth Fellowship with their advisers and was circulated by our National Pilgrim Fellowship in June, 1947.

It is presented here for your information and consideration and is in no wise to be considered as propaganda either for or against the Union.

PREAMBLE.

We, the regularly constituted representatives of the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Youth Fellowship of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, moved by the favorable action of our two parent bodies toward union;

Believing that all Christian youth should be united in the ways of the Lord Jesus Christ in order to fulfill his prayer, "that they all may be one;"

Realizing that upon our generation rests the attainment of a united and peaceful Christian world, and, with a sincere desire to bring this about to the best of our ability;

Do now declare ourselves to be one in body, and do set forth the following articles of agreement as the basis of our life and fellowship in Christian work.

I. NAME.

The name of the body formed by this union shall be "The Youth Fellowship of the United Church of Christ."

II. PURPOSE.

The Youth Fellowship Unites All Young People of the United Church of Christ in This Purpose—

To know God in our lives as revealed by Jesus Christ, to worship Him only, to study His truth, and to dedicate ourselves to do His will,

To extend the Christian fellowship and the message and mission of the Church to all people, working with all who seek to fulfill this purpose.

To serve the world in the name of Christ, striving toward the establishment of brotherhood, justice and peace.

III. ORGANIZATION.

Membership.

The Youth Fellowship shall be comprised of all young people between the ages of twelve and twenty-four who are affiliated with the United Church of Christ.

National Council.

The national body of the Youth Fellowship shall be the National Council. It shall meet every two years. The first meeting of the National Council shall be composed of 200 members, 100 of whom shall be representatives of the former Pilgrim Fellowship, and 100 shall be representatives of the former Youth Fellowships to determine the method of election of its representatives, recommending that they include members of their student constituents, and to authorize the entire body to constitute the first National Council. Eighty-five of each delegation are to be young people. (The Joint Committee feels that further discussion is needed on this matter of adult representation at the meetings of the National Council, particularly as voting privilege is concerned.) The functions of the Council are:

1. To speak with a united voice for the Youth Fellowship of the United Church of Christ.

2. To initiate, develop, and recommend the general youth program of the United Church of Christ in cooperation and in accordance with the accepted principles and practices of the Division of Christian Education of which the Youth Fellowship is a recognized agency.

Youth Cabinet.

The Youth Cabinet which will be elected by the National Council, taking into consideration the geographic areas of the United Church, will be comprised of the following:

1. Officers:

- a) Chairman.
- b) Vice-Chairman.
- c) Secretary.
- d) Treasurer.

2. Sixteen representatives-at-large.
3. There shall be the following staff members of the Division of Christian Education: Four from the Department of Christian Education in Church and Home; two from the Department of Christian Higher Education.

One-half of the first Cabinet shall be composed of members from the former Pilgrim Fellowship and the other half from the former Youth Fellowship, i. e., two of the officers, eight representatives-at-large and three staff members from each denomination.

No member of the Youth Cabinet is to exceed twenty-four years of age during his term of office.

IV. APPROVAL OF THE BASIS OF UNION.

The Basis of Union shall be submitted to the Executive Committees of the Congregational Christian Pilgrim Fellowship and the Evangelical and Reformed Youth Fellowship. Each group shall proceed in the approval or disapproval of the Basis of Union. When the Basis has been acted upon by the two groups, they shall report this action to the Joint Committee on Basis of Union, who shall put the Basis of Union in its final form and then request the calling of the first meeting of the National Council at the time, or shortly after, our parent bodies unite. In this joint session of the two Fellowships, the final report of the Basis of Union Committee shall be made. The National Council shall declare, by joint resolution, that the union of the two Fellowships is duly effected at that time. Then the delegates, duly elected by the Fellowships entering into the Union to constitute the National Council, shall be led in a constituting prayer, effect an organization by the election of officers, and proceed to transaction of business. From the time of the organization of the National Council until a constitution shall have been adopted, as heretofore provided, this Basis of Union shall be the fundamental law of the Youth Fellowship of the United Church of Christ.

The Basis of Union may be amended by action to be determined by the National Council.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE WORLD MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

LESSON IX—FEBRUARY 29, 1948.

LESSON: Acts 16:9-10; Romans 10:8-15; Ephesians 3:8-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 10:8-15.

The Fellowship of Those Who Care.

This man Paul belonged to "the fellowship of those who care." He was concerned about what happened spiritually to his fellowmen. He even goes so far as to say that he would be willing to be cut off from Christ's fellowship if only his fellow-countrymen could be saved. He had what our fathers used to call "a concern for souls." And that was what made him so faithful and fruitful, so persistent and so insistent, in winning souls to Christ. One fears that all too often many of us do not care, we just do not have any great concern about our fellowmen, especially concerning their spiritual welfare. As Dr. Erdman writes, "There would be no lack of converts to the Christian faith if all who profess to follow Christ felt for the spiritual welfare of their fellowmen the deep concern expressed by Paul for his own people." We are in the Lenten Season which is in one sense the "harvest season" of the year. If enough folks became concerned about enough other folks there would be large accessions to the churches at Easter.

Made for Him and Restless Without Him.

"The word is nigh thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart." The law of the Kingdom is the law of our inner lives, indeed of all of our life. As Dr. E. Stanley Jones says, life will not work any other way. The gospel does not appeal to something outside of us. It is not an effort to bring something foreign to life into life. As Augustine once said, "Thou hast made us for thyself and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee." When we speak to men about Christ we may be sure that there is something within that is awakened. To be sure we will not always get an affirmative response. But speak to anyone about Christ in sincerity and simplicity, and if he is honest he will confess that something within him welled up and that he was conscious of a need of Christ.

Confession and Faith.

"If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; for with the heart, man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." A man is saved by faith, faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God. Good works are the result and not the requisite of salvation. And it is to be noted that a man is to believe in his heart, and not simply in his head. That is faith is not primarily a matter of mere intellectual assent, but a matter of the response of the whole nature to Christ. Come to think of it, there is mystery and majesty about it. It is so profound, so deep, so mysterious. Here is a person, even a man steeped in sin and stained by sin, and in the bondage of evil habits. And then in a public service, or in private conference feels a deep sense of penitence, asks for forgiveness, accepts Christ by faith, and lo the thing is done. His sins are forgiven, his soul is cleansed, he is born anew and by faith he becomes a child of God, and a member of the body of Christ by joining the Church. Not by anything that he could possibly do, not by any works he might perform, but through the grace of Christ by faith. My friends that is in a way breath-taking. But it is the central fact of the gospel or the good news. And the same principle works when the person is a young person or even a child who believes in his heart in Christ.

But then there is confession. That which is inwardly experienced ought to be outwardly confessed. Let the redeemed of the Lord say that he has been redeemed. Let the person who has accepted Christ boldly confess Christ before the world.

Whosoever.

"There is a wideness in God's mercy like the wideness of the sea" and there is also a wideness in his saving and redemptive love as wide as the whole world. "Whosoever believeth on him" shall not be put to shame. God so loved the world that whosoever, whosoever, whosoever, whosoever . . . it runs like a refrain through the Scriptures. "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." The gospel is for all men and for all of the man. The Church has a world mission. Missions are not an elective course in Christianity but a required course. If for no other reason than stern duty we should share the gospel with others. But the motive of Christian missions goes deeper than that: not duty but love is the thing that should constrain us in sharing the good news with others.

Folks are Folks.

"There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek (or the Gentile)." Isn't there? Couldn't you tell the difference between a Jew and a Japanese, or a Jew and an African, or a Jew and even the average American citizen? No difference, why there's all the difference in the world. In one way of course, but not in the way in which Paul is writing. For beneath all the superficial differences and above and beyond the racial distinctions, men are one—one in their common fears and hopes, in their common sorrows and burdens, one in their common sins and the need of a Saviour. There is only one Saviour for all because all need the same Saviour. The gospel is universal in appeal and application. The fact that at Pentecost the multitude gathered at Jerusalem which heard the disciples speaking in their own language or tongue was a parable of the universal message of the gospel.

The Human Factor.

"How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" God could have saved the world in some other way perhaps, but it pleased him by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. Those without Christ will never hear of him unless they hear about him through Christ's men and messengers. Men do not save people, but men are the channels through which the message is proclaimed, the healing and the teaching done, the love of Christ expressed. In the light of this fact the major question is not so much what will happen to the heathen if they do not have Christ as what will happen to us if we do not share Christ with them. We will soon be in our Mission Period. Now is the time for all good Christians to come to the aid of their Church and of Christ. "How beautiful indeed are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of good things!"

The Romance of It All.

Paul felt the romance and the grandeur of it all. He never ceased to marvel that God had given him the precious and priceless privilege of preaching the gospel and of being an ambassador of Christ to all men.

COMMANDS OF HUMAN NEEDS.

posts by war have returned. Our twenty-six American Board health ministers incident to Missionary work are gathering momentum.

More significant than all of our material contributions we have sent the personal representative of the Committee on War Victims and Reconstruction, the Home Boards, and the American Board into Universities and among the displaced people at home as well as into the area where tragedy lingers in the wake of war desolation. They have given themselves with their gifts. They have conveyed the richest resources of religion "in our name and for His sake." They have been aware that some of the greatest hungers are not of the body but of the soul.

We will continue to meet need as long as it exists. A three-year plan was made in all good faith, believing that the post-war crisis needs would be met in that time. We now know they can not be. We will proceed to make plans for a longer period. We thank God that we can wage our conflict with food and win over atheistic communism, all that goes with human kindness instead of with guns and all that savage cruelty can involve. In battles where food is the ammunition and children are to be fed instead of bombed to bits, perhaps we can really sing, "Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition" without a terrible sense of incongruity between the Lord and that which he is assumed to bless. This is indeed to "fight the good fight" into which all Christians can throw themselves with united enthusiasm. This is an hour for the church. We shall arise to meet it, rendering our fullest service and pressing our government with its vast resources to act as a truly Christian nation in its combat against hunger, chaos, domestic strife, and resulting world revolution which appears to be the major immediate objective of communism. This is a time when the tide of human history can be turned towards higher levels by obeying the commands of human need for immediate practical service to distressed people. We have served and we will serve with a sense of high privilege.

III.

The third demand of human need grows naturally out of this fact. This demand is "get together." The problems of our world are too great to be solved in any important area by isolated individuals or puny associations of people. Employers' organizations have grown into national associations with 6,000 directors controlling the basic business structure of the nation. The scattered and impotent laborers of the nation have become a powerful unity before which even our government has quailed at times. Much in the creation and use of power on such mighty scales has rightly been deplored, but the fact remains that this large scale expressions of unity have been the only answer to the magnitude of the problem faced.

Human needs tower above any of these areas in the united power for which it calls. Private charity and public relief exercised on a village basis crashed even under the impact of a domestic depression. The needs of America of the early thirties are but a faint suggestion of the suffering of multitudes in this post-war world. The question might once have been whether our Christian compassion would rise to meet human need. The question now is whether our enlightened self concern added to our own Christian charity, will be adequate to meet human need before our world crashes under the impet of man's misery.

We are not so foolish as to think that the church can meet the total need. We are rather sobered by the realization that we can not do that which is our full share in the meeting of human need unless we hear and obey the command: "Get together." We must plan on a world scale to meet the needs of the world. We must take our share in creating world Christian direction that duplication may be avoided and no areas of need left untouched. We must be careless as to credit allotted or honors given. We must be cooperative with all and jealous of none who are making effective approach to the alleviation of human misery. We must have both the spirit of togetherness and the vehicles of cooperation which will enable us to coordinate our efforts with other churches and good people everywhere who are concerned to meet human need.

Our record is not perfect, but we have been reasonably obedient to the command "get together." As individuals we have accepted the invitation of the Master—"follow after me." We have united ourselves with all others who would sincerely endeavor to be loyal to him. We are bound together with them in the fellowship of the Christian church around the world. Our sense of "Togetherness" is most powerful and all-inclusive in the world. It is the only world association of major proportions which survived the war. We seek to develop our fellowship with a truly ecumenical church where the separating boundaries of nations and peoples are unknown. Much distance needs to be traveled but we have committed our lives to this fellowship.

We are increasingly thinking of our denomination as a segment in the total life of that church. We have so reorganized and directed the activity of our Congregational Christian Churches that we are ready for cooperation, federation, or merger with other denominations. We sacrificed some of our history in doing it, but we prepared ourselves to make history. We have carefully dovetailed our ministry to the need of the world by following such Protestant strategy as is represented by Church World Service. We have worked through other groups such as the Quakers when they were best fitted to be the channel of our service. We have cooperated with other groups when this was the way to most effective services.

We are here in these few days in obedience to the command—"get together." It is our business to evaluate that which we have done and to map out the path by which we will go forward. Our concern is to build a strategy both for the emergency and the regular ongoing of our churches. Whether they know it or not, a million of our people are looking to us to plan approaches, to marshal resources, and to direct the efforts by which their individual Christian efforts can be made most effective in meeting the need of the world.

IV.

When we stand with God in the presence of human need, we hear a final command—renew the faith of my people. In a current magazine the story is told of five people from five nations, traveling through Finland, in the same railroad compartment. They fell into a discussion and were agreed in their conviction that the greatest enemy of our time is the loss of hope. Most of them had known horrible experiences, but the most terrifying was the widespread loss of hope. Most groups who really know our world would agree at this point. In the ultimate analysis we can never solve the problems of the world unless we have faith that this can be done. The cry for faith represents the most basic demand of our day.

We need faith in ourselves. A Dutch student who served in the underground and was a German war prisoner speaks of his heroic comrades of yesterday committing suicide today. We must acquire the capacity to look the distress of the world

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

At this writing, February 13, the ground is still covered with snow, although it is melting some. Our public school has been closed all week on account of the roads being in such condition that the school buses could not run.

When the weather is good and the children can play out of doors we hardly notice when school is out. But for a week now, the snow was so deep and the weather so cold, they have had to stay indoors, and can you imagine what we have had to put up with.

Twenty-eight youngsters, most of them small, shut up in the house, anxious to get out; restlessly moving about, and coming to the office every few minutes for something. You can imagine under what condition we have had to work. We hope in the next two or three years to have a real playroom for them to use in weather like what we have had.

The health of the children has been fine all during the winter. We have had very little sickness so far this winter. The Duke Endowment, from which we get a nice contribution each year, requests us to keep a strict account of each day a child spends in bed on account of sickness. Last year we had ninety-five days of sickness, and of that number the greatest part was made up from less than a dozen children. We attribute their good health to regular hours, work, sleep, eating and play.

Most of our children make good grades in school. A number of them make all A's on their report cards. Ten got on the honor roll last month. We allow one B and the rest A's for the high school children, and two B's and the rest A's for the grammar grades. If they make these grades they get a prize of fifty cents each. We feel this will give them some incentive to work to win the prize. Even fifty cents looks big to a child's eye.

COMMANDS OF HUMAN NEEDS.

straight in the face and yet say—"I can and will do something of significance in this situation."

We need faith that man's dreams and ideals have a cosmic support. We must know that our hopes were not given to tantalize us but to guide us to possible achievement. We need confidence that there is moral as well as physical order in the universe. We must be certain that somewhere amid the chaos of the world there is a power that makes for righteousness; an order which represents the thought of a great mind; a goodness which is rooted in the universe itself. No doubt must exist that we are fighting on the side of the angels and towards the ultimate victory of the right.

The giving of faith is a peculiarly fitting task for the Church of Jesus Christ. We have obeyed the command—"give my people faith." We have done it basically by keeping faith alive. Of course God exists in the wider aspects of his being apart from any thing we can contribute. He is the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end. And yet on the fringes of His being, it is still true that "God can not make Antonio's violins without Antonio." It is certain that we can not live in the true sense of our divine nature without God. It is therefore true that God cannot live at least where he would be in our hearts without us. We have opened the door that He might come in. We have earnestly sought to bring him into the lives of all men everywhere. We have dedicated ourselves to the fulfillment of the prayer, "that they may be one even as thou Father art in me and I am in Thee, that they may be one in us."

There can be no complete faith short of the effort to make God live increasingly in human hearts. If we know and care about the suffering of the world, it will be because God lives in us. If we are inspired to the maximum of practical service, it will be the God in us that reaches out to feed the God in the "least of these." If we are united in obedience to the command—"get together," it will be a union of men under one Father in one brotherhood. If we are to have faith in ourselves, it will be because we have found the divine spark within us. We have discovered that we are made in the image of God. We will believe in ourselves because we believe in the God in us. If we find faith in others, it will not be because we have discovered unexpected strength in them so much as that we have discerned an expected God in their hearts. If we are to believe in ultimate victories, it will be because we have learned that we are fighting on the side of God.

It comes to this. We live in a day of thrilling opportunity and terrifying danger. We do not know whether we are at the end of the Dark Ages or at the beginning of the Dark Ages. It may be as atomic scientists have said that 100 American cities will be blotted out and 40,000,000 American people slaughtered on the first day of a new war. Or it may be that we have at least come to our senses and will make modest but real progress towards a better world. Our fate to an important degree lies in our capacity to hear and obey the highest command of God which comes as we stand in the presence of human need. To this we dedicate ourselves anew in the hope that we can have some part with God in turning men from the darkness towards the dawn.

A LETTER TO THOSE RESPONSIBLE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

people's society but did not list it in the annual report of your church, or the names have been changed since then, will you please send them to me? I'd like to know that when I send materials and bulletins, newsletters and announcements, that they were going to the right person. In many cases, I send materials to the Sunday school superintendents (if one is listed!), or to the church secretary or treasurer. Sometimes, though, these people, busy with their own positions in the church, cannot get to the young people. That's why I'd like to have one person in each church responsible for the young people's group.

Thank you for helping me!

Sincerely,

authentic expression of Christian liberty. A freedom which has become formalized, which clings anxiously to familiar ways and has lost the spirit of intrepidity, which would hold us forever in the bonds of doctrinaire definitions of church liberty, is in effect the negation of freedom. Our liberty is for a purpose: that we may perform with glad trustfulness whatever acts of voluntary faith and obedience are needful for service in the Kingdom of Christ.

This is a truth which Congregationalists long have known. It is our peculiar treasure to be given to the whole Church. We have never regarded the acceptance of any form of polity or administration as an absolute requirement of Christian discipleship—no, not even the "autonomy" of the local church! No polity can constitute the Church; only the grace of God in Jesus Christ, present in the midst of the fellowship. We believe that all churches must in the end recognize and assent to this principle. In the meantime, however, it must be demonstrated as a principle of unity, not of perpetual separatism. It is a part of our Congregational Christian genius that we are free to take responsibilities of leadership in the new movement toward Christian unity. We shall be faithless to our heritage if we refuse this calling.

We are being called into this union by the promise of an enrichment of our corporate Christian life. Congregationalism in early America was made fruitful by the confluence of the Pilgrim and Puritan streams. It was enhanced by our union with the Christian Church. The fellowship of our local churches and of the denomination as a whole has been invigorated by the contributions of members coming from many other Christian bodies. So, we believe, the proposed union will be a fructifying event and the life of both uniting fellowships will be deepened and enriched by it.

There are two ways of attempting to perpetuate a movement. One is by walling it in, carefully safeguarding its separate identity, trying to protect it from dilution by all "foreign" influences. The history of peoples, cultures and ideas which have tried to maintain themselves by the method of circumvallation does not encourage the hope of success. There is abundant evidence that God is not pleased with insularity. The other way is by giving it to the future, committing it to those energies and purposes which have in them the life of tomorrow, entrusting it to the winds of God. We do this in confidence that whatever is vital and life-giving in it will be conserved and made fruitful. No one can read the signs of our times without knowing that the most vigorous and creative forces in the Christian Community are moving away from denominational separation toward the unity of the Church of Christ. And it is by entrusting itself to this movement that Congregationalism can best make its witness and impart to the whole Church its distinctive spirit.

In the reports and findings of the great ecumenical gatherings one phrase recurs with striking frequency. "On these questions, and these," say the delegates, "we are agreed. Thus far we find ourselves at one. But on other matters we hold differing opinions. We must await the further leading of the Holy Spirit to bring us into unity." That statement may be a confession of human perplexity and of need for illumination. If repeated too often, however, it may become simply a pious formula for defending our immobility and our refusal to be changed as we have got to be changed. Our need of leading by the Holy Spirit is evident enough. But there is also need of evidence that some bodies of Christians are willing to be led. American Protestantism today longs for a demonstration that the reconciling power of God in Christ, which alone can heal the sickness of our world, is at work in His Church.

In times past Congregational Christian people have spoken boldly and have given notable leadership in behalf of the unity of the Church. It will be a long while before we can again raise our voice for the cause of Christian unity if we refuse the proffered fellowship of our brethren in the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

THE FIFTH SUNDAY.

possible. But even so the bills must be paid and paid promptly. And here is where you, my dear reader, could easily and helpfully enter the picture. We do not have the money with which to pay the bills. The cost of the entire plant, including the building and all equipment will be within $130,000. We have this entire amount in sight with the exception of $20,000. We must raise this amount that we may secure a "conditional" gift of $5,000. Do you have a dollar that you could spare? Could you spare a dollar for every member of your family? Would one dollar for every member of our church in the Southern Convention impoverish any one or hinder him from carrying out any plan or plans that he already has or make it hard to meet obligations that he has or may have for his local church?

Here is the proposition to every member of every church and Sunday school in our Convention: Give one dollar to our college through your Sunday school or church to help relieve the tension and to meet the grave emergency now existing at our college. Make this your fifth Sunday offering. If you wish, it could count on your church's quota for the Staley - Atkinson - Newman Memorial Foundation or it could count on your church's conference apportionments. Make your offering for the College on the fifth Sunday in February. Make the amount $1. You will be happy. Your church will render a wonderful service. The students will be made comfortable and your college will be pleased. What say you? Let's do it, one and all. Let no one fail.

COMMENTS on the BASIS of UNION

Inasmuch as questions have been raised regarding the meaning of the Basis of Union at certain points, the following comments are submitted as the understanding of the undersigned:

Evangelical and Reformed Church—

George W. Richards, Roberts R. Appel, L. W. Goebel, G. W. Grauer, John R. C. Haas, Nevin C. Harner, John Lentz, John W. Mueller, S.

Pauck, Herman F. Reissig, Frank Milton Sheldon, Russell Henry Stafford, Alfred Grant Walton.

1. The United Church of Christ will be a union of churches joined in fellowship and co-operation without involving any invasion of the rights now enjoyed by local churches.

2. Congregations, Associations, Conferences, and the General Synod, being voluntary fellowships, possess autonomy in their own spheres, which autonomy is acknowledged and will be respected.

3. The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the Board for Home Missions are agencies and instrumentalities of the United Church of Christ and while the members of the Boards will be nominated and elected by the General Synod, the Boards will have authority in their own sphere of activity, and the General Synod, except for its right to allocate undesignated denominational benevolent moneys, shall have only advisory powers in relation to them.

4. The Constitution of the United Church of Christ will also be the constitution of the General Synod, and no other constitution for the General Synod is contemplated (a) It will be functional and definitive in relation to the General Synod but descriptive in relation to the Boards, Conferences, Associations, and churches. (b) It will not contemplate any legal control over the local churches, Associations, and Conferences by the General Synod. (c) It will describe the relation of the various Boards, commissions, agencies, and instrumentalities to the United Church and also the relations of Conferences, Associations, and congregations to the United Church. The present Congregational Christian churches may ratify this Constitution, but there is no mandate upon them to ratify it if they do not desire to do so. See the Basis of Union, IV-A.

5. No member of the Congregational Christian Annuity Fund shall be penalized in any way by his refusal to accept ministerial standing in the United Church or by reason of the failure of the church he serves to accept fellowship in the United Church.

6. In the event that the apportionment giving in any year falls below the $3,300,000 mentioned in Article VIII-G-7 of the Basis of Union, the prior claim of the Merged Fund will be reduced sufficiently so that there will be no disproportionate losses to the missionary work of the denomination, except that the prior claim shall in no case be less than the amount sufficient to meet the requirements of the year in question for the unfunded portion of the annuities under the "original plans" plus the necessary expenses of promotion and administration.

7. It is fully expected that churches and ministers preferring to maintain a system of pastoral placement in which the Conference or Association shall have little or no part may do so without prejudice, since the Basis of Union provides that "in all relationships between minister and the local church or Congregation, the freedom of the minister and the autonomy of the church are presupposed."

8. The vote of any Congregational Christian church on the proposed union, even though negative, will not in itself or in any way in the event of union impair the fellowship of that church with Association, Conference, or General Synod. It is not the intention of the Basis of Union or of the provisions for voting thereon in the event of merger to withdraw fellowship from any Congregational Christian church now of the fellowship. The relation of a church to its Association will not be affected by its vote on the union, provided that the church continues to abide by the rules and regulations of its own Association.

9. Appeals, complaints, and references shall be dealt with by Associations and Conferences in accordance with their own rules.

Europe's Destiny--Ash Heap or Phoenix?

[Address by Dr. Paul G. Macy, Director of Mid-West Region, World Council of Churches, given during the twenty-sixth annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, Grand Rapids, Michigan.]

Pforzheim, Germany, was the center of the gem cutting industry. It was itself a jewel of a city nestling in a valley of the Black Forest. There were 80,000 people living in Pforzheim when our bombing planes roared over it in a twenty-minute raid. In that twenty minutes 30,000 were buried beneath the rubble. Most of them are still buried there. Stand in the center of what had been a city and you are in the midst of utter desolation, ruins that are fresher but nonetheless complete than Pompeii or Herculaneum.

And that scene can be duplicated all over Europe. Everywhere—ash heaps, rubble, desolation. That is the material side of it—the human scene is even more tragic. Millions have been uprooted, millions starving, millions shivering in the cold. Others who eat and are sheltered are bewildered, uncertain, afraid.

There are those who say that Europe is done for, that its destiny is an ash heap, because of the spectre of World War II. There are sincere Christians in the British Isles and on the Continent who actually fear the United States more than Russia! It is not that they want to see the spread of Communism any more than we do. Those who live near it are terribly concerned about that. But they desperately fear that the way in which the United States goes about meeting the problem will lead to war, with an aftermath that—if there is anything left at all—will mean the utter triumph of communism.

So, one of the first answers which one can give to the question of our subject is—if war comes, Europe, at least from a material point of view, is destined for the ash heap. And as to whether that happens, more depends upon the United States than upon any other nation in the world. We determine, to a terrifying degree, whether the future holds hope or despair for Europe.

But the second answer is—given a survival chance on the material side, Europe can and will rise, Phoenix-like, from the ashes of the present. The heroic resistance of the Church—in Holland, in Norway, in Germany itself—is proof of the power there is in a united stand in the name of the Christian Gospel against the secular forces of the world. When one reads the testimonies of those who were “under the Cross” of persecution and suffering, under circumstances which parallel the story of the early Church, one gets insights into the strength and glory that is there and which shone so brilliantly in the night of horror.

I believe that the forthcoming meeting of the World Council of Churches, in its Assembly at Amsterdam, Holland, will give a new lease on life to the churches of Europe. The delegates from this country will be brought face to face with the problems of Europe and our grand opportunity. I believe that we are going to accept our responsibility in seeing that physically Europe is allowed to survive. When we do, then the rest is assured and Europe will certainly rise, Phoenix-like out of the ashes of today into a revitalized and revitalizing Christian culture.

WESTERN CAROLINA MINISTERS MEET.

The ministers of the Western North Carolina Conference met at Asheboro, N. C., February 16, for the purpose of discussing certain problems of the conference. The group decided that it is advisable to form an association of the Western North Carolina Conference, and to meet monthly on Monday following the third Sunday of each month for inspiration and in order to discuss conference problems. The ministers seemed willing to face honestly their problems and to discuss them freely. A spirit of unity and a sense of deep concern was evident.

The officers elected for the year are as follows: L. M. Presnell, chairman; F. C. Lester, vice-chairman; W. T. Madren, secretary-treasurer. The program committee consisted of the above officers and George Gunter (conference president). It was decided that the next meeting should be March 22, at 3:00 P. M., at Asheboro.

The Association was grateful for the fine meal provided by Mrs. Lester and some of the ladies of the Asheboro Church.

VOTING ON THE MERGER.

Local churches are requested to register their vote and opinion by April 1, 1948, on the proposed merger of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical Reformed Church. The result of the vote of each church should be sent to the Convention Office promptly. It should be borne in mind the the vote by local churches, conferences, and Convention is not a vote which will actually merge the two communions—but the vote is an expression of the wishes of these bodies to the General Council which will be the body to effect or defeat the proposed merger. The General Council has asked for this expression on the part of these bodies, that the Council may act upon the wishes of the bodies, as far as they can determine what the wishes are. On this point, the Basis of Union says the following:

"It is recommended that the General Council vote approval of the Union if 75 per cent of the Conference (our Convention) voting, 75 per cent of the Associations (or Conferences) voting, 75 per cent of the (local) churches voting, and 75 per cent of the members voting have already approved the Basis of Union."

The Convention Office has sent to pastors and church secretaries official ballots for the reporting of the local church votes. Please express your opinion before April 30. Send the result of your church vote to Convention Office at the earliest possible date.

THE DOOR.

The genius of Jesus as a teacher was his ability to make the transient speak of the transcendent, the incidental speak of the transcendental. Under the spell of his descriptive power, the apparently trivial became eloquent with divine suggestiveness. He placed a halo on the processes of nature. Every bush became a pulpit and every meal a sacrament.

Have you ever tried to operate a car with a left front door which could not be opened, even with a can opener? The editor has discovered through firsthand knowledge that this is a rather disconcerting experience. There is nothing more stubborn, more arbitrary and unsympathetic than an unyielding door. It is coldly unresponsive to praise or blame. It is not amenable to reason.

A door which responds to human need, however, is an incalculable blessing. Its benign influence is manifold. It gives protection from theft, from weather and from falling. It opens at one's desination, in green pastures or beside still waters. Through it one steps into new worlds. Thank God for doors!

Said Jesus, "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." As of old, Jesus is the door to abundant life in this world and eternal life in the world to come. He has been and is the door through which the finest things in our civilization have come to us. He is the door, the only door, through which we may hope to reach the heart and confidence of other nations.

FIRST DRAFT OF OLD TESTAMENT OF REVISED STANDARD VERSION NEARS COMPLETION.

The second anniversary of the Revised Standard Version of the New Testament finds the first draft of all but eight books of the Old Testament completed, Dr. Luther A. Weigle, chairman of the Standard Bible Committee, has announced. He hopes the committee can complete the first stage of its revision of these few books within the next twelve months.

The New Testament was released to the public two years ago at a public ceremony in Columbus, Ohio, during the annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education, which authorized the revision.

The first copy was given at that time to Harold E. Stassen, president of the International Council. Pastor Martin Niemoeller of Germany received the millionth copy a year ago at the Council's annual meeting at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Dr. Weigle made both presentations.

Books which the Bible scholars have not yet dealt with in committee sessions are the two books of Chronicles, Nehemiah, Isaiah, Micah, and Zephaniah. Job 13-42 and the latter half of Jeremiah are also still to be considered by the Old Testament section of the Standard Bible Committee.

"Mimeographed drafts of books of the Old Testament will soon be sent to members of the New Testament section and of the Advisory Committee for review, criticism, and suggestions," Dr. Weigle said.

"Suggestions that will be made by these larger groups of Bible scholars will be thoroughly studied in the final review that each book will receive by the whole committee."

The Old Testament section will meet four times during 1948 for a total of 44 days to consider the work done by each committee member between committee sessions. The next meeting is set for February 21-22. Two-week meetings will be held in June, August, and December, Dr. Weigle announced.

Bible scholars in the Old Testament section include: Dr. Julius A. Bewer, Union Theological Seminary; Dean Luther A. Weigle, Yale University Divinity School; Dr. William R. Taylor, University of Toronto; Dr. George Dahl, Yale University; Dr. William A. Irwin, University of Chicago; Dean Willard L. Sperry, Harvard University Divinity School; Dr. Leroy Waterman, University of Michigan; Dr. Millar Burrows, Yale University; Dr. Kyle M. Yates, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; Dr. William F. Albright, Johns Hopkins University; Dr. J. Philip Hyatt, Vanderbilt University; Dr. Herbert G. May, Oberlin Graduate School of Theology; Dr. Harry M. Orlinsky, Jewish Institute of Religion.

Dr. Fleming James, formerly Professor of Old Testament at the Berkeley Divinity School and Dean Emeritus of the School of Theology of the University of the South, is executive secretary for the committee.

CHURCHES AND EUROPEAN RECOVERY.

A special meeting "to demonstrate the concern of church people for the constructive principles essential to the success of the European recovery effort," will be held at the Washington (D.C.) Cathedral Thursday evening, March 11, it is announced. The meeting will be sponsored by the Federal Council, in cooperation with the Washington Federation of Churches.

Church leaders from many sections of the country, in addition to groups in the Washington area, are expected to attend. Members and officials of government are being invited.

Secretary of State George C. Marshall has been invited to participate and has indicated his acceptance. Among the speakers will be John Foster Dulles, chairman of the Committee on Policy of the Federal Council's Department of International Justice and Goodwill, and the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, bishop of the Washington diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Bishop John S. Stamm, vice-president of the Federal Council and bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church will preside. Moderators of constituent communions of the Federal Council have been invited to sit with the speakers. The theme of the meeting, "The Churches and the European Recovery Program," is set by the statement recently adopted by the executive committee of the Federal Council, setting forth nine constructive recommendations on the recovery proposal.

The evening meeting will follow an afternoon conference on church policy in regard to the European Recovery Program, at which Willard Thorp, assistant secretary of state for economic affairs, will speak, and churchmen will confer on future education and action plans in regard to the Program.

It is expected that a petition in support of the Federal Council's statement will be presented by church officials to leaders of the Congress, in connection with these meetings.

Longfellow -- Laureate of Song

By C. B. RIDDLE.

That millions of people pay tribute to the memory of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow on his birthday, February 27, is a reminder that this myth-maker born in Maine in 1807 was one of this country's most popular writers of verse. With ever-increasing interest after Longfellow's passing on March 24, 1882, his myths remain today some of the great highlights in American literature. His verses have moved untold numbers of people to a higher plane of living.

Although Longfellow was graduated at Bowdoin College and later became professor of modern languages in Harvard University, and otherwise added many laurels to his scholarly attainments, he is best known for "The Village Blacksmith," "The Wreck of the Hesperus," "Evangeline" and "Song of Hiawatha."

Full of imagination, his soul attuned to a rhythm that few poets ever knew, Longfellow left an impression that the Falls of Minnehaha "flash and gleam among the oak trees," when scarcely they do. He spoke of "the murmuring pines and the hemlocks, bearded with moss, and in garments green, indistinct in the twilight," standing like Druids of old in Canadian Acadia. But such is not the case.

Yet, because of poetic license these and hundreds of other expressions found their way into the literature and hearts of the American people, and are so appreciated as to be accepted as real. While many of the millions who repeat Longfellow's words know much of what he said was fancy, they cherish the sentiments so beautifully expressed. For they know that where the poet veered in accuracy he dug deep into feelings and made outlet for throbs of the human heart.

Thus Longfellow built just above the ground floor of reality and placed a poetic second story on the literary map. That mythical place, however, has stood for almost a century and no one would say that it should be moved, or even damaged. And should there be removals, dozens of Priscilla Alden tearooms, Evangeline inns, and Hiawatha streamlined locomotives would have to be eliminated. Indeed, millions have traveled afar for the glamour added to geography by a galloping poem which they learned in childhood.

Longfellow referred to "the beautiful town that is seated by the sea," and so this is taken to be Portland, Maine, the poet's birthplace. There thousands go each year and approach with reverence the house on the corner of Fore and Hancock Streets. The old house still stands as a shrine to the man who has made millions say: "Life is real! Life is earnest! And the grave is not the goal."

When Longfellow was a small boy he was taken a few blocks away to grow up in the stately home of his Wadsworth grandparents, and among the poet's early verses he referred to his new environment: "... across its antique portico, tall poplar trees their shadows throw." This spacious brick house in Portland is still in a walled garden, and in the corner of the old mansion is Longfellow's desk at which he wrote many of the verses that found their way into all parts of the world. Many threads of them have been accepted as a philosophy of life. For example: "Be still, sad heart, and cease repining; behind the clouds is the sun still shining."

Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine, sheltered two stages of Longfellow's career—his student days and his debut as a language teacher. The true Longfellow flavor, however, is concentrated in the Craigie-Longfellow House, 105 Brattle Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts.

So great was Longfellow's ability to mystify geography that many people today who are more familiar with poetry than travel, refer to certain parts of the country as pictured by the poet. In a few verses many parts of the country might be touched upon. His Evangeline zone, for instance, stretches from the Canadian village of Grand Pre southward along the Mississippi to the Bayou region of Louisiana. Highspots along the way are the Ozark Mountains, Lake Atchafalaya, where the separated lovers just missed each other's boats, and Philadelphia, where Evangeline finally found Gabriel and died.

Longfellow watched his way through all the principal countries of Europe. In effigy he is still in Europe, for in that form Longfellow is in Poet's Corner of Westminster Abbey. But his travels, as did his expressions of the feelings of millions, ended at Mount Auburn Cemetery in Cambridge, on the final Hiawatha-like journey "To the regions of the home-wind . . . and to the land of the Hereafter."

PERHAPS YOUR NEIGHBOR.

What will the record be on March 31? Will it be that our churches have had increase in membership during the pre-Easter period? Do you have a men's class in your Sunday school? Are all the members of it members of your church? Perhaps your neighbor, who attends your church every Sunday, is a fine prospect for church membership. How about the women's class? Are there members of it who are not members of the church? Invite them to unite with your church. Perhaps your neighbor right by your side in your class is just waiting for the right sort of invitation from you to become a member of your church.

You would really be surprised if you had the names of all the folks you see at church Sundays and compared them with the names on the church roll, to see several names which you though all the time were on the membership roll of your church. A member of my church borrowed a copy of the church roll and admitted when she returned it that she was amazed at what she found there. Do you know whether or not your neighbor is a member of any church in your community? Perhaps you would be surprised to learn that he is not a member of any church, because you see him in your church so often. Perhaps your neighbor is waiting for an invitation from you to unite with your church.

Again if your pastor gives you the names of a few people whom he wishes you would speak to about uniting with the church will you accept those names and do the best you can with the assignment? Perhaps you could encourage your pastor to have faith in the ability of his members to go out and win others if you would speak

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was an enthusiastic group of Elon alumni who sat about beautifully decorated banquet tables in Fellowship Hall last night and made merry with good food, good music, and light talk about old times on the campus of their alma mater. Russell T. Bradford, '16, a distinguished attorney of Norfolk, Virginia, presided with dignity and wit; the Rev. Peter Young, pastor of the Norfolk Christian Temple, made the principal address; President L. E. Smith, D. D., brought greetings from Elon College; and four students brought delightful music. Fred Sahlman captivated his audience with his piano numbers, and the Misses Dolly Ree Foster and Ann Truitt, and Jack Castle took good care of the college's reputation for having an exceptionally fine Music Department. Supt. Wm. T. Scott, of the Southern Convention, himself a distinguished alumnus of the college, had his "say." Mr. James F. Darden, executive secretary of the general Alumni Association, brought greetings from alumni everywhere, and after the meeting was formerly adjourned showed beautiful movies of college activities. Miss Gladys Yates, secretary-treasurer, of the chapter, and one of the guiding spirits in the good success of the meeting, made proper records of matters of business. Miss Lila Newman, head of the Fine Arts Department of the college, was among the distinguished guests present. By and large the meeting was a good success. Next year it is to be held in the latter part of April when it is hoped a larger attendance may be obtained.

Elon is making a rich contribution to the church and the cause of Christian education generally. It has a fine spirit. It has a high aim, and maintains a good scholastic record. It is receiving increasing prestige and place in the heart of its constituency, and continues in good favor with its sister colleges throughout this section of the country.

The college choir will take the time of their term holiday to make a tour of Eastern Virginia, and from this section up the coast as far as Connecticut. It is believed, about these parts, that they will sing well to large congregations in Eastern Virginia. This choir has had a good deal of experience on their own campus, over the weekly radio broadcast, and in many neighboring churches. They will be shown the loyalty and appreciation of the church generally wherever they go. May they have a good trip and win many new friends for their alma mater.

THE VALLEY CONFERENCE.

A special meeting was planned by Roy A. Larrick, President of the Valley Conference, and Superintendent W. T. Scott, inviting ministers of the Valley to meet at the Mimslyn Hotel February 18, 1948. The following ministers were present: S. E. Madren, Roy A. Coulter, Martin L. Weekly, Clyde Koon, R. E. Newton, Robert A. Whitten and President Larrick. Those present expressed keen disappointment that Dr. Scott could not attend.

President Larrick was host to the group and after a bountiful luncheon the meeting was held in a spacious and comfortable room of the hotel, where several hours were spent discussing problems and purposes of the conference and churches.

The first problem considered was the emergency in providing pastoral oversight of those churches not at present supplied. It was decided to request pastors who could do so, to take on additional work temporarily, or until September 1, 1948, that these churches might at least have preaching services. If this is to be done a few slight changes must be made in order that every church may have stated periods of worship. This suggestion will be presented to the churches involved immediately and we believe that all will unite in this effort to meet the need.

The Camp for Young People will be held this year at Powell's Fort Camp, June 21-28. It was announced that the ministers of the conference have negotiated a deal in which the Valley group becomes one of the six to operate the Camp. Our interest in the equipment and as part of the organization cost $250.00. We have been renting the camp for one week each year, paying $200.00 per week rent. Cost now, as part owner, will be reduced to $150.00 per week and gives us the certainty of having time each year for our young people. The Powell's Fort Camp is located in the George Washington National Forest and is supervised by the Federal Forestry Service. Members of the Camp organization now are: The Methodists, The Brethren, The Children's Bible Mission, The Four-H Clubs, The Congregational Christians and The Disciples of Christ. Each group having one vote on matters of policy in operation, etc. We rejoice that permanent plans have been made for our young people for annual camping.

The merger of the Evangelical and Reformed Churches with us was discussed at length. Hope was expressed that the vote would be favorable. The Valley Conference would profit greatly by the merger since our Evangelical and Reformed churches would afford us representation among other denominations in a much larger way and we believe the union would strengthen us in the task of kingdom building. Perhaps a vote for the merger would become an instrument to help answer our Lord's prayer: "That they all may be one." "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this" had its special application to an emergency which had arisen many centuries ago but may have meaning for us today in our confused world. Certainly we have nothing to lose and much to gain by uniting our forces for Christ.

Matters concerning the Mid-Year Conference were discussed. This one-day session will be held at Bethlehem Church, March 25-48.

The subject of Evangelism was called to our attention and it is hoped that many souls will be won for Christ and the Church during the lenten period and the Easter season.

A unanimous vote of thanks was extended Mr. Larrick for his generous hospitality which added much to the pleasure of all present. It was a good day, fine weather and a delightful fellowship. We trust that each one of us has returned to his task with renewed strength.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

IT HAS BEEN COLD AT ELON COLLEGE AND THERE IS A FIFTH SUNDAY IN FEBRUARY.

President Smith has been telling us that the old heating plant at Elon College is liable to "give out," but I suppose we have all said, "Well, the old plant has served us for more than forty years, and will see us through another winter." Dr. Smith was right in his prophecy. There was a breakdown of the power plant during the past week, during the coldest day of the winter, and besides there were from six to ten inches of snow on the ground. It was a tragic moment for the college, and good old Andy Morgan—the faithful Negro who has served the college for twenty years or more, worked night and day to attempt to repair the furnace. He was successful after many sleepless hours on the job—that is successful as far as he could be with the old equipment—and one boiler began functioning again to reduce the cold in the buildings to some extent. Finally both boilers were in action again—but not for long—for within twenty-four hours there was another breakdown. The Convention Office being in the library building of the college, we have had to shiver and try to keep working, and finally we just had to close up shop and go home. The boilers are going again now, and it is warm, but for how long—we don't know—for we can't expect much more from this old heating plant.

Work was progressing on the construction of the new power plant until the snow came. While the college did not have all funds in hand with which to complete the building, the administration went ahead on faith—believing that our churches, and friends of the college, would provide the funds. This new power plant is a must. We believe our churches and the friends of the college will come through with liberal gifts, justifying the college's proceeding with the construction of the new power plant.

One way to provide the funds, as has been said over and over again, is for the churches to pay in full their quotas for the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation. Several churches have completed their quotas, but many have done nothing at all.

We are now in the College Period of the Convention. There is a fifth Sunday in February. On fifth Sundays our churches and Sunday schools are requested to take special offerings for Elon College and the cause of Christian Education. On February 29—the fifth Sunday—we have a grand opportunity to help see Elon through to a successful financial year. If each church would set a fifth Sunday offering goal of $1.00 per member, much of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation quota could be met, or the full conference apportionment for the College could be raised. We hope pastors and Sunday school superintendents will receive such a special offering on the fifth Sunday of February, either to be credited on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christin Edutaion, or for the church's apportionment for the college for the conference year 1947-48.

It is a good time to help Elon College and our Church. Let us do it!

WM. T. SCOTT, Supt.,
The Southern Convention.

ELON COLLEGE LOOKS TO THE FUTURE.

Elon College has been on the minds and hearts of our people in the Southern Convention for more than half a century. First of all it was the founding of the College—an undertaking for those far away, steady souls that taxed their faith, their courage and their financial ability almost to the limit. Then, the college needed students and money. The cost of building had not yet been paid. Its scholastic standing had not been established. Yet to be of any value its doors had to be kept open. The founders of the college, the trustees, the members of the church in those days sent their sons and daughters and gave their money to their college. Out of such sacrifices and devotion grew a loyalty that is a steady and reassuring force to this day. The graduates of Elon measure favorably and in many instances surpass the achievements of graduates of other colleges. Elon College prefers to be known by its fruits.

Elon is better prepared to do an acceptable job in the field of Christian higher education today than at any time in its history. It has better equipment and its equipment is in better condition. It has the type of student that is commanding and a faculty composed of men and women who are superior. Its financial condition is sound, never stronger. Its standing in educational circles and with other educational institutions is satisfying to its church and supporters.

The world in which we live is moving ahead at a terrific speed. Our educational interest is hitting the pace. We cannot, we must not allow our college to lag or lose its rating with the best. We must see that it keeps pace with the forward sweep of time. Its physical plant must be improved and expanded. Its sources of financial strength must become more numerous and more generous. Its campus must be made more attractive, its curriculum more appealing, and its faculty more scholastic and more widely known in educational circles.

These necessary achievements, so highly desirable by all, cannot be realized without additional funds. Our monthly and yearly receipts must be substantially increased. Our productive endowment must be multiplied over again. This will provide more funds for current needs and a more excellent faculty.

We are able. We have more than three times as many church members, more than ten times the financial strength, and more than 10,000 alumni than we had when we founded the college. We have the interest and devotion, the loyalty, and the interest. We are able, and we will succeed!

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It has been four weeks since we submitted a report of receipts of offerings from the churches for the College. The reports have not been submitted for the good reason that there was not much to report. We all understand that the weather has been unfavorable, almost impossible for people who live in rural sections to get to church. We are hoping the skies will clear, that the sun will soon appear evidencing the approach of spring, and that the fifth Sunday in February will be inviting to everyone to attend Sunday school and church services.

Please don't forget the College. This coming Sunday closes the College Period. During this period, January and February, we have received only $289.05 from all of the Sunday schools and churches in the Southern Convention for the support of our college. Please let every Sunday school and church make sure that an

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
February 2, 1948.

Dear Friends:

I have been hoping for a long time to be able to write to you concerning the Communist Kuomintang controversy. Although we have been here almost a year, we find that even our best friends are quite reluctant to discuss the question. I am very much amazed when I read books dealing with that subject by people who have been in China only a short time. I read Thunder Out of China on the way out on the ship. From what I have read and observed, the authors were not acquainted with all of the facts and they have written a highly colored (red) picture.

We live a long way from the scene of the actual fighting so we have little opportunity to see conditions in Communist occupied territory. I have yet to find someone who will put in a good word for the Communists when they occupied this area in 1931. A number of the religious workers were killed, others disappeared and have never been heard of since.

Yesterday there came to us a letter by Rev. Erle H. Ballou, a veteran missionary in North China, which deals with the subject. I am asking the editors of THE SUN to print it for you to read. It seems to echo the feeling of most of the missionaries who have had any dealings with the Communists.

Cordially,

DICK JACKSON.

"TIME AND THE HOUR RUNS THROUGH THE ROUGHEST DAY."

By EARLE H. BALLOU.

My mind is at last made up.—I've taken more time to arrive at a conclusion than might appear to some of my friends who have heard me talk or have seen some of the things I have written. Yet always I have tried, with myself, to see both sides of the biggest question confronting us here in North China—as well as nearly everywhere else in our distraught world, for that matter—and suspend final judgment just a little longer.

"Maybe cooperation with the Communists is possible; maybe the Kuomintang's intransigence is as excusable as it is exasperating; maybe the Communist program for our part of China offers more than the corrupt and inefficient Central Government; maybe the path they are following will lead to democracy faster than anything we can expect from Nanking; maybe Communist cruelties and excesses are inevitable in a period of revolution; maybe they are playing their own independent game, without other powers and interests manipulating them, pulling the strings, or subtly calling the tune. Maybe!"

To that extent at least I have sought to avoid a closed mind during the thirteen months and more since my return. The utter pessimism of so many of my Chinese friends whose opinions I have always respected, and especially the favorable regard held by some of my UNRRA acquaintances for the determination, enthusiasm and comparatively honest efficiency of the Communist rank and file as they have encountered these qualities in the field, were alike surprising and to an extent startling. Even the subtle and specious distortions of a book like Thunder Out of China, so persuasively though I doubt not unintentionally framed to "make the worse appear the better reason," tended to make me hesitate in committing myself for one side or the other. But the day of indecision is over, for me.

"There is death in the pot."—If the Communists win in North China it will be a disastrous defeat for everything you and I can hope for this country. Its consequences may eventually be disastrous for our own country as well. Communist control here can only mean a vast expansion of the darkness and gloom already enshrouding so much of our world. A struggle between darkness and light is on, and we are near the heart of one of the hottest spots in that struggle. Not that it is a clean-cut choice between black and white—far from it. In many respects it is a difficult selection between two shades of gray. But the choice is before us, the option is a forced one, and the issue is determinative.

The process of making up my mind has been, I think, considerably hastened by several interviews since my last Bulletin. General Wedemeyer was here at the end of July and I was among the privileged ones called in to talk with him. I thought he would wish to learn something of how Christian work is affected by the confusion at present prevailing all through North China, and I prepared a memorandum on that subject. When instead he asked me for my opinion on things in general and what if anything the United States should do for China, I was non-plussed. I cannot imagine that what I tried to say helped the General very much. But it did help me.

Three wise men from the West. It also encouraged me greatly to find a man on his tremendously responsible mission seeking so quietly and earnestly to find the best of several none too promising paths into the uncertain future. He referred to the advantage of such an unbiased attitude as a missionary would naturally take. I replied that we missionaries are by no means unbiased: we have large stakes in this country, vested interests in property and institutions as well as goodwill built up by long years of mutual friendship. Yet he insisted as I said goodbye that the missionary point of view was one that he highly valued. And for the favorable regard of such a man we of the missionary persuasion can all be grateful.

A boy sat beside me in Freshman German whom our class in Senior year was going to vote "most brilliant," and one of the runners-up for "most versatile," "hardest worker," and "most likely to succeed." In due course William Christian Bullit became Ambassador, to Russia and then to France. Many of you have read his recent article on China in Life. Bill's schedule in these parts was badly upset by a plane delay, with the result that he arrived in Peiping one hot August afternoon

NEWS FROM EURE'S WOMAN'S SOCIETY.

Eure's Christian Church, a rural church in Gates County, North Carolina, was electrically lighted for the first time for its Christmas program on December 22, 1948, which the Woman's Missionary Society sponsored. Rural electricity has just been made available in this particular location. A long looked-for desire has at last come true. We feel quite rich now since we can have other night programs and young people's activities which we have been deprived of prior to having lights.

UNION (VIRGINIA).

The Woman's Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies entertained the young people of Union Congregational Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., on Friday, January 30, in observance of Youth Week. The party was held in a vacant store building. Although the weather was bad, the attendance was large. Games and entertainment were furnished by the hostesses, Mrs. Reams Long, Miss Marguerite Daniel, Mrs. Bill Tuck, and Mrs. Mark W. Andes. Refreshments were served at the conclusion of the games.

EURE OBSERVES WORLD OF PRAYER.

On February 13, at 8:00 P. M. Eure's Christian Woman's Missionary Society observed the World Day of Prayer. Two Baptist and one Methodist church met with us for this observance. We had secured the little booklets for the worship service sponsored by the United Council of Church Women in advance. We had a very lovely service. Our offering of $5.00 has been sent to the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER IN WINSTON-SALEM.

On the World Day of Prayer, February 13, the Augsburg Lutheran Church in Winston-Salem was host to those who came to the service, which took place 10:30-11:30 Friday morning. Both Negro and white women had parts on the program, and the audience was also interracial. The minister of the Lutheran church closed the program in a very effective manner. In the last part of the program, we had young people from the different high schools in the city taking part on the program. We felt that our service was very effective and full of meaning, and were gratified to have an offering of $98.00 to send for the work of the United Council of Church Women in helping to build peace.

CORRECTION.

On the Woman's Page of THE SUN for February 12, it was stated that Mrs. Ralph R. Shrader will be guest speaker at the Women's Rallies in the Southern Convention this spring. This should have read, "Mr. Ralph R. Shrader."

FROM THE MISSION BOARD.

Dear Friend:

The Mission Board Period of the Convention begins March 1 and closes June 30. This period—March, April, May and June—if observed will result in raising our sights and we shall see our world through the eyes of our Lord, whose spirit is the inspiration of all missionary endeavor.

We gratefully acknowledge your generous support of the cause of Missions during the past year, and we humbly ask for your continued support of the World Mission of Jesus Christ during the days ahead. This year is perhaps as critical as any in our world history. Foundations are being laid for either world brotherhood or strife. Wherever our missionaries are at work they are powerful forces for peace, understanding and well being of all people.

In 1946 we of the Convention commissioned three fine young people—Richard and Dorothy Jackson, and Frances Whitaker—to be our missionary ambassadors for Christ in Shaowu, China. They have been joined in Shaowu by Dr. Edward Riggs, a Christian physician, who is Director of the Shaowu Christian Hospital. Those four dedicated young people have left home and loved ones to go to minister to the more than 2,000,000 souls in Shaowu for Christ's sake. We of the Convention pledged our love, our prayers and our financial support to them. They and our Lord are depending upon us. We will not fail them! We cannot fail them! We are committee to raise $10,000.00 per year above our regular apportionment to keep our promise and to keep this great work going in His name. Let us support our Shaowu work.

Then—then there are other crying needs and opportunities in China, Japan, Africa, India, and in the islands of the seas which need our help. Let us lift up our eyes and see! Nations and whole continents are in revolution and change. They will either be pagan or Christian in a very few years! If they become Christian there is hope for peace and security. If they are engulfed by secularism, materialism, communism, and other pagan forces which are making an alarmingly strong bid for the world—despair, bloodshed, hunger and chaos are the promise. Which shall it be? Our prayers and our gifts may well give the answer!

Let us also look at our beloved homeland. Evil forces are bidding strongly for supremacy here also. If the world is to become Christian—it is essential that America become Christian! America will never be Christian until Virginia and North Carolina—the area of our Convention—become Christian. This necessity strikes near home. It calls for a deeper dedication of us all.

America is on the move. Whole new communities have sprung up about us. These new communities right here at home need the message of Christ through our Church. The Mission Board asks our churches to provide $18,000.00 this year for Church Extension and new buildings in North Carolina and Virginia. Our message is needed.

A new community of 400 homes is open to us to enter, organize and help build a new Church! A generous offer of specious lots—valued at more than $6,000.00 have been offered us by a Christian layman on conditions that we organize a work there. Shall we accept this offer and opportunity? You and your church hold the answer. We must grow as a church or we will die. The command of Christ is "Go ye!" We are under commission. Let us not fail Him and our church.

Likewise—there comes the call for assistance from already established churches which are not strong enough to maintain adequate pastoral leadership to meet their growing needs and opportunities. We need to answer the call for help from these churches

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

If ever you are in Richmond do stop at the Central Publishing Co. on East Broad Street where THE CHRISTIAN SUN is printed every week. This office is at the foot of Broad Street hill which is one of the steepest hills in Richmond and people pant and puff as they pass the shop.

In the office of Mr. Kernodle who prints THE SUN hangs an oil painting of Daniel W. Kerr who was the first editor of THE SUN. This portrait is framed in pine and shows Mr. Kerr in a very solemn mood. It was painted at Chapel Hill and presented to the editor and managing editor at the 1943 meeting of the Southern Convention.

Daniel Wilson Kerr was born in Virginia on the 10th of July, 1796. There seems to be very little information about his early days nor did he have any children. He was married to a Miss Davis, who helped him in his work and writing.

Mr. Kerr became an ordained minister in 1819. He began to teach several years later at Wake Forest Pleasant Grove Academy, north of Raleigh, and then became its principal. Next, he became principal of Junto Academy, about 300 yards distant from Mt. Zion Church in Orange County, N. C. The pupils at this school were taught Greek, Latin and English rudiments.

In 1833 when his conference met he was elected to an editorial committee that was planning to begin a church paper to be called Christian Intelligence. What happened to this paper I do not know, but in 1842 he was elected as the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Daniel Kerr was given the privilege of deciding when to start the paper, and it was established in 1844. So Mr. Kerr worked—a very busy man: teacher, preacher and editor. He traveled about the conferences telling people about the paper and serving in many ways. Think how difficult it was to travel in those days, and how often I have heard ministers complaining about meetings to attend at the present! If they traveled like the White Pilgrim and Daniel Kerr they really would have rough riding.

In 1850 when he was in his early 50's, Editor Kerr was taken ill and was no longer able to edit THE SUN although his mind was all right. It was then that Mrs. Kerr with the help of a ministerial student at the Academy busied herself with the writing, reading, and correcting of material to be printed. She continued to work until his death. In 1860 she was given $20 by the conference that met at Pleasant Hill. My, such a little bit, but it was a large sum in her day.

The first editorial written for THE SUN was entitled "Christian" and had real meaning for those people who had chosen to call their church "Christian." And so, for 104 years we have had a church paper with a glorious name.

In 1944 great services of commemoration were held and an anniversary issue was printed. I hope that you or your family have saved that copy for it will be very valuable one day. And in closing, let me tell you, that Mr. Kerr's name was a good English one that is pronounced like "ear."

ESTABLISHING WORTHWHILE HABITS.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Like most parents, my father and mother often admonished me, "Have a place for things." I thought this advice was fine in theory, but I am embarrassed to say that until the last few years I did not put it into general practice. However, I have learned my lesson!

Recently I discovered that the cupboards where our canned goods are kept were locked—they have automatic locks—and that the keys were nowhere to be found. I searched for them an entire evening, while several urgent matters to which I had planned to attend were obliged to wait. My husband and I considered breaking the locks, but finally, at his suggestion, the screws from one were removed. There were the keys—inside the cupboard!

Now I have special places for our keys, for business papers, and for all other things of importance. But had I formed such a helpful plan early in life, how many wasted hours of futile searching might have been avoided.

We shall find that the children will some day be really grateful to us if we help them to form habits of orderliness while they are very young, particularly the habit of having definite places for definite things—not one, or two, or three places for the same thing, but one special place. Of course like any other habit, this one can be developed only by unbroken practice. Its establishment requires watchful, firm, but gentle patience on the part of the adult.

Let us consider some other beneficial habits, the formation of which is often ignored.

Is it not a good plan to explain to children that it is poor taste to talk a great deal about oneself, one's possessions, and one's family? It is of real value to have formed the habit of listening to and being interested in what others have to say—and, when bringing up a new topic for social conversation, choosing only from subjects of mutual interest.

I had as my guests a short time ago two charming children. We had been chatting together and then I had excused myself for a moment. As I was returning, I heard Virginia say to the younger sister, "Connie, keep your eyes on Aunt Helen while she is talking." These girls' parents have delightful personalities; they are always so interested in their friends. An evening with them passes all too quickly. It is plain they are encouraging the gracious art of listening in their young daughters.

Very close to this habit, in a child's mind, is that of thoughtfulness for those they know. We should not do things for our children because as one mother often said, "It's easier to do it myself than to get my daughter started!" It may be simpler for the parents, but it is not fair to the youngsters. For instance, parents should insist that a child who is old enough to write his own thank-you notes do so. I have never forgotten my feeling of disappointment after giving a young cousin a handsome

YOUTH MEET AT NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

Youth Week was observed. That is the only way to express it. In the First Congregational Christian Church of Newport News, we observed Youth Week.

The weather for the week or two before, when the most vital work of the committees should have been done, was horrible. It prevented the people from attending committee meetings—it hindered in the carrying out of plans already made. If it hadn't been for the initiative and determination of our young people, Youth Week might have been a failure.

But it wasn't! In fact, it was a grand success.

Last Sunday morning, the three Christian Endeavor Societies in the church conducted the Sunday school and worship program. At church, the high school choir rendered a lovely anthem, as well as singing the various responses during the service. The church service was conducted entirely by young people, except for the actual sermon which was delivered by our pastor, Dr. Harcastle. At 2:00 P. M., the Junior Christian Endeavor Society had a birthday party, commemorating the 67th birthday of Christian Endeavor.

At 6:15 the high school Christian Endeavor and the young people's Christian Endeavor held a buffet supper and had a joint meeting afterwards.

On Monday night, the young people held a lovely, very impressive quiet hour in the chapel. It was an awful night, but there were quite a few young people out.

Tuesday night, with the weather even worse, we held our Interdenominational Social. The young people from the neighboring Methodist, Presbyterian, Church of Christ, Baptist, Friends, and Episcopal churches were invited. Although some of the denominations did not accept our invitation of fun and fellowship, we had a swell time and a nice crowd.

Friday night was our big night, however—the banquet! The banquet program committee had worked hard and long on the programs, table decorations and entertainment. We had one of the best speakers obtainable, and the food was perfect. Fried chicken, hot rolls, and all the other "stuff," with apple pie and ice cream! Everybody came (or nearly) and we all had a wonderful time.

Youth Week was a success and it was finished by the participation in the Sunday school worship service by the young people, and a buffet supper and joint Christian Endeavor meeting of the high school and young people's Christian Endeavor Societies. We hope all the other Churches in Eastern Virginia had the success during their week of activities as we had with ours.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE PERSONAL WITNESS OF THE CHRISTIAN.

LESSON X—MARCH 7, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Peace be with you; as the Father has sent me, even so send I you.—John 20:21.

LESSON: Acts 8:26-39.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 67.

A Curious Command.

"And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise and go toward the south . . . the same is desert." It just did not make sense from the human standpoint. Indeed it looked like a wild goose chase. Here was a man, a flaming evangelist "holding a meeting" in a big city and having wonderful results—unclean spirits came out of those possessed with them, and those with palsies, those who were lame, were healed, as a result of his preaching. By the way Philip's preaching was both individual and social—he preached the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, and many were converted, both men and women. And in the midst of it all the Holy Spirit said in effect: "Leave all this and go out into the desert, out in the barren country that goes from Jerusalem to Gaza." The Spirit did not tell him what he was to do there, the Spirit simply said "Go." But it was an authentic voice and Philip could not get away from it. One had better give heed to those intimations and those impressions which now and then come in life. One had better "obey that impulse" which has the stamp of the Holy Spirit upon it.

A Prompt Obedience.

"And he arose and went." His not to reason why, his but to obey. It was an act of obedience based on faith. Like so many of his spiritual ancestors he went out, even though he did not know where he was going or indeed why he was going. But he would rather walk with God in the dark than to walk alone in the light. Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge. Many times we do not know because we do not go. When God called Paul through a vision on the Damascus road, Paul later said he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. The angel of the Lord said "arise and go," and Philip "arose and went,"

A Striking Confirmation.

"And behold, a man of Ethiopia, a eunuch of great authority under Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, who had charge of all her treasure, and had come up to Jerusalem for to worship, was returning, and sitting in his chariot, was reading the prophet Isaiah." The thing which at first did not seem to make sense, soon began to have the highest and deepest meaning, to make sense indeed. Any man could easily put those two things together and make sense of it. Any man of spiritual insight would have said "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth good." As a matter of fact God does not send men out on fool's errands or down dead end streets. Even though as yet the end of the road was not in sight. Philip knew that he was on the right road. His heart must have beat faster when he saw that man riding along on that lonely road.

An Informal Conversation.

In obedience to the command of the Spirit "Go near and join thyself to this chariot" Philip makes bold to come near the man, and perhaps to his surprise, hears him reading—for it was the custom in those days to read aloud—of all things, the writings of the great prophet of Israel, Isaiah. This fellow, unlike so many moderns did not close his heart and his mind to spiritual things as soon as he had left the place of worship. One suspects that we would grow more in grace and in spiritual stature if we spent our hours after worship in the mood and spirit of worship and especially of further seeking. The man, who really was a "big shot" invited Philip to ride with him—he was not averse to hitch-hikers it would seem—and the two men engaged in an informal but a deeply significant conversation. Luke relates the incident with simplicity.

A Christ-Centered Sermon.

"And Philip opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." He did not have a large congregation—he had only one man, but he had a great congregation. He had a man who had an inquiring mind and a hungry heart and an obedient will, and any preacher who has even one man like that to preach to, ought to preach a great sermon. And Philip preached a Christ-centered sermon. Furthermore he did not simply preach about Christ; he preached Christ; he bore his personal testimony as to Christ's saving, redeeming power. Philip was in good company—two of the Master's greatest sermons were delivered to only one person each, Nicodemus and the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well. One does not have to have great crowds to have a great congregation. The smallest congregation, or a small Sunday school class deserves one's best. Despise not the day of small things.

A Good Confession, and a Sound Conversion.

"If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said 'I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.' That was all, but that was enough. To be sure it was more than lip service. It was not simply intellectual assent; it involved the head and the heart and the will. It went deep and it went far. And mysterious as it may seem and sound, that eunuch was born of the Spirit, and we may be sure that God's Spirit bore witness with his spirit that he was a child of God. "If thou shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised Him from the dead, thou shalt be saved," for with the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

"And he baptized him." In this case probably by immersion, for they went down both into the water. But the water itself mattered little. It was but the symbol or sign of an inner cleansing; it was an outward sign of an inner change and grace. If one believes he ought to say so. If one is converted he ought to confess. It helps to nail one's flag to the mast, to stand up and be counted.

A Joyous Conclusion.

"And he went on his way rejoicing." He had never known any joy like that joy. This man had found Christ in an intimate, personal way. There is nothing, absolutely nothing that can surpass that joy in the human heart. And Philip also had a great joy as he went his way. He had the joy, the unspeakable joy that comes to those who lead others to Christ. The Lenten season and the emphasis on evangelism opens the door to many for this inexpressible joy.

I think nothing so adds to the happiness of the surroundings as for a sick man to take his medicine cheerfully.—Senator H. B. Blair.

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

too late for a lot of appointments but with time enough at his own disposal so that he could give me and the people living here with me a whole evening. Much conversation, and all of us were profoundly impressed by the scope and depth of his understanding, even on brief acquaintance, of many of the factors in China's present grief.

Certainly if he knows as much about Russia as he does about China—and he ought to know much more—and after allowing for some inaccuracies and overstatements, his is a prophetic voice even though it resembles the voice of Cassandra. I did not read The Great Globe Itself until after his visit, but now that I have read it I wonder why some have called it hysterical. Bullit's diagnosis of the situation here in China was too well documented over too many years to permit a light or easy dismissal of his prognosis.

And now within the last month we have had a visit from Dr. Walter Judd. Walter was a great boy and a great doctor when he was superintendent of our hospital at Fenchow. He was a courageous champion of justice when he went home in the summer of 1938 and resigned as a missionary so that he could do all that lay within his power to arouse the United States to the injustice and suicidal folly of the assistance we were giving Japan in her efforts to conquer China. And Walter Judd's stature has by no means diminished during these years in Congress. He came to us from his visits to most of the satellite states of Europe as well as Japan and Korea. His observations in all these countries and the mass of factual evidence at his command, all pointing in one direction so far as it had relevancy to us out here—and a great deal of it was relevant—confirmed the steadily forming conviction of the past months.

A house divided against itself cannot stand. Civilization is so divided today. The One World we so joyously hailed a few years since simply does not exist. There are forces at work too powerful and too determined that the sort of one World you and I hope and pray for shall not exist. They want a very different sort of world, in China, as well as elsewhere. And until the question as to whether they are to have their way or are to change their attitude towards those who differ from them is settled, no other question can be settled finally or satisfactorily.

FROM THE MISSION BOARD.

and help them grow into strong and substantial churches.

Your Mission Board has adopted a courageous budget of $65,000.00 for this year as the goal for Missions at Home and Abroad. Every penny of this budget is needed if we are to do anything like our share in the Christian Missionary enterprise. The Missionary Apportionment from the churches per year is $12,000.00. Our devoted women give approximately $15,000.00. Our Reidsville Church shames all of us by their generous gifts of nearly $4,000.00 annually for Foreign Missions. For us to raise the budget this year, it is necessary that we raise approximately $25,000.00 during Mission Period. This is not impossible if we will devote ourselves earnestly to the task and privileges which we need to face.

HERE IS HOW IT CAN BE DONE.

It can be done by the CENT-A-MEAL PLAN. The plan is simply this: Ask each family of your Church and Sunday school to take one of the CENT-A-MEAL stickers, put it upon a box or glass jar, placing it upon the dining table, and at each meal during March, April, May, June drop in at least a penny for the work of the Mission Board at Home and Abroad. Then on the first Sunday of each month let each family empty the CENT-A-MEAL container, put the monthly offering in an ordinary envelope and take it to church to be sent by the church, or sent direct by each family to The Mission Board, Elon College, N. C.

There are approximately 10,000 families in the Convention. There are 122 days in the Mission Period. Take your pencil and paper and estimate the possibility for your church. Then extend the plan to embrace all our churches of the Convention. You will discover that in the 122 days of the Mission Period the faithful use of the Cent-A-Meal plan by the families of our churches would produce approximately $36,600.00 or nearly as much as we contributed during the whole of last year for Missions!

And so however disgustingly corrupt and exasperatingly inefficient the present government of China may be, I am bound to favor it as against its Communist foes. There is still the possibility of its internal reform. It has been and can be influenced for good by the not inconsiderable mass of sober, intelligent public opinion outside the government and the party. It offers infinitely more chance of progress, slow to be sure, but real, towards freedom and democracy than the Communists will ever offer.

The Cent-A-Meal plan puts a store by small things—as did our Lord. It is neither a dollar, nor ten dollars, but the smallest coin minted by the Government—a cent—that each family is asked to give each meal. Should we do less?

Won't you introduce the Cent-A-Meal plan in your church and Sunday school? We hope you will.

Faithfully yours,

H. S. HARDCASTLE,
President.

Executive Secretary.

graduation gift. The mother wrote to thank me—though her daughter was now a college graduate!

On the other hand, I have in my sewing basket a clever gadget for a thimble which an eight-year-old girl gave me as a token of appreciation. Then, recently, my husband and I entertained a cousin and her fine fourteen-year-old son, Don. Each guest brought a small box of candy—attractively wrapped; and the mother was wearing roses that Don had bought her with money earned from his paper route.

"I would much rather he had saved the money," the mother confided to me, "but I think his learning to do thoughtful, kind acts is a valuable lesson, so I am always plainly thrilled when he comes home bringing small gifts."

Another mother told of arriving home from a strenuous day's work and finding an envelope on her dressing table. In it was a note which read, "Mother dear: Here is the $3.98 I earned yesterday. Buy something you'd like! With love, Tom."

Tom's mother looked very proud and happy as she added, "Although I at once planned to buy Tom some ties and socks with the money, I did not spoil his generous impulse of sharing by telling him of my intention."

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Out of 197 churches just two remembered us this week. One church sent us $2.00, another $4.92. We are very grateful to these two churches, because if they had failed us our report would have gone in blank—something that has never happened during our administration as your superintendent. But I am sorry to say that the report this week is the smallest we have had in thirty-two years. I know the weather has been cold and rough and the roads muddy. Many, especially those who live in the country, could not get to church. Hence, this very small offering this week.

We hope when the weather clears up and people can get to church, you will remember to make your offerings larger to make up for the Sundays you have missed.

The Board of Trustees of the Christian Orphanage met in its annual meeting on February 18, with a quorum present to transact the business that came before it. One of the most important items considered was the superintendent's report. It is always an important item. This report gave the different items of activities during the year, 1947; the financial report, which was followed by the auditor's report, giving the income and expense accounts and the balances at the close of the year, which tallied with our totals to the penny. Our books have been audited every year, and the auditors have always found every penny of the money properly accounted for.

The Board, after considering the report, accepted it with thanks for the year's work, and seemed to be well pleased.

We all fell in love with our new board member, Dr. J. P. Cross of Suffolk, Va., who was present at the meeting and took an active part. He also brought with him his good wife, whom we were delighted to have and made her promise to come to the next meeting. We feel that Dr. Cross will make us a valuable member and will be lots of help to us in this work. We know his good wife will back him up in anything he wants to do.

The meeting was one of the most pleasant meetings we have ever had.

Superintendent.

EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM.

points you have the evidence, the facts, and are in a better position to judge than are most of us on the outside. Having presented the foregoing support for E.R.P. in general, I would like to say a few words on the philosophy of the Plan.

We are confronted with a fearful threat to democracy; and cherishing our democratic institutions, wishing others to enjoy them as we do, it is natural that we should want to promote democracy, defend it, propagate it. But democracy is not a virus with which people can be inoculated, a benign-appearing disease with which we can infect people. It is a state of health which must be cultivated—a state of mind that proceeds from the healthy comfortable condition of man. Communism can be forced on people too weak to resist it—not democracy. Communism can be finagled, maneuvered, and imposed by coups. Democracy has to grow organically. People cannot be starved into democratic ways or frightened. They cannot be bargained or threatened into being democratic. If we try any of these tactics or give the appearance of trying them, we damage our own cause terribly.

Nobody is so smart that he cannot be manipulated at times—nor so dumb that he doesn't resent it profoundly when he catches on.

That the E.R.P. will pay off in economic and democratic benefits, I truly believe. But if we set up the program and administer it with a cold eye on these benefits to ourselves, it will fail of its high purpose and the very benefits hoped for. Nor is this program to be conceived as giving us the "right" to speak our piece. This is no super radio program with a democratic commercial—not even a singing commercial.

We are not out for the purchase of global affection. Purchased love is notoriously short-lived. We want and need the support of our brother nations. But it can't be bought. And it doesn't come because we do something for them. Affection and respect develop when you do things together. That is the genius of the E.R.P.

Arrogance is the manner of one who is temporarily sitting pretty. The truth is that no one in the world is sitting pretty, but the United States appears to be. The arrogant point of view is that we don't need France, Luxemburg, Denmark. We do. The painful narrative of history teaches that Athens needed Boeotia and Sparta—that Rome needed Palestine. All countries need all other countries—all people all other people. The interdependence of man is no fancy—not processed, homogenized man but just man—the son of God.

In short, I see a great hope in the E.R.P. and so do most Christian people. We know that so huge a plan cannot be put in action without some waste—we hope not too much. We know that every good program advantages some scoundrels who are having a lucky season, but we will try not to be too disturbed if a few of them cash in. Some prodigals are being welcomed into this program—and there are always fat-head protests when the fatted calf is killed for a prodigal.

The legislation remains to be written, the amount set, the administration set up. Church people and church agencies take a calculated risk when they support such a program at this stage. But there is a greater risk in standing aloof and withholding encouragement from legislators who are trying to find a way out.

We who believe in Christian democracy support such a plan as the E.R.P. because it is Christian democracy. That is the kind of thing you have to do if you would live your principles and your faith.

January and February have been the most expensive months that the College has experienced during the present administration. We need your help and now that you will not fail us.

EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM

Testimony by Ronald Bridges

[Testimony presented to the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate by Ronald Bridges, President of the Pacific School of Religion, for the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches, February 3, 1948.]

I am Ronald Bridges, President of the Pacific School of Religion in Berkeley, California, an interdenominational graduate school for the ministry. My appearance here is at the request of the Council for Social Action, an agency of the Congregational Christian Churches. The views I express are my own but they sufficiently represent those of the Council. I think they may be found to reflect the views of a very large number of people in the Christian churches of the United States.

First, I commend Secretary Marshall and others responsible for the conception of the European Recovery Program. In a dark time it has given confidence abroad and at home—confidence in our capacity to deal greatly with a great issue.

I commend the conduct of these hearings and the combination of courage, vision, and common sense which evidently animates you who have been obliged to take leadership in bringing E.R.P. to execution.

The statement from the Federal Council of Churches has already been presented to you by Mr. Charles P. Taft, president of that body. This is a good statement and I am happy to endorse it. The Council for Social Action which I represent had a part in the framing of this document and concurs in it. However, I ask permission to append to my remarks the original statement of the C.S.A. which preceded Mr. Taft's statement and was, I think, the first to be adopted by any major church agency in the country.

I will not repeat the testimony of these two documents; rather I would address myself to one aspect of the E.R.P.: the motivation of the E.R.P. and the manner of expressing that motivation.

As I read my history, I find that no other great and numerous people have ever acted toward other people in distress as generously and from such humane impulses as we have. Disease, disaster, and dramatic misfortune anywhere in the world have always laid hold of the American conscience. Since so much and such various help has been given, a person of simple mind would think that we must naturally be esteemed and loved the world around, invulnerable in our friendships. The blunt truth is that we are not at all secure in our friendships and that many of the people whom we have helped are acutely hostile toward us. Our well-meant good works and good will have resulted in an amazing amount of ill-will and suspicion—ill-will and suspicion which have been exploited very cleverly. One doesn't have to be very keen to see that we have got to do better this time. The American people are ready, I think, to finance the E.R.P.; but if, having done so, they find that they have humiliated those whom they tried to help and evoked fresh distrust and suspicion the whole program will have been fantastically futile. Furthermore, if this humiliation and distrust are successfully exploited by enemies of democracy to produce chaos and war the American people will know a new and a desperate fury.

In my role here I feel justified in speaking to this sober problem. The Congress will appropriate reasonably, ungrudgingly, I am sure. The type of administration is a vital matter. On both these (Continued on page 14.)

NEWS AND VIEWS

Word has reached us that Mrs. D. P. Barrett, a former Christian missionary to Puerto Rico who now lives in Chapel Hill, sustained an operation recently.

A pipe organ has been installed in Union Church, Virgilina, Va., as a memorial to Charles Pool, a prominent and esteemed member of the church who lost his life while serving as a soldier in Europe.

The Virginia School of Alcohol Studies will be held in Richmond March 10 and 11. The school is arranged to aid the pastor, Sunday school teacher and church leader for a better understanding of the problems of alcohol. For program, write Rev. Wayne W. Womer, 311 W. Grace St., Richmond 20, Va.

THE CENTRAL PURPOSE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By DR. FRED FIELD GOODSELL, Executive Vice-President, American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

The overmastering central purpose of the American Board as of mission boards generally, is evangelism. All that we do we seek to do in the name of Christ. To make Him known and loved and obeyed by all men is our aim. To this end we would establish and strengthen in every land the community of those who know Him as the Living Lord of Life, the Redeemer, and the Great Master who can lead His disciples into unbreakable, loving fellowship with God and man. This community, this fellowship, is the Church in all its manifold aspects. Nothing human can be alien to the concern of this Church. To overcome ignorance and prejudice by sound education, to heal mental and bodily ills and to promote public health, to provide wholesome Christian literature and recreation, to give women and children and all depressed classes genuine opportunities to grow into true persons, and to make all men aware of truth and love as incarnate in Christ Jesus—this is Evangelism in its glorious meaning. The missionaries of your American Board set themselves to this high task. They have won many comrades across the decades, in countries to which they have gone, so many that now in the larger perspective, except in a few pioneer areas, it is the national Christian leader who bears the heavier responsibility. The missionary is by his side to serve, not to command. All are colleagues in Christ and in the service of His Kingdom in the hearts of men.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF THOSE WHO CARE AND THE CENT-A-MEAL PLAN.

In gratitude to the Giver of all good gifts each family in the Southern Convention is asked to dedicate a Cent-A-Meal during Mission Period to help make a Christian world.

There are about 10,000 families in our Southern Convention. There are 122 days in the Mission Period. If every family united in giving, it would mean that $36,600.00 could be used for the advancement of the Kingdom for which Christ died. By such a method we would have no anxiety about fulfilling our commitment to raise $10,000.00 for the support of Richard and Dorothy Jackson, Dr. Riggs, Miss Whitaker, and the Shaowu Mission.

Our Lord set store by the small things: The cup of cold water, the widow's mite, the least of these my brethren . . . even so, the cent, the smallest of our coins, will lead us into "The Fellowship of Those Who Care!"

The Cent-A-Meal Plan is simply this: Each family of the churches and Sunday schools of the Southern Convention is asked to put one of the Cent-A-Meal stickers on a box or glass jar and place on the dining table. At each meal during Mission Period drop in at least a penny for the work of the Mission Board at home and abroad. Then on the first Sunday of each month let each family empty the Cent-A-Meal container, put the monthly offering in an ordinary envelope and take it to the church to be sent by it, or send directly, to the Mission Board, Elon College, N. C.

The Cent-A-Meal gifts may go to help raise the $10,000.00 for the Shaowu Mission, other "over and above" projects, or may be credited to apportionment of the church as desired.

Cent-A-Meal stickers may be obtained from the pastors, Sunday school superintendents, women's society presidents, or from the Mission Board, Elon College, N. C.

Let every family join in this united effort to fulfill our Lord's command to carry the Gospel to every creature.

SERVICES OF THE BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS.

By ELIZABETH J. CHICOINE, Field Worker, Southern Convention.

The Board of Home Missions of our Congregational Christian Churches deals with our own family of churches within the larger church. It works for the homeland agencies of our denomination.

The responsibility of any organization of our churches—such as the Board of Home Missions—cannot be seen unless we look at the mission of the whole church.

What is the church's central task? It is to proclaim that God is real, living, active in history. He is Sovereign. (Continued on page 15.)

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Mission Board at Work Within the Convention

BAY VIEW, NORFOLK.

Those of you in the Southern Convention who, through your gifts to Missions, help make possible pastoral leadership in churches that would otherwise be without it, will never know the real good you have done nor the part you have played in this work to which those of us in the clergy have dedicated all.

Those of us at Bay View, pastor and people, shall be forever be grateful for your prayers and support. I am grateful because Bay View presented to me a challenge that could not have been accepted had it not been for your support. The people here are grateful because you have helped them to make their dream come true. That dream of a new church and a full-time program.

We are grateful, yes! And we are trying to show our gratitude by consistent growth. In the paragraph below I leave it for your judgment as to whether or not your Mission Board investment has been a good one.

I came into this field in 1941. Two things I observed: First, there were seventy-five members (about half of them completely inactive). Second, the year before, the total expenditure of the church was $960.00. The whole situation was not very encouraging. However, it was tackled. Your support made possible my work. In 1942 a gift from your Mission Board made possible the purchase of 232 front feet of property on Bay View Boulevard. In 1943 a gift from you helped make possible the erection of a new church. Thus the Ocean View Church and name bowed out and the Bay View Congregational Christian Church took its place. Since then the progress has been remarkable. At the time of this writing the church membership is 145 and of this number 96 have been received since 1941. The amount of money raised by the church last year was $4,590.87. Thus far this conference year we have had eleven additions and two losses. The Sunday school attendance during the fall averaged a little over a hundred. During the winter it has averaged in the nineties. The church attendance average has been in the eighties.

We hope to begin construction on additional educational facilities this year. We are badly in need of more Sunday school space.

Yes, we are truly grateful, for without the assistance you have already given we could not have come this far. The future is ours together. Ours to make of it what we will. And you may be assured that with your continued interest and prayers, Bay View shall soon be a strong church and self-sustaining. Then, all of you, through your gifts to Missions, can say, "I had a part."

J. EVERETTE NEESE.

SUNBURY.

The members of our church at Sunbury, North Carolina, are justly proud of their new plant. Secretary Dr. Kincaid Newman of the Board of Home Missions, says. "The people have done one of the best jobs of any church of its size in the country in building the new building. I believe it holds great promise for the future, not only for the work it will do in the immediate area but for the example which it holds forth for other rural churches of what a good church plan is like."

The story of this achievement cannot be told in a few brief words, thus, the inside story of the hopes, the faith and the sacrifices of the valiant folks who eventually saw their dream come true, are reluctantly omitted.

Today, as you approach Sunbury from the north on Route 32, on your right you will see a new, attractive and modern brick church. Should you pass by on Sunday, you will notice that the driveway encircling the church and the parking lot in the rear are filled with cars, and should you stop to look into the auditorium on any Sunday you would see that it is almost filled to capacity with worshippers. Three years ago, should you have inquired for the Damascus Christian Church, you would have been directed to the south of the town to a dilapidated structure in a most undesirable location. Had you visited on Sunday you would have seen a much smaller congregation and a Sunday school just half as large as that which you would see in the new church today.

That is only part of the story but it is significant, it justifies the efforts and the sacrifices of the people, the faith of the Mission Board and the Board of Home Missions, whose timely and substantial aid has helped make the achievement possible. Furthermore, the Mission Board continues to aid the church in the maintenance of a resident minister.

The church is growing numerically and spiritually and contributes to all conference benevolences and is rapidly assuming a place of leadership in the spiritual and social life of the community. New pulpit furniture has been ordered and it is hoped it will be installed in the near future. New Pilgrim Hymnals have been purchased and book racks for the pews have been ordered. The cent-a-meal plan has been adopted and has been the means through which the entire missionary apportionments have been met.

The generous aid of the Mission Board will always be greatly appreciated by the people of the Damascus Church.

W. L. Wood,
Pastor.

CONSIDER THE WORDS OF JESUS.

1. "Father, as thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them.

2. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they may also be one in us; that the world may believe that thou has sent me.

3. "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

4. "Go ye therefore into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

5. "The spirit of the Lord is upon us, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

LAY TESTIMONY.

Across the table in the Pullman diner sat a man of ascetic appearance. Who was he? What was his "line?" Where was he going? Conversation developed as we waited to be served. He traveled extensively in the Orient selling medical and pharmaceutical supplies. Yes, he knew what it was to be hungry and ill. Like St. Paul, he knew "how to be abased and how to abound." Our missionaries? He knew them by station and name. Their achievements were skilfully evaluated. High tribute was paid to their ingenuity and fidelity under difficult assignments. It was heartening to hear this unexpected, first-hand lay testimony concerning the work of our missionaries.

THE THEOLOGY OF MISSIONS.

Protestantism has a new awareness of the status of missions in world evolution and revolution. It is significant that the Sprunt Lectures were given last week at Union Seminary in Richmond by a Presbyterian missionary, Frank W. Price.

Dr. Price characterized missionaries as "makers of tomorrow, architects of world enterprise." He described their work on spiritual as well as geographical frontiers, and declared that they found evangelistic opportunity even in revolution. He stressed the need for an ecumenical theology and reminded Americans that the people of the East are temperamentally equipped to interpret an Oriental Book. Through missions, he emphasized, we have the opportunity to extend and perpetuate the best rather than the worst in our civilization, and this may determine whether our era will prove to be dawn or doom. The church penitent, said he, will become the church triumphant.

What is the Christian answer to Communism? He maintained that we must make our own democracy more real and vital, a shining example to the world. He called upon Christians to regard Communism not as an enemy or rival so much as a challenge that calls for new responses from free peoples. "Let us answer false propaganda with truth," he urged. "Let us work through the United Nations, oppose Russian imperialistic expansion by construction and peaceful methods, hold our tempers, and befriend peoples under Communist rule."

In speaking of the type of theology needed for the church today, Dr. Price said: "It should call men not to an easy-going Christian life, but to costly moral adventure, to spiritual daring, to live boldly and die bravely if need be, for the cause of the Kingdom. One of the greatest perils in the church today is indifference to great moral issues and preoccupation with secular interests."

He called for a theology which will show men how to live and grow as Christians in their humdrum occupations in farm and shop, in family and community, in recreation and social problems. "Our world needs Christians who will by their faith and life create a new moral atmosphere in which communities and nations, classes and races, can partially solve some of their complex problems and avert the great disasters that threaten them."

We need to study the theology as well as the mechanics of missions. The Sprunt Lectures were timely and constructive in their emphasis. Dr. Price concluded with a pertinent quotation from Bishop Brooks: "An enlargement of the faith brings an endearment of the faith."

UNIQUE BROADCAST.

Who said there is nothing new under the sun? The coast-to-coast facilities of an augmented Mutual network were utilized from 11:30 to 11:45 A. M. last Sunday to permit an unprecedented address by the Rt. Rev. Henry Knox Sherrill, Presiding Bishop in America. Bishop Sherrill's message was heard in over 4,500 Episcopal churches throughout the country. At 11:30 A. M. in each of the four time zones in the United States pastors in Episcopal church temporarily halted their own services to permit their parishoners, via the radio, to hear Dr. Sherrill's remarks. This special program was unique in radio annals because it permitted, for the first time, a spiritual director of a large church group to address his widespread parishoners during one of their regular Sunday services.

The Bishop called upon his fellow Episcopalians to contribute a million dollars for world relief. He declared: "Today, even the most hard-hearted realists are thinking in terms of a world crisis and of world needs. There is such a gulf between conditions at home and in these countries that it is difficult for us to realize the actuality of what is happening."

Puny and paltry efforts will not save the world today. Now, as never before, we must demonstrate our faith by our works. The Mission Period is a time to evidence our faith by substantial contributions to our missionary enterprise.

DEPUTATION STUDYING MISSIONS AUDIO-VISUAL EDUCATION.

Here is the interesting announcement that a deputation to survey the use of radio and audio-visual aids in the foreign missions field is on a three months' round-the-world tour, under the auspices of the Foreign Missions Conference of America.

Heading the deputation, which is now in Shanghai, is the Rev. Everett C. Parker, chairman of our denominational Radio Committee, and the Rev. S. Franklin Mack, chairman of the FMC's world radio committee and director of the division of education and information of the Presbyterian (USA) board of foreign missions. Nicklaus Hagman, prominent radio engineer, is the third member.

Urgent requests from the mission fields for support of a full-fledged radio and audio-visual program prompted the Foreign Missions Conference to send the survey deputation, according to Dr. Rowland Cross, far eastern secretary of the Conference. The requests were based on the conviction that significant new teaching techniques, developed during the war, can be adapted to foreign mission use, he said. Dr. Cross stressed that the Foreign Missions Conference and its constituent boards of foreign missions are committed to making available to the Christian forces abroad and best of the new tools for mass education.

The deputation will visit besides China, Korea, Japan, the Philippines, Siam, Singapore, Burma, India and Egypt and will confer with representatives of the British Foreign Missions Societies and the British Broadcasting Corporation in London.

Principal work of the deputation will to be survey what is now being done in the field of radio and audio-visual education; open up possibilities of further development in these fields in consultation with missionaries and nationals of countries visited; assess available resources in terms of a program and personnel; explore such matters as government policy, attitudes of commercial radio interests, and the possibilities of working with universities; assess the need for cooperative participation with United States church groups in program development; and work out recommendations for future activity in each field. Godspeed to the deputation!

STUDENT VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

Missionaries do not volunteer to serve in foreign countries in order to be happy, or to live an easy life, but to make the "Christian message of redemption available to all," Dr. Winburn T. Thomas, retiring general secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, declared.

Speaking before a group of over one hundred leaders and student volunteers gathered in New York for a dinner in his honor, Dr. Thomas described missionary work as "the lend-lease" of the church, making personnel and money available to countries in the greatest need of Christian service.

"The younger churches of the Orient, Africa, and Latin America need Christian people to stand by them in these trying and difficult times," he asserted, "but they need helpers, not white leaders."

The Rev. Edward H. Johnson, recently elected general secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, called upon "the new student generation" to establish "new patterns and techniques of missionary service, to meet the rival faith of communism.

"Everywhere as the Christian mission goes forward, it goes forward against the rival of communism," he declared. "This calls for a new student generation to help establish new patterns of witness. This is the new challenge to missions."

Reporting on a recent conference at Lawrence, Kansas, Mr. Phil Williams, Student Chairman of the conference, said that 150 students had volunteered for foreign and home missions service at the Kansas conference.

MISSIONARY COOPERATION.

A significant development of Christianity in the Orient took place during January at Manila when the International Missionary Council together with the World Council of Churches held the first meeting of the Joint Commission on Eastern Asia. Delegates from India, the Philippines, China and Korea were in attendance as well as observers from Siam and Indonesia. The desired delegate from Japan was unable to attend owing to government restrictions on travel.

The International Missionary Council interprets the establishment of the Joint Commission as another natural outgrowth of a process started with the establishment of National Christian Councils of Churches in many Oriental countries.

The Council points out that the idea of a Joint Commission for Eastern Asia grew out of a realization by the participating countries that mutual and specialized problems could best be approached on a regional basis.

For example, it was pointed out here that India and the Philippines have recently inherited a common set of problems growing out of their independence, and that China, Korea, and Japan are confronted with mutual regional problems, based not only on their geographic proximity, but in their relation to the western world.

An indication of what the Joint Commission might accomplish in the future was indicated by the action taken at the Manila Meeting in reference to the pending Japanese treaty. The Joint Commission urged the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs to take immediate steps toward insuring "a just and honorable peace treaty for the Japanese people." It also urged that "every just means be used to secure the attendance of a Japanese representative" at the various ecumenical gatherings to be held in 1948, including the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Elon Singers filled the Suffolk Church Sunday not only with just about as sweet music as one ever hears, but also with a church full of people to hear it. Mr. Fletcher Moore at the organ, and Mr. John Westmoreland directing were fully up to their increasing reputation for most excellent musicianship. Our church was inspired with their program. As one listened to the full chorus in the opening words of Bach's "Now Let Every Tongue Adore Thee" to the closing Amen of Lutkin's "The Lord Bless You and Keep You" one felt the spirit of worship. They sang great music, and their demeanor showed that they understood that. It was good to see them, inspiring to hear them, and a pleasure to work with them in any detail of arrangements for their visit with us. There were several singers who had responsibility upon their shoulders for special parts in the program, each of whom gave excellent account of themselves in every instance, however, I cannot refrain from saying how thrilled we all were with the outstanding work of Miss Dorothy Shepherd, Miss Dorothy Jones and Messrs. Jack McFadyen and Jack Castle.

At our Sunday school fifth Sunday assembly Mr. Fred Sahlman graciously played several piano numbers, and won a first place in the hearts of all. It was a beautiful Sunday. The Sunday school and morning church services made one think of Easter congregations. At the Sunday school general assembly boys, girls, young people, and adults filled the main church auditorium. They had been taught Sundays before the College song in readiness for singing it at this occasion, and it was good to hear them sing it. From every angle the day was a good success. Even at the evening service the pastor preached from the text: "When the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy," and two new members were received into the church.

Thanks go to many in our church who helped to show hospitality to the Elon Singers, to all who had a share in the special College Day offering, or offerings, to Mesdames Lycurgus Barrett, and William B. Jones, for their services on the hospitality committees and to President L. E. Smith for his presence with us, and his words of greeting at the Sunday school general assembly. Dr. Smith is proud of the Elon Singers and well he may be. And we are proud of Elon, her faculty, her students, and all those who help to make it a good college. Our prayers go with the Elon Singers, having sung now already at Newport News, South Norfolk, Suffolk, First, Portsmouth, and the Christian Temple, as they go on their way up into Connecticut and return. May the Southern Convention, which owns Elon do well by the College in every possible way it can, for the College is doing a noble part for the Southern Convention, the Church, and the cause of Christ in the world.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

CAN CHRISTIANS DO LESS?

I was amazed recently to read that our American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions reduced its missionary staff from 853 in 1925 to 351 in 1945 because of lack of support during and after depression years.

Anyone who is at all aware of world conditions today knows that never before has there been a greater need for the spirit of Christianity to pervade the lives of individuals and nations. The destruction of war cannot teach us to love our enemy . . . only the love of Christ and His great gospel of the brotherhood of man. The October issue of Missionary Herald told of the immediate need for funds to reconstruct mission stations ravaged by war. Now that old stations can be reopened and new ones desperately need to be established, there is the added hardship of inflation which our Mission Board must face.

Most of us are naturally more interested in one mission field than another either because we personally know someone who is on the field there, or our reading has centered more on one place than another. Perhaps we had a loved one in service near one of the fields and their contact with a certain native group heightens our interest in them. Whenever our interest, our gifts to missions can always be earmarked for a certain purpose or if undersigned, are used where most needed.

Many of us have followed with keen interest the reopening of the Shaowu Mission by the arrival of Dorothy and Dick Jackson, Dr. Riggs and Miss Whitaker. We have enjoyed sending them books, Christmas cards, items of food and perhaps other things which have helped them in their work and have added to their personal comfort. For these we are all grateful, but let us not lose sight of the fact that Shaowu is the one mission for which we in the Southern Convention are totally responsible. It might be that if we should fail to support this mission, this station might have to be closed. The American Board, the Jacksons, Miss Whitaker and Dr. Riggs are depending on us.

As nations and individuals are searching for a strength to bring them out of their frustration, physical ills and mental apathy, we as Christians cannot do less than support our world-wide program of missions by our heart-felt interest and our financial aid. Our interest needs to be intensified now! In some areas of the world where needs are so desperate, "Soon may be too late." Other forces which move more swiftly than Christianity may make it more difficult for Christian Missions to reach their goal. The urgent call for support to our mission program is not only a test of our Christian faith, but strikes at the very core of our gospel of evangelism.

Let us give now—gratefully, warmly and generously. "In His name and for their sake."

MRS. RUSSELL V. POWELL.

WE DARE NOT GIVE FOR OURSELVES ALONE.

When John Wesley spoke those memorable words, "The world is my parish," he voiced what should be the creed for Christians everywhere. Especially now in these days when war and science have brought all parts of the world so close together, do we think in terms of the world mission of the church. No matter how much we need an educational building for our own congregation or a more beautiful place to worship, we do not dare spend all of our money on ourselves and our local church . . . not when all over the world the needs are so pressing. The people in the South Sea Islands send word to us to send back the missionaries. We hear their plea for help and send them missionaries and a sailing vessel, Morning Star VI, to carry the missionaries back and forth among the islands.

In Shaowu, China, a station is reopened after years of inactivity and we of the Southern Convention give our money for it, send our own Dorothy and Dick Jackson, and pledge to continue our support. Japan opens

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

REPORT TO THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The following are excerpts taken from the president's report to the Board of Trustees of Elon College on February 10, 1948:

The future of the church-related college is not inspiring. Present trends indicate hard sledding ahead. Financial demands are increased and multiplied with every passing year. A decrease in funds for support of the liberal arts college and the taxation of church college property by the United States government are in prospect. Twenty-five to fifty years ago campaigns for funds for tax-supported colleges were never heard of nor planned. Every taxpayer helped to support the state schools and that was considered sufficient. Today a large number of tax-supported colleges are conducting campaigns to raise funds for their support, in amounts unequalled in the history of free education in our country. These campaigns are made in the name of funds, departments, foundations, et cetera, of various and varying types.

They have included in their organizations the business and political leadership of the country, leaders in our immediate section who own and control the greater part of our wealth. They have the organization, the prestige, and the influence necessary to secure funds in the amounts desired.

Now that the tax-supported schools have entered the field of benevolences, the one source of support for our free and independent colleges, it seems imperative for those of us who believe in free education, in free institutions, for a free people to double our efforts in behalf of our colleges that they may be able to meet the test with breadth of curriculum, vision of need, and convincing efficiency.

There are many ways in which Elon College may broaden its service and thereby increase its usefulness to the membership of the church, to the people of Alamance County in particular, and to the public in general. The church looks to the college for leadership. The citizens of our county have a right to expect a unified plan of education for the children of their homes. The church built the college and has helped to support it through the years. The county is fortunate in having a college located within its bounds. The plan of education for the children and young people of the homes within the county should begin with the kindergarten and continue through college to graduation. We have an excellent public school system, county and city, and Elon College is very glad to fit into the plan, providing four years of college training. The college curriculum should be broadened so as to include more courses for thorough training for the usual trades as well as professions.

Adult Education.

During and since the war a great deal has been said about adult education. Many of our colleges in constructing their curriculums have included courses and have organized classes for adults. We at Elon College have not as yet entered that field. For us, however, that field is very inviting. The citizens of our county are engaged in farming, dairying, poultry raising, merchandizing, manufacturing, banking, teaching, salesmanship, and the like. In all of these activities there are owners, directors, operatives who would like to improve themselves for greater efficiency and a greater degree of personal satisfaction in every day living. Courses for adults might be offered in English, history (North Carolina and American), mathematics, business administration, commercial subjects, the family, home economics, sociology, home-making, landscape gardening, interior decorating, insurance, human relations and so forth. Courses from the above could be selected according to the desire of the enrollee. Classes would be conducted on the campus and would be scheduled for late afternoons and evenings. Such courses would be offered for college credits or not as desired by the student. Charges would be in keeping with regular college courses now being offered.

NOT FOR OURSELVES ALONE.

her doors to missionaries again, and Angie Crew, who had been longing to return, goes back carrying with her the love and good wishes of the Southern Convention and our promise to support her work through our gifts to the American Board.

And so we could go on mentioning station after station around the world where men and women are witnessing for Christ and whose work is made possible by our gifts, combined with gifts from the other states.

Beginning March 1 and continuing through June is our Mission Period—the time of our church year in which we especially stress missionary giving. Every pastor is urged to stress the importance of giving to missions. Each church in our Convention is asked to give sacrificially. The methods used will vary with the local churches. One device for giving during this period which our Mission Board suggests for all churches is the Cent-A-Meal Plan. Superintendent Scott has called to our attention that there are 122 days in the Mission Period. There are approximately 10,000 families in the Southern Convention. If each of our families would average a penny a meal the gifts during the Mission Period would be approximately $36,600. That is almost as much as we raised for the whole of last year for Missions!

I urge you to share in this Cent-A-Meal Plan because of the large amount of money we can give to Missions if all of us participate. I urge you to share in this plan, too, because of the blessing your family will receive as you give your penny each meal, with a prayer.

MRS. W. E. WISEMAN.

A MEDITATION.

On the first day in Lent I jotted down the following thoughts as I read the Lord's Prayer.

First of all, as one begins his prayer he should recognize the Father—"Our Father"—for there is no thought of any other that promises such as He can give. For as one is born into the family of God he becomes conscious of the relationship that exists in the Great Family.

Not only should there be recognition of the Father, but one should be able to recognize Him as being above all—"which art in heaven." Some may say, but where is heaven? Dr. Bob Jones said only recently that if God could create the world, the planets, etc., and fling them into space so that they move in their regular orbits with no disorder, why not the possibility of heaven as a place? I think Dr. Jones used that figuratively. It is good to think about.

Using the term, "Hallowed by thy name," would cause one to feel that His name is praise-worthy; that at his name every knee should bow. Now in looking at Mal. 1:11, we might see the significance of this: "For from

Reasons for a Big Missionary Offering at Easter

THE NEED.

The world needs to be saved from destruction. This is just what Missions is seriously trying to do. Growing misunderstanding and hate make the King's business urgent, for the time may be shorter than we think.

Suffering humanity calls for our aid. Hunger, cold, doubt, fear, and intrigue bedevil our neighbors around the world. We cannot look on this tortured world and pass by on the other side, like the priest and levite, without losing our own souls.

Sin is about to ruin our beautiful world. In every American community half the people have no share in the Church, crime runs riot, families break up by divorce, and drunkenness increases. Christian influence is needed to cure this awful disease. In all nations there is an urgent demand for the power of Christ as reflected in his church to overcome evil so the world can be saved.

Some four hundred men and women represent our Church in many nations. Some of them, like Angie Crew and the Jacksons, have gone through a cold winter with little or no heat, and not enough food. They are doing a grand job in building friendships on the Christian basis that may hold the world together. We must not let them down.

Since the famous Haystack Prayer Meeting by Williams College boys 140 years ago, our Church people have been working for Foreign Missions. Before that they were doing Home Mission work. Now we think of the entire program as a unit and call it World Missions. We must carry forward the torch handed us by our forefathers!

THE PEOPLE.

The Southern Convention Mission Board represents about 33,000 people. The Board tried to think of what these people could do, and what really could be done, if our Church is to live and grow.

The budget includes aid on pastors' salary in several places. In every instance struggling groups seemed to need help to meet expanding opportunities.

Aid on new building projects was promised for three places. Bay View is growing and needs more room for church work. Asheboro is building a new church in a rapidly growing town where we have needed a church for twenty-five years. The building will be completed this spring. A new church in a new area of Burlington is proposed as soon as plans can be completed. We might build in several other strategic centers if we had the ministers and money.

Our overseas work is done through the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. We promise to continue support of all phases of the work to the amount of $10,000, or thirty cents per member of the Convention. Then we have our Shaowu Project to support with another $10,000. Several churches and groups have projects of their own.

The grand total for the year is $64,830 that is needed. Divided among our members it is $2.00 per year, or four cents per week. That is certainly "too little," and it may be "too late."

Now please look at the report of receipts to date, and you can see why we need a big offering at Easter.

THE AVERAGE PERSON GIVING TO MISSIONS.

By MRS. O. H. PARIS, Presi.,
Woman's Missionary Convention.

At the Midwinter Meetings of Congregational Christian leaders held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, in January, Ruth Seabury led a panel discussion on the importance of training national leaders in our mission fields. During the discussion she asked a native of India, who is a student at the Chicago Theological Seminary, "What has been your richest experience since coming to the United States?" He replied, "The most impressive experience I have had since coming here is to learn that the millionaire is not the one who gives the money for missions—that the average Christian is the one who gives. I never realized before that small giving could mean so much."

I got a real lift from that statement. There are so many "average" people like you and me, who cannot give large sums, yet who give what they can—little if by necessity—day by day, so systematically that in the end it comes to mean more than we know. I thought of that old childhood rhyme:

Little drops of water,
Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean
And the pleasant land.

I decided that perhaps the women of the Convention have the right plan after all. Our goal is reached not by big amounts, but just by women scattered here and there, many of them, perhaps, with small budgets on which to run, yet who care enough about making known Jesus and His way of life, that they are willing to share out of their little or out of their much.

I like the Cent-A-Meal Plan for the Mission Period—it is such a pleasant way for everyone—man, woman and child—to have a part in missions. Just another way to make a little mean much. I would like to suggest to you gentlemen who do not know the joy of giving, that you place one of the Cent-A-Meal boxes or jar on your table. You'll be surprised how the idea will grow on you as you watch the pennies pile up and how much better your food will taste after giving "at least a cent a meal to help make a Christian world."

FRANKLIN WOMAN'S AUXILIARY.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Franklin Congregational Christian Church would like to share with our readers some of the things we have done thus far.

Last November 3, we celebrated the first birthday anniversary of the auxiliary with a dinner at the church, with Mrs. Felton Johnson as toastmistress. Perhaps I had better explain why the first birthday. It was the year one of the biggest steps toward advancement in the women's work took place. The Woman's Missionary Society and the Ladies' Aid Society united into one organization, known as the Woman's Auxiliary.

The two-tier birthday cake was cut by Mrs. W. J. M. Holland, Sr. In her gracious manner, she cut a slice in honor of the various officers of the Auxiliary, and tribute was paid to deceased members. Mrs. John G. Truitt, President of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference, and Mrs. W. T. Harrell, Superintendent of the Suffolk District, were introduced as guests and brought greetings. The history of the first year of the auxiliary was given by the President, Mrs. T. Hayes Holland. Mrs. E. P. Jones, Miss Sue Overman, and Mrs. Jack Beale gave brief biographies of those for whom their circles are named, respectively, the Berta Rowland Circle, the Dorothy Jackson Circle, and the Annie Gay Circle. Mrs. C. O. Byrd presented the Life Membership and Memorial Certificates. A free-will offering, amounting to $17.00, was taken for war victims. Mrs. E. R. Bryant introduced the guest speaker, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman of Greensboro, N. C. She gave a challenging message on "Do Women Cheat Themselves?" The program was concluded by the singing of "Bless Be the Tie That Binds." Mrs. B. V. Hargrave pronounced the benediction.

Our Thank Offering service was held Sunday night, November 23, during regular evening worship.

We also observed World Community Day with a slide, "In His Name and for Their Sake," as the program. Ninety-five pounds of clothing were sent to Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

In December, we had a Christmas party for others. At this time, Mrs. C. O. Byrd conducted devotionals on the Christian theme and our gifts for Angie Crew were brought. There were eight boxes sent to her.

On February 13, we observed the World Day of Prayer. The union service was held in our church with Mrs. T. Hayes Holland as leader. There were representatives from seven denominations taking part on the program.

Our Bible Study, "Thy Kingdom Come, Beginning in Me," was done six consecutive Tuesday nights last fall with the pastor, Rev. Robert M. Kimball, as leader and teacher. During the lenten season we are looking forward to the presentation of the mission study book, Committed Unto Us, which will be taught by Mrs. Kimball.

Secretary.

UNION, VIRGINIA, VA.

An interdenominational World Day of Prayer worship service was held in the Union Congregational Christian Church of Virgilina, Va., on Thursday afternoon, February 19, at 3:00. The meeting was opened by the leader, Mrs. Arthur Tuck, who stressed the general theme, "The World at Prayer."

The various petitions of the Lord's Prayer were developed and carried out in order. Under the petition of "Thy Kingdom Come," the preamble of the United Nations was read in unison by the leader and congregation. Other petitions were stressed as follows: Miss Wilmer Tuck read the 100th Psalm; Hallie Torian read John 17:17-24; Miss Lois Long sang "Bread of the World;" Mrs. Emerson King sang the offertory solo, "The Lord's Prayer."

Various prayers were offered for the peace of the world and for the church throughout the world, that it may be used of God to bring in the Kingdom, by Rev. Mr. Rice of the Baptist Church, Mrs. Mark Andes, Dr. C. E. Newman and Rev. Mark Andes of the Christian Church.

Others taking part in the program were: Mrs. G. W. Pollard, Mrs. W. P. Morrow, Mrs. A. P. Bohannon, Mrs. W. D. Daniel, Mrs. T. W. Chandler and Mrs. W. W. Tuck, Jr.

The Woman's Missionary and Ladies' Aid Society of the church, under the supervision of a committee composed of Mrs. W. S. Daniel and Mrs. W. W. Tuck, Jr., sent two large handbags filled with small articles for everyday needs, to the Church World Service, to be sent to the War stricken people of Europe.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

Today we have an article from Dr. H. S. Harcastle who is the minister of my home church in Newport News. Dr. Harcastle is writing about missions because he has long worked with the Mission Board.

* * * *

"START THEM YOUNG."

This slogan or similar slogans such as "Catch them young," "Begin when they are children," "Get them early in life" embodies sound strategy which the world uses to accomplish its purposes. For instance the cigarette interests and the liquor interests do not have to worry about a future demand for their products if they can get boys and girls and young people to use them while yet young. Habits and attitudes have a way of hardening and becoming deepest with the years. The sooner one starts to smoke, or drink, the surer it is that he will become a slave to the habit. The same principle is true with any other vice.

And of course the principle holds true in regard to virtues. Take for instance the world of sport. Read the story of most, if not all, great athletes and you will find that they took up the sport in which they excel when they were young, in some cases when they were very young. The current series of articles now running in the Saturday Evening Post, in which Babe Ruth tells in a most engaging manner the story of his life, is an illustration in point. From his earliest remembrance he loved baseball and played it even as a child. The same thing is true of Jack Cramer the No. 1 tennis player of the world. And it is true of the great musicians and artists and what have you. "Start them young," "get them early" does embody sound strategy. It is true of education. It is true of character.

The children of light ought to be as smart as the children of the world. If we expect to have a missionary-minded church tomorrow we must start with the children and young people of today. The acid test of the missionary spirit of the church is not primarily how many adults we have at our conferences, but the missionary training we are giving our children. Build missionary ideals, and instil missionary spirit into the children of today, and the church of tomorrow will be missionary. There will be exceptions in individuals, but the rule will hold.

This brings it right down to our Sunday schools and homes. These institutions have the children while they are young. They can help to "set the patterns" which will make the children world-minded, racially—"color blind," religiously—tolerant, and missionary-minded. The Sunday schools and the churches can do it through formal and informal ways. The missionary emphasis can be given by stories by courses, by projects, by visual aids, by visits to peoples of other races and religions, as well as by informal attitudes and atmosphere.

The same principle applies to the home as well. Parents should not speak disparagingly of other children or peoples, not only of other races and religions, but of other classes. They should read and tell their young children missionary stories and talk with them about the children of other lands. They might well subscribe to a good missionary magazine with good children's materials in it. If they have family worship they can easily and regularly bring in the missionary outlook and spirit into such worship. They can encourage the children to give to missions. They can "talk up" the missionary program of their church, and explain why they give to benevolences as well as to local expenses.

Train up a child in the way in which he should go, when he is young, and although there are exceptions, the rule holds good—when he is old he will not depart from it. The future of missions is today. Tomorrow's missionary leaders and missionary givers are today's children. "Start them young." "Get them early."

H. S. HARCASTLE.

A SMALL CHURCH PLANS FOR THE MISSIONARY EDUCATION OF ITS CHILDREN.

We have in our Children's Department three classes—Nursery, Beginner, and Primary. In the Beginner and Primary groups, we have tried to bring in some missionary education in various ways. We have used the primary book, My Story Book About the Bible, in the Beginner class and also in worship services for the entire department. On one Sunday, we had the story of "The Good Samaritan," using portions of the Bible, pictures on the flannelgraph, and the story from this book.

The other class is really a mixture of primaries and juniors, and here we have planned to use the junior book, Around the World with the Bible, as a class lesson book, using the teacher's book with it. We plan to use some of the worship services from this teacher's book and the teacher's book for My Bible Story Book in our worship services for the group. We shall also make some of the things suggested in the handwork section.

We hope also to use some of the mission study books as library books to take home and read, then bring back next Sunday.

Last year, I used in my Beginner group, The Story of the Rahuri Twins (India), by Florence Moulton, and Billy Bates, the story of a Negro boy in California.

At various times I have suggested to mothers some of the small inexpensive books for their children to read such as Ah Fu, a Chinese River Boy, Mitsu, a Little Girl of Japan, and the others in the series. These may be bought at 25c each from The Pilgrim Press and the children really love them.

In addition to these things, at appropriate times, we have connected missions with the idea of bringing clothes, food, and so forth to send to children overseas.

THE WORLD MISSION OF THE CHURCH IN OUR DAY.

By ELIZARETH CHICOINE, Field Worker.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions of our Congregational Christian Churches is trying to be for us our eyes, our ears, our hands, our feet, our hearts, and our conscience all over the world. We believe that the Gospel of Jesus Christ brings hope and strength and goodwill wherever it goes.

To overcome ignorance and prejudice by sound education, to heal mental and bodily ills and to promote public health, to provide wholesome literature and recreation, to give women and children and all depressed classes genuine opportunities to grow into true persons, and to make all aware of truth and love as incarnate in Jesus Christ—this is Evangelism in its glorious meaning.

Does not this answer the question: "What do our missionaries do?" The missionaries of the American Board have set themselves to this high task. They have won many comrades across

LENTEN MATERIALS.

Dear Church School Superintendents:

Lent began February 11. This is a time for increased attention to spiritual education of children.

"Thoughts of God for Boys and Girls (25c each; 20c in quantity—order from Pilgrim Press) is an attractive devotional booklet for children about seven or eight to twelve years old. It has a story, poem or meditation, prayer and Scripture, sometimes picture or song, for each day of Lent, a booklet any child might use and cherish. We used to ask the children to bring 10 or 15c in partial payment.

Teachers will do well to discuss some item from this book, as well as the ones listed below, on Sunday with the children or young people as a reminder of their use or to add interest.

Increased devotional life must result in greater giving of oneself to the cause of Christ even for the youngest. We urge you to continue emphasis on sacrificial giving. CWVR milk bottle stickers can be secured free from CWVR. Pilgrim Series Manual has suggestions for sacrificial giving as an all-school project.

Here are other suggested materials for use during the Lenten Season:

Bits of Advice—

1. Teacher or teacher and pupils together decide on the one idea to be portrayed. That idea may be the conventional Biblical account of Holy Week for the Christians, or the origins of present day Easter customs, or a modern drama in which the actors find inspiration for facing life's tragedies from the Passover and Easter, or what is the answer to death? or Maundy Thursday translated into life today, i. e., demonstrations of appropriate ways of showing our love for our fellowmen today, and on and on the ideas go.

2. Check the idea chosen for portrayal against the needs and understanding of your particular age group.

3. Choose the means of portrayal (story, drama, projected visual material, choric speech, litanies, speeches and conversations, etc.) that are best suited to the time at your disposal, the desired response, and available mechanics for production.

4. A truth—new information or fresh inspiration concerning Easter stimulates thought and action.

A MEDITATION.

the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts."

When one becomes a part of the household of God, one would desire that everyone should come into that Kingdom. Hence one would say, "Thy kingdom come." Religion is not selfishness for all selfishness is done away. One would desire that His reign would be alike in Heaven and in earth.

I feel that it is not intended that one should pray only for bread—to feed the body, but for the bread that comes down from heaven; that would enable one to possess that quality that would enable him to work in all relationship as a child of God. During the day, regardless of what happens, one must remember that he is related to Him only in proportion as he is related to others in forgiveness. "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors."

Thus one may seek and receive protection, nurture and strength as the day's experience would require; "Forgive us our debts as we forgive." Then at the close of the day one could look back over the day with rejoicing, and praise the Lord for all his benefits. Amen.

THE WORTH OF CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

LESSON XI—MARCH 14, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: I press on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3:14.

LESSON: Acts 20:17-38; Ephesians 5:6-21.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Philippians 4:4-9.

The Wrath of God.

"Because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the sons of disobedience." There is reality to the wrath of God. To be sure God is not angry in the sense that we become angry. Nor does He take delight in the punishment or the death of the wicked. In fact it breaks His heart when we suffer for our sins—the Cross tells us that. But wrong-doing and sin do invoke His displeasure. And disobedience does bring its penalty. In short this is a moral universe, and moral and spiritual, to say nothing of physical laws cannot be flaunted and flouted without eventually bringing penalties and final disaster. "Let no man deceive you with empty words"—ah! there's the rub, we are so easily deceived. We think we are smarter than others, we think we can get away with it, we think that we are exceptions to the rule. But be not deceived, God is not mocked, whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap. That is one incentive to right living—the inevitable penalty of wrong living. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, says one inspired writer.

Children of Light.

But there is another incentive, and a more powerful incentive—the spirit of gratitude. "For ye were once darkness, but are now light in the Lord. Walk as children of light, proving what is well-pleasing unto the Lord." It is well for a child to obey if for no other reason than because he fears the penalty of disobedience. But that is a low motive to say the least. One gets into another sphere altogether when one is good because he loves another and delights to please him. So it is with the Christian. As a child of light he will want to walk in a way that is well-pleasing to his heavenly Father. That is the essence of Luther's strange remark, "Love God and do as you please." Becoming a Christian in Paul's mind really meant something. It was like coming out of a dark cellar or cave, dank and dismal and dark and living in the clear sunshine. Out of darkness into the light is the figure he uses. Folks who think that becoming a Christian and joining the church does not make much difference evidently do not think about the same thing that Paul was writing about. For him it did make all the difference in the world.

Things to be Ashamed of.

"For the things that are done by them in secret it is a shame even to speak of." Sin soon palls and becomes dull. And so the sinner seeks new thrills. And folks often go to extremes to get these thrills. They do things in secret which it is a shame even to speak of. As a matter of fact some times they do things in the open that are too nasty to speak of. Jesus said that the folks who do evil hate the light. Paul was saying the same thing. There is a lot of rottenness in the world, things so vile and vicious that folks cannot even speak of them openly. Alas for the lives that are stained by things done in secret.

Even Reprove Them.

"And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather even reprove them." They are challenging words. They sound a challenge to our Christian courage and our Christian tact. All too often we give tacit approval to uncleanness by laughing at smutty jokes, or accepting shameful things without a word of protest. To be sure there is a delicate point here. One does not like to be thought a prude, or to set himself up as a "holier than thou" Puritan. But we err on the other side as a rule. Sometimes, indeed often, we would do well to reprove in a Christian way, those who do wrong. And sometimes we can do it by silence as well as by spoken word. There are those whose very character and ideals make it almost impossible to say unclean things in their presence. Their lives rebuke us, all apart from their words.

Watch Your Step.

"Look therefore carefully how ye walk, not as unwise but as wise." Christians are not perfect, it is asking too much of them to be perfect. And folks who stay out of the church because they see imperfections in Christians are simply evading their personal responsibility—they are trying to cover their own sins and moral failures with the sins of others. But we Christians ought to "look carefully how we walk." There ought to be an honest and persistent effort to make our practice come up to our profession. Whether we like it or not, we are epistles, known and read of all men. Others watch us, often follow us because they believe in us. By as much as in us lies we ought to be the best men and women we can possibly be. Christian character is more important than Christian creed. John wrote that "we ought also to be as He is" that those who have been called to be children of God ought to purify ourselves even as He is pure. For the sake of others, Christians must watch their step.

Intoxication or Inspiration.

"Be not drunk with wine wherein is riot, or excess, but be filled with the Spirit." Drinking is not the only form of intemperance. But we are just fooling ourselves when we think that it is not one of the most prevalent and the most deadly forms of intemperance. All that one has to do is to read the statistics published, not by the "drys" but by the liquor interests themselves, to see how rapid and many-fold is the increase in the amount and the value of liquor in America today. And one has only to attend any social gathering to see how general is the habit of drinking. We are fast becoming a drinking nation and in lesser but constantly increasing fashion, a drunken nation. The liquor traffic is getting a stranglehold upon the American people. To keep up with the Joneses, to seek escape from the realities of life, to drown one's sorrows, to pep up one's jaded senses, people are drinking more and more people are drinking.

THE MISSION BOARD AT WORK WITHIN THE CONVENTION.

Without the generous support which stems from the missionary program of the Convention, many of those churches which are administering to the needs of men and women in outlying communities would be forced to abandon their work or at least curtail the leadership which is so vital to the life of the church.

Too often, Protestantism has tended to evaluate the strength of her constitution by the size of the membership of the local churches. This, of course, places undue priority upon work of the city churches with their enormous structures and their well-filled congregations. What has often been overlooked is the fact that the real strength of any denomination within Protestantism lies in its "grass-root" communities where small, rural churches are sowing the seed which finds harvest in the life of the urban institutions. The work of the Mission Board is to "water the grass-roots" that the seed may have an opportunity to grow.

In the case of the Lynchburg Church, the support of the Mission Board has enabled the church to maintain a full-time minister. That such leadership was imperative can be readily seen. Prior to the war, the community where the Lynchburg Church is located was a semi-rural community exerting limited influence in the life of the city. With the expansion of growth to the suburban areas which has characterized the trend in most of the cities of the United States, Lynchburg, too, has pushed out from her normal boundaries to populate those areas which had been semi-rural. Today the church in Lynchburg finds herself in the midst of an expanding and ever-growing community which, within the past three years, has more than tripled its building activity. The Mission Board has enabled the Lynchburg Church to face the challenge of a changing situation and through the generous support of the missionary program of the Convention we are now engaged in carrying out far-reaching plans for the future.

HIGH POINT.

Your Mission Board has made it possible for this pastor to serve the promising field at High Point. He has been on the field for four months and there are many signs of promise. The church, by your help, is in the process of paying for a parsonage purchased a few months ago. The interior of the parsonage has been painted by the local church. The exteriors of both church and parsonage are being painted. Twenty-two members have been received. The Sunday school enrollment and attendance exceeds the number on the church roll, and this is a sign of promise for our growth in numbers and effectiveness. We feel there is a real opportunity for our church here. We are grateful for the financial help from the Convention through the Mission Board. We ask your continued help and prayers that Christ may be exalted and His Church built up.

BEN JOE EARP,
Pastor.

WINSTON-SALEM.

The Mission Board of the Southern Convention has been at work in Winston-Salem for several years. After a good start, there came the slump of a few years back. Now, through the faith and leadership of some people and through the encouragement of the Mission Board, the Winston-Salem Church is at work with a new zeal.

We now have in Winston-Salem a small but efficient church building and this is all paid for. We also have a lovely parsonage, one of the most convenient to be found anywhere. Our Mission Board shared largely in its purchase. We own a large vacant lot next to the church building, where we hope to erect a new and larger plant one of these days. At least, we have property in Winston-Salem.

Today, we have a small but an unusually good group of people in the church and Sunday school. The Sunday school attendance has doubled in two years, reaching fifty recently. The church membership has increased fifty per cent in that time. The Woman's Association, the Pilgrim Fellowship, the church choir and the young adult group are active organizations of the church. Not long ago we had a supper and social for the young adult group, with thirty-five young adults present.

Since the Mission Board, along with other Boards and organizations, has given much time and money to our Winston-Salem work, the Church feels that it must share in the welfare of the community and denomination at large. We try to minister to out-of-town hospital patients who are from our churches elsewhere. Just now we are undertaking the sponsoring of a radio series on one of the local radio stations—this is done by the young adult group.

People are moving into Winston-Salem constantly from all parts of the country, and from other countries, many of them Congregational Christians. Our church here can render a valuable service in contacting these people and offering them a church home.

We can be a help to the neighboring rural churches of our fellowship. Plans are made and meetings are held with this in mind.

Your Mission Board is thus undergirding a very worthwhile work here in Winston-Salem, and also at Pfafftown, our rural church near here. This Easter Season and this Mission Period of the Convention should be a time for us to strengthen our home bases as well as our foreign work.

W. J. ANDES,
Pastor.

MISSIONARY GIVING—A NORMAL RESPONSE OF CHRISTIANS.

There should be an increasing interest in, and giving for, missions.

Mr. R. O. Rothgeb, Conference Mission Secretary of our Conference, in his report at our last annual session had this to say with reference to the increase in giving for missions in this Conference: "This is the greatest increase in one conference year of which I have any record." In his report he brought to our attention the steady growth in membership and dues collected in our Christian Missionary Association and reminded us that during the year it had the largest membership and amount of dues collected in any year. Last year the Apportionment Committee of our Conference raised by fifty per cent the amount asked of the churches to be given to be used in supplementing the salaries of our pastors. This additional amount was raised by all of our churches. This is very encouraging and we want to keep the missionary growth vigorous and healthy here in the Valley.

Such a showing could not have been possible without the vision and wisdom of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention in appropriating funds to make it possible for us to group our churches in pastorates, secure the proper leadership for our churches and have the pastor located in the group for better efficiency among our churches so that more valuable service can be given to the work of the Church and the extending and building up of the Kingdom of God.

When we give to missions we make it possible for a greater service to be

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

This February 26th is a beautiful clear day. It is warm and pleasant; such a contrast from the weather we have had since Christmas Day. The weather has been so rough that we were forced to keep the children indoors all the time. It is not so bad when they all go to school with just one or two left in the building; but the school had to close for a week, and we had all of them at home for that length of time. You cannot expect youngsters, who are full of life and energy, to be as quiet as lambs, it is just not in their make-up or nature, but it made it hard on the matrons and me as well.

But at this writing it now looks as though the weather will clear up and the children will get out on the playground, and we will get rest, which we all so richly deserve.

Working with children is an interesting work. We take them here from three to thirteen years of age. We have all ages, but most of them are under twelve. It is interesting to watch a girl develop from a little tot until she is eighteen years old, and then be able to send her out as a nurse, secretary, or church worker. We have to our credit a number of girls, who are graduate nurses, and who are now practicing their profession from North Carolina to New Hampshire. We have girls who are private secretaries, from North Carolina to New York City—girls who have made good. We have boys who are electrical engineers, salesmen, railroad engineers, in business for themselves, and in many other positions of trust. These boys and girls came here little boys and girls without a chance in life; no other home except the orphanage. One of our boys paid us a visit some time ago, who came here a little friendless boy. He was reared here, and when he reached the age limit he got a job in one of our large cities. When he came he had this to say: "I will always love the Christian Orphanage. It gave me a home when I had no other. There is no place like the Orphanage to me, as it is the only home I ever had." This young man gives liberally of his means to help support the orphanage every year. It was by your contributions that the Orphanage was able to give those boys and girls a chance. You made a splendid investment!

WORLD MISSION OF CHURCH.

the decades, so that now, it is the national Christian leader who bears the heavier responsibility. The missionary is by his side to serve, not to command. All are together in Christ! And, these new comrades look to the mission boards for guidance and help. We must not fail them.

Holding the Line.

1. The Inauguration of the Church of South India.—September 27, 1947, dawns at Madras, India—the day of the birth of the new Church of South India. Is it not a wonderful occasion? Is it not the first time in the history of Christendom that churches of many types of government (episcopal, presbyterian and congregational) have united to form one church with over 1,100,000 constituents.

At last! At last! After twenty-eight years of overcoming of obstacles, here we are at last uniting as one church. May God endow the new church and her leaders with a baptism of His Holy Spirit for the tasks which lie ahead.

2. Advance Through Storm in Japan.—Japan has just finished its second year since the close of the devastating war which plunged the world into colossal upheaval. We need missionaries and we make this request, knowing that living conditions here will make it necessary for these missionaries to enter into sufferings which we all must endure, in the spirit of sacrifice expected of those in the Christian Church.

If the preamble to the constitution of the Japanese people can be so taught and followed that the words become a part of them, the missionaries can reach the whole country: "... We, the Japanese people, desire peace for all time ... trust in the ... peace-loving people of the world. ... We recognize that all peoples of the world have the right to live in peace, free from fear and want."

And Japanese Christians write us, "... Above all, we can never forget the way in which you have undergirded us with your earnest prayers. During the war you sustained us ... and continue to sustain us. ... We have learned anew the ... preciousness of the fellowship ... in Christ."

3. Looking at Our African Missions.—The intense nationalism which has swept India, Indonesia, and other swept India, Indonesia, and other parts of the world is beginning to flame in Africa. Materialism is hitting harder and harder. Communism is looking at the discontent and taking advantage of it.

At present, most Africans are sincere Christians. They and their people really desire to withstand these powerful forces. But if help is not forthcoming, they question the faith of Christians in the rest of the world!

4. The Ups and Downs of Rehabilitation in the Philippine Island.—There were 111 churches destroyed on Mindanao! One pastor to every four churches! Many calls for church high schools! New homes, hospitals, schools, clinics, libraries, to be built! The marks of war being replaced by the work of the Christian Church.

The Moros (Moslems) are eager for medical, educational, and social help, and this gives our missionaries a reason for deep satisfaction and a sense of achievement in their telling the Christian message.

5. What of the Night in China?—"Determined hopefulness" is the way in which one missionary describes the spirit of the Chinese staff members in North China. No matter what the obstacles, they mean to carry on and to advance the Christian Church as rapidly as they can.

The Shaowu church leaders loyally held the church together during the long war years—and their reward came when Dorothy and Dick Jackson, Dr. Riggs, and Miss Whitaker arrived on the scene.

6. Our Work in Europe and the Near East.—Our Mission of Fellowship to the school in Le Chambon, France, to German prisoners of war, and with the Spanish refugees in southern France has been richly rewarded in terms of service and help rendered.

Greece is in constant need of relief supplies, since guerilla bands often raid in agricultural centers. Turkey, another field in the Near East, is decidedly pro-United States; and at a recent meeting of the Near East Mission, it was expressed that open doors of spiritual opportunity are facing us there. This might be said of other points, too — Lebanon, Syria, Bulgaria.

7. The Diamond Jubilee in Mexico.—The celebration of the work of the past seventy-five years in Mexico is a high point—but much more important is the looking ahead to further opportunities for Mexican leaders to assume leadership and grow into the fellowship of Christians all over the world.

8. The Medical Branch of Our Service.—The decided growth in the services given in the name of Christ by the mission hospitals and dispensaries show us that the medical “arm” of our missionary service is touching more lives and more and more is revealing Christ’s spirit of compassion.

On one of the islands in our Micronesia Mission in the Pacific, the people had built a new coral church. “Why a new church?” visitors asked. “To be ready for the missionaries,” was the answer. “But the missionaries haven’t been here for twenty-five years.” “They will come back,” replied the Christians confidently.

We pray—and we work toward the goal—that in this day of great need and great opportunity, our hearts and our minds will be moved to build on the sure foundations that have already been laid. We move together—forward—in the great task of world evangelism.

SERVICES OF HOME BOARD.

eign in the universe and Lord of the lives of men. It is to make known the good news that this Sovereign God has acted in Jesus Christ to bring us unto Him, and that because of this action, there is now on earth a new kind of society—the Christian Community—composed of people who are united by discipleship to Christ.

The church is this Christian Community—this new society—and thus, all organizations within the church should believe it good that the Gospel be proclaimed wherever there are men to hear it and that the church should be born wherever there are human beings to be drawn into the new Christian Community.

1. The Division of Christian Education—

Although it may seem difficult, at first glance, to face the task of teaching Christ to hundreds of thousands of children, young people, and adults, those difficulties shrink when one views the opportunity there.

It is the responsibility of the educational agency of the Congregational

Christian Churches to help supply materials; church school curricula; plans for organizing schools, training leaders, setting up conferences; and to work with students and church-related schools.

The purpose of the Division of Christian Education is to help persons grow most naturally into the Christian life and to help them become intelligent and active workers in the church.

2. The American Missionary Association Division—

The whole scene of human relations is being highlighted by the adoption of World Bill of Rights of the United Nations which covers “every person, without distinction as to race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, property status, or national or social origin.”

There is a great gulf between our ideals and reality. It is a world dilemma. It is “an American dilemma”—and it is to this dilemma that the A.M.A. looks and seeks to find the Christian way out.

A.M.A. schools (Talladega, Le Moyne, Tougaloo, Dillard, Tillotson, Fisk, Trinity, Lincoln, Cotton Valley, Fessenden Pleasant Hill, and Avery) and cooperative centers (such as Dorchester, Georgia, Zalduondo, Puerto Rico, and Bricks, North Carolina) are proving that there is a Christian way out of the “American dilemma.”

3. The Ministerial Relief Division—

The work of this Division continues through the years without publicity and yet, nearly five hundred ministers or their widows were receiving aid at the first of January, 1948. However, we now know that inflation is no longer peculiar to China and other war-ravaged nations. It is here in the United States, where living costs are higher than any other place in the world. This inflation is being painfully felt by ministers and their widows who are dependent for help upon the Division of Ministerial Relief.

4. The Radio Committee—

“All Aboard for Adventure!” has received enthusiastic comments from the more than three hundred radio stations throughout the United States, Canada, Hawaii, the Philippines, and Australia. Sunday school teachers, pastors, mayors’ committees—even labor unions—have written in to tell of the excellence of the programs.

The “Radio Edition of the Bible” is becoming increasingly popular. These 15-minute dramatic programs, highlighting the actual text of the Bible, have proved to be such good material that RCA would like to produce and distribute them as commercial phonograph records!

5. The Church Extension Division—

This Division is a service organization, serving the churches across the nation without reference to missionary or independent status. It helps in the building and planning of new churches, the purchase of parsonages, the employment of fine, young ministers. It puts new life into old churches.

With the rural churches—which make up two-thirds of all the churches in our fellowship—it has established regional centers, has inaugurated schools for rural pastors, and gives help to marginal, weaker, rural churches.

6. The Pilgrim Press Division—

The Pilgrim Press has printed, during the past year, a very significant group of new books, has published and distributed the new Pilgrim Series for the Sunday schools, and has published and distributed materials for the Commission on Evangelism and other commissions and agencies. It orders materials from other sources for all activities of the local church or conference.

Dr. George Gibson, the General Secretary and Editor, says, “Our policy is to serve the whole mission and message of the Church.”

But just books and magazines, hospitals and schools, new farming methods, and radio programs are not the distinctive mission of the Church. They are necessary—but they would be as nothing without the Spirit of God, as Jesus Christ revealed it to us, working through them. The Christian message cannot be made known without the Church—the Christian Community.

rendered by our missionaries on the foreign field and to aid many of our ministers here at home in their work as a pastor.

We should never underestimate the value of our gifts for missions and we should continue to look forward to our part in a missionary program equal to the opportunities and demands of our time.

With gratitude for the privilege of a share in this work and with appreciation for what has been done we should set ourselves to the task of cultivating the spirit of missionary giving as a normal response of the Christian life.

On Your Marks, Get Set, Go!

By H. S. HARDCASTLE

President, Mission Board

These are usually the words that are used at the start of a race in a track meet. They are good words to be used as we begin our Mission Period which includes the months of March, April, May and June. We ought to get ready, we ought to set for ourselves a worthy goal, and we ought to go.

There is an insistent and persistent appeal for more missionary activity, both at home and abroad. National and international leaders, and not all of them churchmen, are constantly emphasizing the fact that unless civilization can be undergirded spiritually it will collapse materially. And there is a note of urgency in their appeals. Indeed there is an undertone of sheer pessimism throughout the world today in regard to the future, and open pessimism in regard to it apart from religion.

The Mission Board of our Southern Convention at its last session faced this need for moral and spiritual rearmament and tried as best it could to do something about it, both at home and abroad. We tried to strengthen our stakes even as we tried to lengthen our cords. And we even dared to go in debt if need be to accomplish our purpose. Thus it is that while we are seeking increased giving for our foreign work, and asking at least ten thousand dollars ($10,000) for our Shaowu project, and seven thousand dollars ($7,000) for the work of the Committee for War Victims and Reconstruction, we are also asking for ten thousand dollars ($10,000) for Church Extension. We want to enlarge our foreign mission work and to strengthen and expand our home mission work. Asheboro and Burlington, the former strategic location already well on the road to completion, and the latter place seemingly presenting a distinct challenge for Church Extension, are major objectives in this year's program. Bay View, another strategic place, has a claim upon our Board and our people as they enter upon their larger building program. And of course there are many other places which the Board must help, but on a decreasing scale each year that more resources may be available for new work. We have dared to make our plans larger because we felt the need was imperative and because we thought the people would respond.

And now is the strategic time of the year in this program. This Mission Period ought to be a time of intensive education, spiritual emphasis, and more generous giving. We ought to plan our work and work our plan. It has been our custom to receive a special offering for missions at Easter, and that offering should receive special emphasis. But that is not enough if we are to reach our goal and do our part. We ought to make plans for an "Over and Above Offering" during the Mission Period. The Easter Offering should not represent our special gifts to missions in full. We ought to give an Easter offering plus. One of the best methods of doing this is through the use of the Cent-A-Meal Boxes or Jars. It can be worked because it has been worked. And there are those who can make special gifts, substantial gifts to this great cause. The method is not most important. Given the proper compassion and compulsion the method will be found to get the best results.

My friends, we are about to run an important race. We are surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses. On your marks, get set, go!

NUMBER 11.

A Call for Advance Movement Is Upon Us

By ALBERT D. STAUFFACHER

Minister, Missions Council

The needs of the world and the opportunity for effective witness to the Gospel of God in Christ are such as to call for a new and high level of devotion to the Church and to our stewardship of the Gospel entrusted to us. We still proclaim our valuation of the Church and its World Mission in terms of a nickel a day, a daily paper, a street-car fare, a cheap candy bar or a cheap cigar a day. There has been no real advance.

An advance requires that we "sell" the Church of the Living God to our churches; that we deepen our spiritual quality, broaden our spiritual vision and lift our spiritual horizons; that we blue-print a program of Christian ministry for the world of 1948 and 1949 big enough to challenge the attention and devotion of men who think in terms of United Nations and a Recovery Program for a continent; and that we make our promotional appeals and channels simple, concise and unified. The time is past due and compelling for a going forward to meet our God-entrusted stewardship with Christ-like faithfulness.

This leads up to the conclusion that a single focal point of orientation is needed, a sense of mission wherein the disciple of Christ finds kinship with his Lord and Master. Where is this to be found save in the World Mission of the Church wherein the Great Commission of our Lord finds its full expression? Such a center is not in theology, nor in worship, nor in Christian education, central as these are to the work of the Church. Such a center is rather to be found in the directed and controlled use of all these to create men and women and youth of the Church with a sense of commission, then of mission and then of dedication of mind, heart and hand to fulfil a God-given stewardship of time, talent and money. If we were rightly orientated, the Every-Member Canvass and the Sabbath morning presentation of the offering at the altar of the Church would be the celebration of a Christian Harvest Festival directed toward abundant life for all the children of God in all the earth.

Now it is for this concept of unified promotion that I plead. Effective promotion for the World Mission of the Church depends upon two primary factors, the skill with which the presentation is made and the preparedness of the constituency for a receptive response. This latter depends upon many circumstances such as the interpretation of Christianity in the home; the faithfulness of Christian colleges, universities and seminaries to the World Mission of Christianity; evangelism that is directed not alone to church membership, but even more to world Christian citizenship; religious education that equips for Christian world service; devotion of local ministers to the world mission of their churches, the priority it holds in their thinking and program building; the public relations of the Boards and Agencies through which benevolences are administered; the personal lives of leaders, executives and missionaries; the Church-related intelligence of consecrated laymen and women without whom we are hopeless; it takes all of us, working together as a team and pulling together in one direction to fulfil our covenant of purpose.

NEWS AND VIEWS

The letters from Misses Meebold and Whitaker came to us through the courtesy of Miss Dorothy Bascom, Framingham, Mass.

A recognition service for Dr. Paul Kershner, new minister of First Church in Akron, Ohio, was held on February 29 with a sermon by Dr. Wofford C. Timmons.

Rev. James B. Allan, pastor of the Lynchburg Church is conducting a monthly Teacher Training Class with all teachers and substitute teachers of the Sunday school.

Superintendent Wm. T. Scott attended the meeting of the Ad-Interim Committee of The Missions Council of the Congregational Christian Churches in New York City March 1.

Rev. Ernest J. Arnold has resigned as Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Council of Churches with offices at Durham, North Carolina. He becomes the Assistant to the President of Davidson College on April 1.

The Winston-Salem Church has completed the payment of her apportionment of $200 to the Staley-Atkinson Memorial Foundation. Winston-Salem is one of our smaller churches but under the leadership of William J. Andes, the minister, the church is making progress and is one of our most loyal groups to the denominational interests.

New church hymnals and new hymn racks have been purchased for the Damascus Church. The envelope system for financing has been introduced and is meeting with approval. The Damascus Church is assuming a larger place in the leadership of the religious life of the community. Rev. W. L. Wood is the pastor. Included in the Sunbury pastorate are Eure, Oak Grove and Damascus Churches.

The First Church, Norfolk, under the leadership of Rev. John L. Gwin, pastor, is making progress. Since Mr. Gwin came to the church as pastor in January the class for the women of the church school has been organized and the and the men's class has increased its enrollment considerably. Attendance at the church services is running well over 100 for the morning and over 50 for the evening.

Churches are urged to register their votes concerning the proposed Merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches. All church votes must be submitted on the regular form provided for reporting and these reports should be sent to Superintendent Scott, Elon College, N. C., before the first of April. Pastors and churches are urged to give attention to this important expression of our churches in regard to this matter of church union.

Dr. Alfred W. Hurst, pastor of the Cleveland Park Church in Washington, observed his twenty-eighth anniversary in the ministry on February 29. Dr. Hurst states: "I preached my first sermon at a little Christian Church near Afton, Iowa. The roads were drifted with snow so that they were almost impassable. There were twelve in the congregation including the 17-year-old preacher, and the sermon was twelve minutes in length. Someone remarked at the time that it would be twenty-eight years before a fifth Sunday would occur again in February. Since that time I have served churches in Indiana, Missouri, North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee, coming to Washington in 1944."

THE MID-YEAR SESSION OF THE VALLEY CONFERENCE.

The eighteenth Mid-Year Session of the Virginia Valley Central Congregational Christian Conference will be held Thursday, March 25, 1948, at the Bethlehem Church, beginning at 10:00 A. M. Mr. Roy A. Larriek of Winchester, Virginia, is the President of the Conference and Rev. Silas E. Madren, Elkton, Virginia, is Secretary.

The Valley churches have found the Mid-Year Session of their Conference to be a great help in promoting the interest of the church. Business is transacted only when absolutely necessary, the time being given more largely to the promotion of the missionary and benevolent causes of the denomination, and the strengthening of the fellowship of the churches.

Each church in the Valley is entitled to representation of two delegates for the first 100 members or fraction thereof and one delegate for each additional 50 or fraction thereof, provided that no church shall have more than four delegates.

Among the important issues to be decided at the coming session will be the vote on the merger, and the election of delegates to the approaching session of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches.

It is hoped that every church will be represented and that each pastor will be in attendance.

CHRIST OF THE ANDES.

By C. B. RIDDLE.

On March 13, Chile and Argentina will celebrate the forty-fourth anniversary of the erection of the colossal statue of Christ which stands 14,000 feet above the sea as a symbol of peace between the two countries.

Near the close of the last century Chile and Argentina were on the verge of war. They were increasing their armaments to the utmost of their ability. Each had two gigantic warships of the latest pattern under construction, and both were spending incredible sums on these preparations for war.

What brought the two republics so near to conflict was a dispute over the boundary between them on the Andes—a controversy involving question of title to 80,000 square miles of territory. The dispute had been rendered more acute by the discovery that in one section the boundary was not continuously marked by mountain crests, and that there were valuable rivers in the region sending their waters through the hills to the sea on the Chilean side. This discovery had caused Chile to put forward claims to certain parts of the region.

British ministers residing at Buenos Aires and Santiago used their offices with the two governments to prevent war and to obtain a peaceful settlement of the dispute. This effort to prevent hostilities was supported by churches in both countries.

On Easter Sunday, 1900, a proposal was made that a statue of Christ be placed on the Andean border between the two countries as a symbol of peace. Petitions were sent to the legislatures, and through these, executives of the two republics were reached.

The result was that a treaty was entered into by the two governments, submitting the controversy to the arbitration of the King of England. He entrusted the case to eminent jurists and expert geographers, who examined it carefully and submitted their decision, awarding a part of the disputed territory to one of the republics and a part to the other. The decision was accepted by both.

Land forces of both countries were reduced, heavy ordnance taken off war vessels, and several of the vessels of the marine turned over to commercial fleets. Work on the warships was arrested and some of the ships sold.

The results of this disarmament were most remarkable. With the money saved by lessening of military and naval expenses, internal and coast improvements were made. Good roads were constructed. Chile turned an arsenal into a school for manual training. One or two of Argentina's previous war vessels went into its commercial fleet and began to ply the Atlantic in honorable business.

But more significant than any of these material results was the change in the attitude of the Argentines and Chileans toward each other. Old bitterness and distrust passed away, and the most cordial good feeling and confidence have existed through the years.

The suggestion to erect a statue of Christ on the boundary between the two countries was quickly executed. As early as 1901, on the initiative of the president of the Christian Mothers' Association of Buenos Aires, the women of the Argentine capital undertook the task of procuring funds and having a statue created.

On May 21, 1903, Chilean representatives, hearing the treaties for final ratification, came by sea to Buenos Aires. They were met down the river and escorted to the city by a fleet of gaily decked steamers. For a week there were festivities. When the treaties were signed on May 28, it was decided to place the monument on the highest accessible point of the Andes between the countries.

In February, 1904, final steps were taken for the erection of the monument. It was carried by rail in huge crates to the foot of the mountain, and then on gun carriages up the mountain. Hundreds of persons had come up the night before and encamped on the ground to be present at the ceremony. The Argentines took position on the soil of Chile and the Chileans on the Argentine side. There was music and the booming of guns. The moment of unveiling was one of solemn silence. The statue was then dedicated to the whole world as a practical lesson of peace and good will. The ceremonies of the day, March 13, 1904, were closed, as the sun went down, with a prayer that love and kindness might penetrate the hearts of men everywhere.

The base of the statue is granite. On this is a granite sphere, weighing some fourteen tons, on which the outlines of the world are sketched resting upon a granite column twenty-two feet high. The figure of Christ above, in bronze, is twenty-six feet high. The cross supported in the left hand is five feet higher. The right hand is stretched out in blessing. On the granite base are two bronze tablets. On one is recorded the creation and erection of the statue; on the other are the words: "Sooner shall these mountains crumble into dust than the Argentines and Chileans break the peace sworn at the feet of Christ the Redeemer." The covenant has never been broken.

WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

The Executive Committee of the Western North Carolina Congregational Christian Conference met on Monday afternoon, February 16, 1948, at 2:00 P. M., with Dr. and Mrs. F. C. Lester at the parsonage in Ashboro. There were present: G. T. Gunter, Mrs. F. C. Lester, M. A. Pollard, Cyrus Shoffner, T. J. Green and W. H. Freeman. H. V. Cox was absent on account of illness in the family.

Items of vital interest were discussed by the committee, and it is our conviction that progress will be made this year in our Conference.

AGRICULTURAL SALVATION.

The Pere Marquette was speeding from Grand Rapids to Detroit. The editor had been to the Mid-Winter Meeting. A group of fellow travellers had been to a meeting at a state college of agriculture. Conversation was rife. These agricultural experts spoke like the prophets of a new day. They decried the traditional type of farming which produces inferior products and envisioned the day when the seed and soil will be more scientifically related. They were confident that the mother or housewife would be willing to pay a few cents extra for her carrots, provided they had the proper caloric value. As people begin to realize that food with maximum nutritional value is available, the standard of farming will be raised generally.

These agricultural visionaries then took another leap of faith. They proposed to fight cancer with food, disease with health, death with life. That, in their opinion, was the hope of mankind.

As this thrilling conversation came to an end, this ex-farmer prayed, "Amen, God grant it." God's revelation continues. Miracles of production are emerging. "Greater things than these shall ye do", said He who is the bread of life, who came that men might have life and have it abundantly.

THE VOICE OF THE ANDES.

Station HCJB, located at Quito, Ecuador, began its work in 1928 and is said to be the first missionary broadcasting station in the world. It was established on the conviction that the Great Commission includes every possible method of carrying the gospel to the people. It is not a commercial enterprise. The aim of the Christian group that operates the station is expressed in the following report.

"It is the aim of the directors of the station and personnel to point the beam antenna towards the different countries, depending on the hour of the day, sending to that particular section the Gospel in the language of its people. This necessitates an extremely heavy schedule upon those at the microphones as well as those at the controls.

"Truly, Romans 10:18 is real . . . 'their sound went into all the earth.' It is nothing less than staggering to think that a servant of the Lord can speak into the microphone of a powerful transmitter like the new 'Voice of Andes' and literally reach more people in an hour than could be reached in a lifetime otherwise.

"Believing that God has a mighty plan for Christians to carry the message of His redeeming grace to all mankind in our generation, we feel that radio has been given to the 20th. Century Church as a sacred trust to use in evangelizing both at home and on the mission field. It is for this holy purpose of making Christ known, first to the Spanish-speaking nations, afterwards to the world, that Radio Station HCJB exists and to which it is dedicated."

The Christ of the Andes and the Voice of the Andes are potent forces in our world. They make powerful appeals to the eye and ear gates to mansoul. This type of non-commercial missionary broadcasting should be greatly improved and expanded. The mission boards of our major denominations should take the initiative in this thrilling enterprise.

EQUIPMENT FOR SERVICE.

Progressive churches are improving and multiplying their services by improving and multiplying their equipment. The Second Baptist Church of Richmond Virginia, has its Sunday morning service recorded. The record is taken to the sick and shut-in during the week and played for them. Thus the services of the church are extended immeasurably. The purpose of this church is not only to get the people to church but also to get the church to the people.

The First Congregational Church in Long Beach, California, has been the recipient of two unusual gifts: one, a Philco television set with the new large size screen, the second, a latest type germicidal health lamp, which destroys all germs in the air by ultraviolet rays. The lamps are used in the preschool and kindergarten rooms and will cut down the spreading of colds and other infectious diseases.

Each Monday from October until June more than 225 blind persons are brought to the First Congregational Church, Los Angeles, California, to spend the major part of the day. Classes in nineteen subjects are available. Eighty-five volunteers guide these sightless people through a day of valuable interest and training.

These churches are discovering new spiritual frontiers. Who follows in their train?

STORMING THE EYE AND EAR GATES TO MANSOUL.

Plans calling for the production of 29 religious movies together with the opening of a Hollywood office to cooperate with the motion picture industry was announced by the Protestant Film Commission at its third annual meeting held in New York City, on January 23.

A spokesman for the Commission says the decision was prompted by the enthusiastic response of the church, the motion picture industry, and the public to its first film, "Beyond Our Own,"—a dramatization of Christian service.

Decision to open a Hollywood office resulted from request by major producers for information and advice on Protestant views as related to the movie industry, the spokesman said. It was emphasized that the office will be under the direction of local church leaders familiar with the motion picture industry, and capable of expressing the basic concepts of Protestantism.

One of the film series being scheduled by the Commission deals with the "Christian Minister," "How Prejudice Develops," "Missionary Recruiting," and "Christian Education."

Another series ear-marked for use in the Sunday school will depict "The Church and World Order," "Human Relationships," "Democracy," "The Bible Today," and "Religious Education."

The missionary recruiting film is expected to be completed for showing at the Foreign Missions Assembly to be held in Columbus, Ohio, October 6, 1948, together with a film on China, entitled "My Name Is Han." The latter is reported to be in the final stages of production.

Chinese Christian Youth

By LUTHER C. S. SHAO

Address Before the International Council of Religious Education

The bulk of Christian youth come from Christian schools and colleges in China. Before the registration of Christian educational institutions under government between 1927 and 1928, as a rule all religious activities were compulsory. Many non-Christian students resented such compulsory religious education. However, it was through this process that they were converted. It is safe to say that many Christian leaders in various fields today came from these schools and colleges. It will be of interest to mention that, although many students became Christians because of the appeal of the Gospel for personal salvation, many others have because they firmly believe a genuine Christian faith will eventually bring forth a good Christian character which is the basis of building a good nation or a society. In fact, Christian schools and colleges in China are noted for their emphasis on Christian character training. The element of compulsion was removed after these educational institutions were registered under the Nationalist government. All religious activities are put on a voluntary basis.

With the Chinese humanistic background for centuries and the practical-mindedness of the Chinese people, Christian youth in China do not care so much about theology. Their religious faith is inductive and empirical rather than deductive and authoritarian. To them Christianity is a way of life. Such a religion calls for social action. Salvation is not completed until the whole social structure, the whole nation and the whole world are redeemed. The objectives of the National Student Christian Movement in China, which read, "In the spirit of Jesus, to create a fellowship of youth and to build sound character, with a view to the emancipation and development of the life of the people" are illustrative of this point. I heartily agree with Dr. Kiang Wen-han, an experienced student secretary of the National Committee of the Y. M. C. A. in China, when he said that the Christian message for the Christian youth should be four-fold; namely, a restoration of Jesus as the center of their faith, establishing a rational basis for their faith in the light of modern scientific development, an identification of religion with practical life, and the initiation of a Christian program for social reform. Nevertheless, as a result of suffering and privation throughout those war years, and more so in the former occupied China, there seems a return to religious conservatism and more emphasis on the cultivation of personal religious life rather than the social aspect of the Gospel in many Christian youth groups.

The relation between Christian youth and the church has gone through several stages. In the earlier years of compulsory religious education, students' participation in Sunday schools, Sunday services, and evangelistic meetings was required. The relation between them was not a friendly one. Then came the period of reaction and criticism of the church by the young people. You might even find that youth groups would meet outside of the church. In the meantime, the church authorities held an indifferent, and some even a hostile attitude toward the youth groups, and vice versa. Then came the third period, Christian youth fellowships and the church authorities worked hand in hand for this total program. However, there are churches whose leadership is so strong and far-sighted they scarcely follow the earlier two stages. In fact, from the time their youth program began they have been working cooperatively. Needless to say, the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. have been very alert to the needs of Christian youth. Their program for the youth has been well carried out.

In most cases, you will find a Christian youth fellowship in every church. The young people themselves are responsible for the organization and program under the supervision of church leaders. They usually have several committees—religious, educational, evangelistic, social life, and social service. They either meet weekly or bi-weekly. They study the Bible, discuss their own life problems, and contemporary issues of Christianity. They participate in the church choir, teach Sunday schools for children, conduct their own worship, educate illiterates, organize evangelistic bands to preach to the neighboring community, and do various types of social services for the local community, especially in the rural areas. Every now and then they have hikes, concerts, competitive sports and games, good social programs and organization of stories and pageants for special occasions.

Youth conference movements in China are strong. The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. were the originators of such movements. Later on, churches began to show an interest in them. The conferences are attended mostly by Christian youth; non-Christian youth also participate in them. Usually these are held during vacation times, summer or winter. They are held denominationally, interdenominationally, regionally, and intercollegiately. Places chosen for the conference grounds are always quiet and scenic. The duration varies from three to ten days. Programs usually contain morning watch, Bible study, discussion on contemporary issues and Christianity, hymn singing, recreational activities, worship, personal interviews and testimonies. In some places they organize service corps to work in rural areas after the conferences are over. Many who go to these conferences consistently come back with a real assurance of Christian faith and a rededication of their lives to Christ. Those non-Christians who participate in these come back with a desire to learn more of Christian truth. It is the experience of many who administer these conferences that they are the right channels to win non-Christians to Christianity, make Christians better Christians, and recruit promising young men and young women for Christian service.

Having realized the important role played by the youth in the history of China in general and the Christian movement in particular, a national youth and religion movement was launched in the spring of 1934 under the joint auspices of the national committee of the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The twenty-six members of my Pastor's Class who meet me Fridays after they have spent a week in school deserve commendation and praise for their faithfulness to this class and for their real interest in it. Two or three boys who wish to be in the class work at the hour and cannot attend. We shall give them special attention at an hour when they can meet with their pastor. I am so pleased with these fine young people I am going to put their names here in my Suffolk Letter: Wesley Alexander, Faye Bennett, Judith Bolton, William Brantley, Joan Dail, Milton Dailey, Betty Lee Ellis, Marie Everett, Thomas Folk, West Frazier, Peggy Gilliam, Patricia Holly, Nancy Howell, Stephen Johnson, Emily Masek, Lewis Morgan, Barbara Odom, Bob Richardson, Sarah Lee Rogers, Rhett Rose, Shirley Russell, William Shaw, Audrey Smith, Henry Taylor, Jean Trapnell, and Buck McCoy Wiggins. I come from each session of this class thrilled with their attention and friendship. What fine girls and boys they are!

Which leads me to ask: What kind of America do we wish? If the Christian people in all our churches would set themselves to the task of teaching the youth of our land the principles and teachings found in the custody of the church, set down in the Bible, and tested by our fathers and mothers all the way back to the founding of our country, we could have a Christian land. God bless the faithful Sunday school workers and teachers, and God bless their churches. We need an America with the spirit of Christ, with the liberty and freedom found in the principles of righteousness. We could have it if we would. But we cannot sit idly by while the forces of evil and selfishness forge forward, and expect "somebody else" to see to it that our country is free. It is not something that we can let others do. We must everyone, all of us who know and love the way of the church, and Christian instruction, take it seriously and do our part.

Is there a pupil who needs to be in Sunday school? What are you doing about it? Perhaps you are the child's mother or father, or maybe a Sunday school teacher. This morning there was a mother in my study to see me who has three children—six, four, and two—neither mother nor children are attending church or Sunday school. I am going to do my best to see that that is changed. There are many people who are neglecting Sunday school and church, when they would get a thrill out of going out to bless others by winning them for the church and the Christ. Do you

PASTORAL PRAYER.

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN,
Mason City, Iowa.

"God of grace and God of glory," give us of Thy grace and of Thy power that we may meet life's problems as becometh sons and daughters of the Eternal.

We confess the sins and the sinfulness of the common life which we share. We confess the sins recorded against us personally. We confess the sins which blot the pages of our national history. We confess the sins which are cursing and impeding the progress of the world.

We pray for Thy divine forgiveness that our personal sins may be erased from Thy book of remembrance. We pray for Thy divine grace to enable us each one individually to live a good life free from offense against Thee or against our fellow men. We pray that Thou wilt move to repentance the leaders of men in national and international affairs, in business and in industry—that the confusion and turmoil of our times may be quieted; that self-seeking by nations and by groups shall be changed to cooperative effort; that injustice and exploitation of every kind shall cease; and that all men everywhere shall "do unto others as they desire that others shall do unto them."

In the name of Christ our Lord, we pray. Amen.

want to do something for somebody? Show them the joy of bringing up their children in the church. One of the best services you can render your country, or your community, or another person, is to let them know the value and power of attending church and Sunday school. Let each one of us who reads these lines resolve not to leave such an important and joyous matter up to someone else, but rather let us begin right where we are to do our part.

LENTEN EVANGELISM AT BAY VIEW.

In response to the request of the Committee on Evangelism of the Southern Convention, Bay View has planned a very extensive Lenten program. Its purpose is two-fold: First, the enrichment of the spiritual life of the church membership; and second, to increase the numerical growth of the church.

This is to be accomplished in the following ways:

First, through "Parish Visitation." The parish has been divided into thirteen sections of five or six families each. During the week of February 8-15 the thirteen visitors of these sections will call upon each family in their territory, discuss with them the Lenten program and leave them a Church Calendar, a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Fellowship of Prayer. The visitors will encourage each family to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. In addition to this I plan to visit in every home in the parish before Easter.

Second, through "Friendly Visitation." There has been prepared a list of prospective members and regular church visitors. These names were secured from the Guest Register, Sunday School Classes, Woman's Fellowship, marriages I have performed, parents of children in the Beginners and Primary Classes, and parents of the children I have christened. Also, within the parish is a new housing development which is now being occupied and other scattered bits of home construction. Five teams of two members each are being trained to make calls, secure members, to visit with and introduce the church to the new people who have moved into this area.

These teams visiting from February 29-March 7 will carry with them for distribution a Church Calendar, the Fellowship of Prayer, the 16-page booklet We Believe, the four-page leaflet The Congregational Christian Churches—For What Do They Stand, and the leaflet Ten Suggestions for Enriching Family Life. The names of prospective members and attendants requiring additional visitation will be turned over to the minister.

Third, through the "Pastor's Class." The members of this class have been secured from the Young People's and Intermediate Classes.

And, Fourth, through a series of Evangelistic Services I plan to conduct during the week of March 14-21. Also, during this week I shall be conducting each morning over Station

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

THE PASTORS AND CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHERN CON- VENTION.

Elon College is anxious to be of help to the young people of our own church. It stands for and is doing a very high grade of work in the field of Christian higher education. Its facilities and opportunities are offered to all with the required qualifications for entrance. We are glad to have any qualified young person as a student in Elon College without religious beliefs or denominational affiliation, but we are particularly anxious to have the sons and daughters of the homes of our own church.

We are anxious to have our own young people as students in Elon College, but the only way for them to be admitted is to apply. The purpose of this communication at this time is to urge you, all of our pastors and church members who know of high school students belonging to our church who will graduate in the class of 1948, to urge these high school seniors to apply for entrance in their own college as early as possible. When they do apply, we want to be able to assign them rooms. If the rooms are all taken, this will be impossible. Last week, a good and faithful member of our church, said to me, "I am certainly sorry that you could not admit my boy in our college last September." We were and are sorry but there was nothing else to do. All rooms had been assigned.

Present indications are that practically all schools and colleges will be crowded another year. They certainly are not waiting to the last to apply for admission in Elon College. At present we have nearly as many applications from new students as we will have room for. They have not all been approved. We are holding some rooms for the high school graduates of our church. We are asking our ministers, Sunday school teachers and church officials to please cooperate with us in our effort to interest our church young people in their own college and to influence them to make application at once so as to be sure of securing accommodations.

This is an earnest appeal. When a young man or young woman belonging to our church enters another college, losses are sustained all along the line. The student loses. He misses the opportunity of a wider acquaintance with other young people of his denomination. He misses the advantages of the instruction, guidance, and the fine Christian atmosphere of his own denominational college. The Church loses. It misses the privilege of having this privileged young person as a student on its campus, the inspiration of his personality, and the use of his creative talents. The College loses. It loses the benefit of his presence, his helpfulness as a student, and his services as an alumnus for all time.

Let us all, ministers, laymen, and young people, work to build our college and thereby build our church.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The fifth Sunday in February was a beautiful day. It comes so seldom it had a right to be beautiful. The weather was inviting. It may be that the roads were not, but even so, it was a good day to go to Sunday school and church. I trust that all of our Sunday schools and churches were filled with worshippers. It was also a good day to make a contribution to Elon College. We have heard from quite a number of Sunday schools and churches and in most instances received generous offerings for which we are grateful. It has been so long since we received a sizeable offering for the College, that it seems awfully good to the College to again receive financial support from our friends. We are able to make an excellent report this week. Thanks to everyone.

MRS. BEN T. HOLDEN, SR.

Mrs. Benjamin T. Holden, Sr., was born February 11, 1887, and died January 30, 1948. She was buried from O'Neal Funeral Home, Louisburg, North Carolina, Tuesday, February 3, 1948, at 10:30 A. M. Interment followed in cemetery at Oak Level Christian Church.

Mrs. Holden was an alumnus of Elon College of the class of 1904. Her husband, Ben T. Holden, Sr., died some years ago. There are four children: Patricia Holden Leete, Benjamin T. Holden, II, Rebecca Holden Summers, and John Staley Holden. There are two grandchildren: Scott Summers, II, and Staley Summers. Two sisters survive: Mrs. Bessie Staley Cheatham of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun of Suffolk, Virginia.

Mrs. Holden was a life-long member of Oak Level Christian Church. There is no Christian Church in Louisburg, but she refused to be inactive in church service. She worked faithfully with the Methodist Church, having served as superintendent of the Sunday school and teacher in the Sunday school.

Mrs. Holden was the youngest daughter of the late Dr. W. W. Staley who was an able leader in the Christian Church and who was interested in all of its activities and institutions. She left her children a rich heritage of faith, loyalty, consecration, and devotion. Her home was a home of religious instruction and of prayer for those whom she loved. She was a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution and interested in all benevolent and patriotic enterprises.

The sympathy and prayers of our church in the South are in behalf of the bereaved family.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. J. M. Culbreth of the Methodist Church of Louisburg.

FROM OUR MISSIONARIES.

February 10, 1948.
Shaowu, China,

Dear Friends:

Today is China New Year. The firecrackers started "popping" last night and they've been going most all day. Kao T'ai T'ai invited Doctor Riggs and myself over last night for a quiet dinner at home with her family. She has a thirteen-year-old girl and a nine-year-old boy. She had fixed all sorts of meat and rice dishes all very tasty. We ate by the light of a huge red candle. After the meal, we strolled down to the East Gate to see the firecrackers and red decorations.

After New Year's we are planning to open a "Well Baby Clinic" at South Gate Church. So I will be busier than ever. At present we have an Outpatient department, a fifteen-bed hospital, five student nurses and six graduate nurses. I am trying to get the Chinese nurses to take over the responsibility so that I can branch out into public health. The "Well Baby Clinic" will be the first step.

We have morning chapel every morning at 8:00 A. M. and our servants are getting some religious instruction but as yet we have no evangelist. We plan to have an evangelist soon.

Fenyang Shansi, China,
February 9, 1948.

Dear Friends:

I'm glad to be back and believe I shall be busy enough after school begins, but just now with vacations on, I have been taking it easy. Tomorrow is China New Year, and the day after we begin our New Year's evangelistic program. It's very quiet this year—to be held in Christian homes, and we shall divide into small groups. The government has been having training classes for many weeks of all classes of civilians, and all other activities are under a sort of wet blanket of course to run these classes. They have required lots of grain and this has been demanded of the people, so their tax load has weighed them down. It is an effort on the part of the government to make the civilian share in deterring the reds and the ways and means committee has studied all the forms of pressure and terror used by their enemies and now apply them to their friends. It makes life pretty rugged for one and all.

We are always having "special cares" of student and faculty needing help. One of our High School boys is losing his sight and after a good deal of writing and consulting, it has been decided to send him to Taiyuan for eye treatment. Our own Dr. Wang could do it, but he has no instruments for eye testing or surgery and no glasses fitting outfit. We are sending him to a British Baptist Hospital which has a foreign doctor and equipment. However, we are also trying to get some apparatus from CNRRA or IRA or what have you.

Emma Noreen is planning to help about twenty-five children with tuitions this term. I have not decided as yet but I hope to help women in the Bible School, especially. The government school charges no tuition, but its pupils have completed only about half the work ours have done. We have a Woman's Work Shop which helps about six women earn a good wage for sewing, and at which other women can earn a bit at piece-work, making shoes.

Agnes mentions the Shaowu group occasionally in her letters so I know what they are up to. We exchange notes with Taiku, Tungchow, Tientsin, as well as Peiping, so informally keep in touch.

LOUISE MEEBOLD.

THE EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE IS A PROGRAM OF WITNESSING.

It is the business of the Church to witness for Jesus Christ. That is the business (the main business) of the Christian. The tragedy of our world, and the growing secularism which is sweeping our nation, are due in a large measure to our failure to do our job as Christians. The Evangelistic Crusade for the Southern Convention from February 11 through Easter Sunday, March 28, born in prayer and dedication at the Pastors' Conference on Evangelism held at Elon College January 5-6, 1948, offers us a renewed opportunity to demonstrate our love for Jesus Christ and to be good witnesses for Him and His Church. Let us not fail in our great opportunity. Thereby we may well gain eternal life and lead others to eternal life.

There are two types of people in every community and neighborhood who need to be reached—the inactive members of our churches and people not identified with any church, many of whom make no boast of being Christian. It is our business to do all we can to bring these people into fellowship with Jesus Christ and His Church. Hence, the Evangelistic Crusade is threefold in purpose and program: conservation (re-enlisting the inactive members); recruiting (winning those to Christ who have never professed to serve Him); Christian growth (mature Christians seeking to help throw around young Christians the arm of Christian love and companionship). There is not one of us who cannot do something about this program of Christian Witnessing.

Let us make Easter of 1948 the climax of an earnest effort for Christ. Locate and visit those in your community who are not actively serving Christ and win them for Him. The Congregational Christian Churches of the Convention ought to win for Christ and His Church at least 3,000 new members by Easter Sunday. We can by His strength expressed in our consecration. Will you do your part? Begin today. Speak a good word for Christ and His Church by your life, your word, your deed.

Write a word of encouragement to THE SUN. Tell your fellow Christians what your church is doing to make effective the Evangelistic Crusade.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

TO WOMEN OF THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Suffolk, Va.,
March 8, 1948.

To Members of Woman's Conference of Eastern Va.

Dear Friends:

At a recent meeting of the Woman's Board of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference it was decided to have our Spring Rallies on April 6, 7 and 8, beginning promptly at 10:30 each morning. First of these rallies will be the Waverly District, with the Richmond Church; followed by the Suffolk District, with the Cypress Chapel Church; and closing with the Norfolk District, with the Bay View Church.

At each of the Rallies the Rev. Ralph R. Shrader, secretary of the Missions Council, Boston, Mass., will be the guest speaker; also several of our Southern Convention Woman's Convention leaders will be present to assist in the discussion and to make contributions to the program.

A feature of the afternoon program will be in the nature of an "Information Round Table" conducted for information and questions about our Home Mission work by Supt. Wm. T. Scott, and this will be followed by such a period led by Dr. Shrader on our Foreign work.

Every woman in the Conference is urged to read up on our work both at home and abroad. Know what our work at home is, what churches and pastors we are assisting, and what the plans are for the future. For the Foreign work study to be able to tell where our work is being done, what the nature of it is, and who our missionaries are. Please read the front and back pages of the March 4 issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, also the missionary page of the same issue.

And let us make these rallies real schools of learning as well as days of inspiration for our women. To do that we must have very large attendance. The respective churches will furnish lunch, so please bear this in mind as delegations are made up from all our churches.

Yours for a good year in Missions,

MRS. JOHN G. TRUITT, Pres.,
E. Va. Woman's Conference.

WOMEN'S CLASS HONORS WALTERS PASTOR AND WIFE.

The Rev. and Mrs. J. Shannon Morgan, recently married couple, were guests at a miscellaneous shower given February 19 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lonnie Carr by the Loyal Woman's Class of Mount Carmel Congregational Christian Church.

Prizes in a contest were won by Mrs. E. W. Beale and Mrs. Clyde Hall. The hostess was assisted in serving by Mrs. Otis Joyner, Mrs. Julian Carr and Mrs. Jimmy Carr.

Mr. Morgan was also presented a gift from the church.

CHRISTIAN STRATEGY FOR A CRISIS SITUATION.

(Address by Dr. Leland S. Albright, assistant secretary of the International Missionary Council, during the meeting of the International Council of Religious Education.)

That civilization as we have known it is in crisis is one of the outstanding facts of our time, in no wise invalidated by the circumstance that multitudes of people do not realize it and many who do admit it in theory are in fact so complacent about it.

In such a situation there is danger that we further complicate the issue by competition between a short-term crisis policy and a long-term basic program. Doubtless there are some things that we do quickly to tide over the immediate situation: intensify every constructive effort to evangelize the world in this generation for there may not be any other.

Whether the road ahead of us be short or long—and, as in Jesus' day, only God knows that—it is a hard and costly way and we might as well begin with first principles, plan soundly, and work constructively at the over-all task of comprehensive evangelism in which conversion and education, missions at home and abroad may be distinguishable but must be integrated parts of one inclusive process.

In the long run, I believe that the missionary movement will gain more by widening its base in a larger group of people committed to Christian vocation as such than it will lose in fewer immediate commitments to missionary service. Only by the new process can we hope to secure the greatly increased support needed for home and particularly for foreign missions today and to avoid the scandal of the business man abroad and at home, and of consular and diplomatic, press and agency people overseas undoing the work of the missionary.

Christian education must be essentially Bible-based and Bible-centered. But alas, the rivalry between Bible of non-effect for many. I believe that the resolution of this conflict is in Biblical Realism, letting the Bible speak to our condition and facing its challenge squarely.

Obviously Christianity cannot meet the need which capitalism and communism have failed to do unless, in addition to the authentic Gospel, it is dynamic—and that means a cross at the heart of it—and is actually applied to all of life, area by area, group by group, with intelligence and whatever it takes or surrender of privilege and realization of such equity as will make our present society quite unrecognizable. Extremes of wealth and poverty, luxury and privation, opportunity and under-privilege are incompatible with a Christian society. In the light of the Gospel such inequality is intolerable.

The major part of mankind is still to be evangelized at a time when in a shrinking world every single failure of Christian conduct is recorded everywhere within hours, when militant secularism and atheism are bidding for the souls of people in every land, when communism is working day and night to produce "planned chaos," when post-war recovery has been seriously delayed, when British and continental missions are impoverished and North Americans are giving less in proportion to church and charitable enterprise than they did in the depth of the depression in 1932. One wonders at times whether we are just stupid in thinking we can have one world without effort or sacrifice, or whether we really intend to hand over the world to regimented secularism and collective anarchy.

We are in the midst of the Evangelistic Crusade among the churches of the Southern Convention and it is earnestly hoped that many men, women, boys and girls may be won to Christ and the church during this period which will culminate with Easter Sunday. The world needs to be won to Christ and we in America have a responsibility to see that America is Christian. Each local church shares a part of that important responsibility. Evangelism is the great mission of the church.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

I have been writing some biographies for you and it occurred to me that I should write about the Church, or Denomination, of which these men are a part.

The majority of us in North Carolina and Virginia belong to the Christian Church. Do you know what that means? Do you know the main beliefs of the church? Its organizations, its ministers? If you moved to St. Louis, Missouri, would you know if we had a church there? How do you find out? Some of you are too small to know but those of you who are in the Junior Department of Sunday school should know or be learning.

Our Church was founded by a minister named James O'Kelly. He was a Methodist and left that denomination because he did not believe in the government of that church. In 1794 (in Virginia) he began our Church. It is not to be confused with the Disciples of Christ who sometimes call themselves Christian, too. Our churches are different. The Disciples believe in baptism by immersion, and commune every Sunday. Those two things would easily tell you whether you were in a Christian or a Disciples' Church.

O'Kelly's ideas of church government have been made a part of our Principles and Government. They are very simple and easy to learn. If you will turn to page two you will see them written for the whole world to see and know. We baptize by immersion or sprinkling and are considered to be a liberal church. That means we do not hold to rigid, strict laws and allow each church to follow the course it finds best.

In school you are taught about the state and the nation. About the Bill of Rights and the Constitution. Likewise you should learn about the church of which you are a part.

Every year there is an Annual printed. It has the names of the ministers, the minutes of the organizations and a list of the churches. If you have never seen one ask your teacher or minister to show it to you. I think I have said before a visit to your Conference or the Convention would help you learn about these people. If you plan to visit or move to another city and do not know if we have a church there ask your minister—don't wait for him to tell you—ask him and he will know.

It really is shameful to be unable to name one of the agencies our Church supports. They are in order of their age: THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Elon College and the Orphanage which is also at Elon. Do you know the men who head these groups? You can easily find out if you read this paper every week.

Because we believe in church union we have already united with one denomination and that gives some of our churches a name that helps to set it apart—Congregational Christian, and we are thinking of uniting with another group. Before we learn of that let's get to know our own Church and our own history.

SUFFERING PARENTS.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.

(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Richards lingered after the recital to arrange for a committee meeting. Soon six-year-old Tommy began pulling her hand, teasing to go home. It was awkward. She weakly remonstrated, but the tugging continued. In a helpless sort of way she ignored it and tried to go on with the conversation.

Grandmother joined the group. Tommy straightened up; he knew that she would not countenance his badgering. On the way home the boy ran ahead; Grandmother was waiting for this. "You should not let Tommy treat you so disrespectfully," she said.

"I couldn't have a scene," her daughter replied.

"No, but if Tommy understood that you would not tolerate any such behavior, he would not attempt it. When you reach home he should be punished. If you allow him to be so troublesome, people will dislike him. But tell me, had you explained to Tommy that the delay was necessary?" Then, as the boy's mother shook her head, "You see," Grandmother continued, "he was tired and really needed to go home. If you had been more courteous to him, perhaps he would have been more courteous to you. In any event, don't allow him to be rude."

"He'll soon know better than to be rude to me," said Mrs. Richards.

"I am afraid it doesn't always work that way. I know of a case where disrespect to parents has increased as the child has grown older. About two years ago, a good friend who has a garden brought me some vegetables. Her eight-year-old Jack came with her. We were chatting for a minute at the kitchen door, when this big boy began pushing his mother. Although supposedly in fun, it was very embarrassing. We tried to turn it off as a joke, but nothing stopped the boy's ill-mannered actions, and my friend had to hurry away. Since that day Jack has seemed less attractive. Previously I had liked him and had watched his development with interest. He has a fine mind, but he is badly spoiled. Neither can I feel quite the same toward his mother since that display of annoying conduct, for, of course, adults are really to blame for children's misbehavior.

"While waiting in the back of the church last Sunday during the anthem I saw Jack again. He was sitting between his father and mother in a rear pew, and he was gripping the nape of his father's neck and with upraised forefinger was prodding the back of his head. Red with embarrassment and discomfort, his father seemed to be protesting, but the prodding went on regularly. Then his mother began whispering to him out of the corner of her mouth, but still he paid no attention. I could scarcely believe my eyes. People in the seat behind, the ushers, and those standing in the aisles were all watching."

"Yes, those parents were to blame more than their son!" exclaimed Mrs. Richards. "They should have corrected Jack when, as a very little boy, he first began treating them disrespectfully."

"I suppose such behavior really begins with a desire to show off," and Grandmother looked thoughtful. "We forget sometimes when meeting friends to introduce our children properly. They feel unnoticed and begin pestering us in order to attract attention."

"I hadn't thought of that. I'll be more careful after this to introduce Tommy. But since I've been negligent, he may need some correcting also."

That afternoon the Richards had callers. Tommy was introduced and greeted in a friendly way; but as soon as the older people were absorbed in conversation he began teasing his mother, trying to sit on her lap. She put him off and suggested that he cut the airplanes from a magazine sup-

"Youth at Work in the Church"

We have a few small-size packets for your young people's societies—would you like one or two? They will have all the mimeographed services and programs and the plan book in them, but will not have the "extra" unless you specifically ask for them. We'll be glad to send you as many as you'd like for fifty cents. If you already have a complete packet, perhaps you'd like one or two more with the programs in them for other officers in your group or your adult advisers and your minister. It would be very convenient to have some extra copies in case the "one and only" got lost!

—o—

The March-April issue of the young people's newsletter will be out soon. Youth Outreach really does reach out into your own society, into your Conference, into the Convention, into our nation, and into our world. If you haven't been receiving Youth Outreach, let us know, and we'll put you on our mailing list right away. One year's subscription is 50c. If you'd like more copies, all sent to one address, we can send them that way, too. (The rate's cheaper!)

"WRECK-REATION" OR "RE-CREATION."

At a leadership Training School of all the churches in Greensboro, N. C., there was a course on Recreational Leadership. To many attending, this course was a spiritual blessing and a great inspiration and set many to thinking: "How can I help my church or young people's group to have a better Recreational Program?"

Perhaps many would wonder how a course in Recreational Leadership could be very "spiritually blessing and a great inspiration." That such would be the outcome had not been expected by the "students" of this course, either. However, on the opening night, the leader made a really eye-opening statement. He said, "Yes, our churches teach pretty little stories and lessons, full of good morals, urging the right over the wrong, on Sunday, and then—the church doors are closed on Sunday night and the members (he referred especially to the young people) are left to whatever entertainment and spare time diversion that presents itself." He went on to say, "More often than not, the opportunities for relaxation and fun are not the character and moral builders which have been described as what we should seek."

But what else can happen? The young people will say, when asked why they go to certain places, "There's nothing else to do—we've got to have some fun!" And how are we going to be prepared to answer this one?

The leader, in continuing, gave what could be a solution to this question. "The church," he said, "should be vitally concerned with the question of what its members do from Sunday to Sunday, in the way of recreation." Of course, it would be impossible and absurd to tell people they had to come to the church for their recreational activities. The problem is how to have people come because they want to come.

Six important steps toward achieving this goal are:

1. Appoint a committee of wide-awake, enthusiastic individuals, who are really interested in this project.
2. The work of the committee would be to make a survey of the needs and wants of the people whom they hope to reach with this program.
3. Make careful plans to provide attractive recreation and a varied program—one that will be enjoyed by all participants.
4. Good leaders and coworkers are important factors.
5. Well-informed persons assigned to definite jobs will be necessary to insure proper results.
6. Publicity will be an indispensable means for a successful program.

With correct planning procedure and hard follow-up work, any church can add new members, promote closer fellowship, help in spiritual and personality development and leadership through a good Recreational Program.

NEWS FROM ROSEMONT.

I received a long letter from Mrs. Hazel Williams the other day. She told me many things that the young people of the Rosemont Church have been doing. It was so enthusiastic about these projects, that believing they will help you, I'd like to pass them along.

In December, they laid aside their regular quarterly to boil down all their lessons to one question: "What would Jesus do if He came to Portlock?" Then, she says, we started our "Do ye likewise" slogan.

They have a Home Department, too, made up of people—all ages—who're unable to get to Sunday school. A class member in that neighborhood calls each Sunday, taking a personal letter from the teacher, with notes on that Sunday's lesson.

Then, too, the young people have enlisted in the Crusade of Evangelism, during the pre-Easter period, helping their minister.

They've saved picture lessons and Bible pictures to send to Shaowu—and they're preparing something for the new Jackson baby!

I wish that other Sunday school teachers and adult advisers would write me letters like this. Sometimes, unless I can visit you in person, this is the only way I have of knowing if you're alive! If you'll let me know about your activities—of if your reporter sends me articles and news items—I'll put them all in THE SUN on the young people's page and in the young people's newsletter, Youth Outreach. I'll be hearing from you!

HAPPY HOME OUTLINES WORK IN ITS YEAR BOOK.

I've just seen a copy of the year book of the young people of Happy Home—and I'd like to have all of you see it, for it's that good! I believe they followed somewhat the outline of the packet Plan Book, but in addition to that they did three things that I'm recommending to every young people's group:

1. They listed all the members of the group and their addresses; all the officers of the group and their addresses; all the counsellors' names and addresses; and their pastor's complete address. I'm glad that Happy Home did this—now I have a list of who's who and what's what in that group—and what's more, they know, too! Many times I've visited a group and the members themselves didn't know who was in their own society!

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

LESSON XII—MARCH 21, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven.—Matthew 6:10.

LESSON: Luke 4:16-22a; Mark 4:26-29; Luke 17:20-21; Romans 14:17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isaiah 60:1-3, 10-14.

Before going into an exposition of the theme of the lesson, The Kingdom of God, it might be well to call attention to a few words in the story from Luke with which he introduces the proclamation of the principles of the Kingdom. He writes: "As his custom was, he entered into the synagogue on the Sabbath Day." Jesus certainly saw the limitations of the synagogue service, and he saw even more clearly the limitations of some of the folks who attended the synagogue services. But He did not allow this to keep Him from "going to church." It was His custom. He did it regularly. His example is a pointed rebuke to the multitude of people, good people, church people, who do not have the "custom" of going to church. Here, as elsewhere, the Master gave us an example.

The Primacy of the Kingdom.

The Kingdom of God loomed large in the teachings and in the life of Jesus. He came "preaching the Kingdom of God." Many of His stories dealt with the Kingdom of God. He told men that when they prayed they should say "Thy Kingdom come." He boldly stated that men should "seek first the Kingdom of God." And when He had finished His earthly life and after He had risen from the dead, He appeared unto His disciples for the space of forty days, "speaking unto them of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God." The Kingdom of God was to have first place in the hearts of God's children. It was the supreme goal of life.

The Proclamation of the Kingdom.

"And He began to say unto them, Today hath this Scripture been fulfilled in your ears." What had He been saying? What platform had He been proclaiming? Although Luke does not specifically say so, Jesus sounded the basic principles of the Kingdom in His first sermon at Nazareth where He had been brought up.

He was in a sense, announcing His platform. He used as His text the great words from Isaiah the prophet: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor, He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives, the recovering of the sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." Perhaps as a boy Jesus had read these words, and had committed them to memory. As the consciousness of His Messianic mission gradually dawned upon Him, He must have heard these words ringing again and again in His ears and throbbing in His heart. Here in brief was the good news of the Kingdom. Here were some of the things that would take place if the rule of God was a reality in every heart. Here was the message that dealt with the spirit and the principles of the Kingdom.

"He anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor"—the folks who had been neglected, the folks who were underprivileged, were to hear the good news of the grace and goodness of God in Christ Jesus.

"He hath sent me to proclaim release to the captives"—perhaps literally to those who were in prison, but also release to those who were in the bondage of sin and the tyranny of bad habits.

"The recovering of the sight to the blind"—He did that literally by opening the eyes of the blind, but He also opens the eyes of the spiritually blind, gives people a new sense of values, opens up new perspectives and far visions, and gives light to those who sit in the shadow of great darkness.

"To set at liberty them that are bruised"—those whose lives had been hurt by the tragic things that life can do to people, found healing in His touch, and comfort in His presence, and freedom through the truth which set them free.

The Growth of the Kingdom.

"So is the Kingdom of God as if a man should cast seed upon the earth, and should sleep and rise night and day, and the seed should spring up and grow, he knoweth not how." The Kingdom grows silently, steadily, powerfully, often unnoticed. It does not come with the blare of trumpets. There is a divine vitality within it.

Men can plant and water but God alone can give the increase. There is "first the blade, then the ear, then the full grown corn in the ear." The mills of the gods grind slowly but they grind exceeding small. In the heart and in the world the forces of the Kingdom work silently, it may be slowly, but surely. He shall not fail nor be discouraged and He shall see the travail of His soul and be satisfied.

The Place of the Kingdom.

"The Kingdom of God is within you, or in your midst." Dr. E. Stanley Jones in his book Abundant Living, calls attention to the fact that the law of the Kingdom is written within us. It is within us. And he adds that life will not work any other way than according to the laws of the Kingdom. The Kingdom is to be found in the changed hearts of men. Wherever else the Kingdom may exist it cannot exist apart from the inner life of men.

The Nature of the Kingdom.

"For the Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." The Kingdom of God is the rule or the reign of God in the world and in the heart. It is not concerned with forms or ceremonies, with mere physical life such as eating and drinking, but with the quality of the inner life, with the spirit in the heart of man. It is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit.

The Coming of the Kingdom.

The Kingdom is both a present reality and a future event. It already exists in the hearts of men and its spirit governs some phases of social life. In this sense it is already present. But its fulfillment awaits the future, it is yet to be in its fullness. But come it will. The future belongs to it.

SO THIS IS LENT.

By F. ERVIN HYDE.

"For this reason I would remind you to rekindle the divine gift that you received when I laid my hands upon you. For the Spirit God has given us is not of timidity, but of power, love and self discipline."—II Timothy 1: 6-7 (Goodspeed).

We are in that period of the Christian year known as the Lenten Season. It is the time of the year that challenges us to "let our souls catch up with our bodies." Or as Rufus Jones suggests; it is a season "when we try to find the rest of ourselves." If we take Lent seriously we discover a sense of incompleteness. We learn that there is more to life than we realize. We discover that God offers us a spirit "of power, love and self discipline."

I. The first purpose of Lent is to put meaning and purpose into the whole of life.—There is the story of a wealthy man who built a beautiful home. He did not show it to his family until it was completed and beautifully furnished. With joy in his heart, the man took his family to see their new home. He pointed out the various conveniences, then said, "Only one thing have I not done. Here is a beautiful ark, that is made of fine perfumed imported wood. It represents religion but I do not know where to put it. I shall be glad for your suggestions and advice."

"Oh," explained the grown daughter, "put it in the Music Room. Religion is for the soul and the heart. Its place is in the midst of poetry and song."

"Put it in the Library," said the son who was a law student. "Religion is for the intellect and its place is among the books."

"Give it room in the kitchen," said the mother. "Religion is practical and its place is among labor and useful occupations."

The youngest member of the family was so small that they almost overlooked her but the father placed the ark in her hand said, "Show us where it should go." The child held the box in her hands for a moment, then walked over and through the ark into the fireplace, where a blazing fire quickly ignited the rare chest.

The mother and the other children were shocked but the father said, "Let it be. This was our method of deciding and we must abide by the results."

Soon the sweet fragrance of the imported perfumed wood filled the whole house—music room, library, kitchen and every room knew its scent.

"That is it," said the father, "religion belongs to all of the rooms. There is no place from which religion ought to be barred."

How true this is when the house becomes the universe, and the religion is Christianity! How much better our world would be if it could be permeated with the Christian Influence.

Thus Lent brings back to our lives the echo of the ancient prophet of God, who said, "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good, for what doth the Eternal require of thee but to be just, to be kind, and to live in quiet fellowship with the Eternal." . . . Or in the words of the apostle, "Stir up the gift of God that is within you."

The more pressing the duties of life become, the greater our need to rekindle the fires of our faith. How can this be done?

The Apostle Paul suggests that we can increase our spiritual strength through meditation and prayer:

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are of a good report, if there be any virtue and if there be any praise think on these things."

Let the beautiful thoughts of others become a part of your spiritual heritage. Think God's thoughts after him that he might guide you into the abundant life. Follow some devotional guide that your Bible study and your prayers might be closely related.

Prayer is the turning of the mind towards God. In him is love and light and truth. Prayer not only changes things; it performs its greatest service when it changes us. A great scientist, Alexis Carrell, says:

"When we pray, we link ourselves with the inexhaustible power of the universe. We ask that a part of that power be apportioned to our souls. Even in the asking, our deficiencies are filled, and we rise strengthened and repaired."

Ah, yes, Dr. Carrell is right! With the power that prayer generates we can rise above failure and defeat. We can achieve things with God's help that we cannot achieve alone. From him we must needs draw our strength to remake our lives and to rebuild our broken world.

So Lent challenges us to let our religious faith permeate the whole of life, giving meaning and purpose to it.

II. Lent also calls for dedication.—It summons us to dedicate ourselves more earnestly to the things that be of God. It reminds us of the obligations that our Christian faith puts upon us. Once we become aware of God's presence in our world, we discover that we are co-laborers with him in meeting the needs of others and correcting the social injustices of our own times. The Church can be true to its mission and its message only as it becomes alert to the real problems of life. Nor is it enough simply to be aware of these needs. It must seek in the name of God to meet these needs. The church fails if it sticks to old battlefield when the fight for righteousness moves out into new areas.

Maybe this was the reason for Amos' quarrel with the priests of Bethel. They were so busy with ritual and ceremonies that they had no time to correct the evils of their day. Justice demanded that he renounce the injustices of the corrupt society in which he lived.

Jesus condemned the religious leaders of his day because they were more concerned about the letter of the law than they were with the weightier matters of justice, mercy, faith and peace.

The church has been vital when it has come to grips with the real issues of life no matter how much these differed from the needs of the past.

So Lent challenges the church of our day to dedicate itself to face the needs that face us at home and abroad.

III. Lent challenges us to mingle some sacrifice with our devotion and our dedication.—Lent is more than a season of fasting! It is more than giving up some luxury for forty days. It is a call not so much to self-denial as it is to self-investment in the Christian enterprise. It is choosing some hard service to render in the name of Christ. It is the giving up of something without any hope of reward. It is laying hold upon the spirit of the cross until it burns its way into your heart.

So this is Lent! The challenge of this period in the Christian year is to learn what God can mean to us and what we can mean to him.

It is a call to devotion!

It is a call to dedication!

It is a call to sacrifice!

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Our good women of the Burlington Congregational Christian Church lead them all.

Sometime ago we wrote the Women's Missionary Societies and asked for Easter dresses for the girls and little spring suits for the little boys. The women of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Burlington Church came up in several cars and brought us one hundred and twenty-four beautiful dresses and thirty-three boys' sweaters and many other garments. They have broken a record of twenty-odd years' standing. Some twenty years ago we made an appeal through the Herald of Gospel Liberty, published at Dayton, Ohio, for Easter dresses. I well remember that the good women of our church in Urbana, Ill., made and sent to the Christian Orphanage, one hundred beautiful hand-made dresses. But our good women broke that record this year, by twenty-four dresses. Our Burlington Church people always do things in a big way, and they get lots of joy out of the giving.

Our Needs.

We had a number of our needs supplied last year, but not all. We have a large reception room in one of our buildings, and we have needed for a long time two living room suits to fit in two of the corners. The reason we have not mentioned this before is from the fact that we have to remodel it, and have been trying for six or eight months to get the material that we wanted to use, and we just succeeded this week in getting it. These living room suits, three piece, cost different prices, and the class that decides to donate one can use their own judgment. We want to appeal to the Men's Baracca Class or the Men's Bible Class to give these two suits for this one building. Then we have other needs we will let you know about later. Who will be first to supply one of the suits?

A motion prevailed that the officers constitute a program committee. It was decided to meet monthly at Asheboro on Monday after the third Sunday at 3:00 P. M.

At 6:00 P. M. a delicious meal was served by Mrs. Lester, assisted by Mesdames Brown and Bean of the Asheboro Church.

Following the meal, vital problems and church groups were discussed along with the subjece of evangelism. The sweet, friendly fellowship of both meetings was the most harmonious I have seen in the Western Conference.

Lent is an invitation to lend yourself to the service of God for forty days that ye might find the rest of yourself. May the habits learned during these days be so rewarding that they shall be continued all the days of your life.

"Rekindle the fires of faith." May the spirit of power, love and self-discipline be born in us during these days of Lent.

A PERSONAL TOUCH.

A gentleman once visited a great jewelry store, owned by a friend. His friend showed him magnificent diamonds, and other splendid stones. Amongst these stones his eye lighted on one that seemed quite lustreless, and, pointing to it, he said: "That has no beauty at all." But his friend put it in the hollow of his hand, and shut his hand, and then in a few moments opened it again. What a surprise! The entire stone gleamed with all the splendours of the rainbow. "What have you done to it?" asked the astonished gazer. His friend answered: "This is an opal. It is what we call the sympathetic jewel. It only needs to be gripped with the human hand to bring out its wonderful beauty."—A. C. Price.

CHINESE CHRISTIAN YOUTH.

C. A., the National Christian Council of China, and the China Christian Educational Association. Dr. Sherwood Eddy was invited to speak to these youth meetings in 1934. His message was centered around the idea of saving China by dedicating the lives of Chinese youth to Christ. It was reported that out of a hearing of 150,600 educated in twenty-one major cities, 2,476 young people decided to become Christians and 4,144 decided to study Christianity. In 1935 a Chinese team composed of Bishop W. Y. Chen, evangelist and psychologist, Miss Tseng Pao Swen, educator and women's leader, and Dr. Y. C. Tu, physicist and youth leader, spoke in thirteen cities. Their topics were Christianity and National Reconstruction, Jesus Christ and His Cross, Science and Religion, and The New Morality of China. Out of a hearing of 160,000 educated youth, 6,162 young people decided to study Christianity. A preaching mission to students composed of Bishop T. K. Shen, President T. C. Tu, Mr. H. K. Ma, and J. M. Tau conducted meetings in Nanking in May of last year. Their theme was "Jesus Christ and the Changing World." It was reported that many had decided to study more about Christianity and many Christians desired to become better Christians.

Many government colleges and universities had to be moved to the interior of China because of bombing during the war, and in many instances they were isolated from churches. Furthermore, many children of Christian families were in these isolated government colleges and universities. A committee on student evangelism in isolated government universities was created. The purpose was to reach these non-Christian students through a nucleus of a few devoted Christian students in these institutions. On nearly every campus a student center was erected to provide all students with all kinds of extra-curricular activities. This was used for relief, recreational, social and religious purposes. Regular Sunday services, weekly Bible classes and prayer circles, and occasional evangelistic meetings were held. Religious books and books of general interest were loaned to students. Such a center has brought many blessings to those students. This type of work is still continued on every campus, even though these institutions have moved back to their own former sites.

Under the able leadership of Rev.

Ting Li Mei, the secretary of the Student Volunteer Band, many former students were recruited to go into full-time Christian service. They are the ones who are still serving churches and Christian institutions in many parts of China today. This work of recruiting was discontinued for a number of years. At the meeting of the Chinese Student Christian Movement in 1939, one of the four movements they hoped to launch was the so-called Student Dedication Movement. This type of work was initiated under the leadership of Rev. Newton Chiang in West China. He and others visited many Christian schools, colleges and government universities recruiting young men and young women for full-time Christian service. Between 1941 and 1942 they were able to recruit 120 students in these institutions who decided to devote themselves to full-time Christian service, and 392 young people who desired to help the church actively in a voluntary capacity. The plan is underway under the auspices of the National Christian Council of China that this type of work should be continued. Nothing is more serious than the shortage of Christian leadership in China. That is the real challenge to the youth and the church administrators today.

A Challenge to All.

China's youth is in a dilemma at present. The Chinese Christian youth firmly believe that man's extremity is God's opportunity. God is going to work wonders through us. China will live through these trials. The Gospel of faith, hope and love is the message for the Chinese people, and especially for the Chinese youth. It is the same message for the world today. Although the total Christian population in China, including Roman Catholics, is less than one per cent, we are still trying to exert our Christian influence on our economic, social and political life of the nation. It may mean that we are going to face persecution when we try to be prophetic and daring in matters of social, political and economic injustice. But we refrain not. That is the message of the Cross. We do hope that you will do the same. China's problem is a moral and spiritual one. So is the world's. This is the challenge to us and to the world. Nothing is more urgent than world-wide evangelism. It seems a slow but a sure process. That is the very reason that we shall evangelize China through all kinds of Christian activities.

Christian youth of America, you are more blessed than the youth of any nation. The more you are blessed the more you are indebted to the world. You should take the lead in your youth fellowship to study the world situation and its challenge to Christianity, to your church, and to yourselves. You should not be satisfied when you only discuss them, but you should work out a concrete proposal for the solution of these problems.

In your city you have young people of all races and nationalities. Bring them in and have an opportunity of trying to understand one another. Young people's Christian fellowship of every nation should join hand in hand and give an unbiased presentation of the present problems of every nation. Let all of us face these issues with sincerity and fairness and strive through local churches, regional, national and international channels to exert our Christian influence upon the general public. Let us mobilize Christian public opinion. Let your youth fellowship be prophetic and dynamic that you will always be more conscious of the world's needs and daring enough to say what you want to say on the modern issues of the nation and of the world.

If finance and transportation facilities permit, there should be an exchange of Christian youth from one nation to another. You can start from your local community here and now because you always can find young students or young people of many nations here. One thing that American churches and young people's fellowship can do is to make an investigation of the young people of every nation in your locality and see that their religious or general needs are met. They can be invited to your homes, fellowship meetings, and church gatherings. These students who happen to be here are the cream of every nation. If your church and youth fellowship could exert enough Christian influence you would be doing a wonderful service to the united nations because these young people are the future leaders in their respective countries.

Students of every war-stricken area are appreciative of your gifts to the W. S. S. Fund raised here and elsewhere. I am of the opinion that they will need more in the days to come. Any kind of useful materials for youth fellowship that you have tried with success, you will find are welcome in other countries. You may find ways to send them. God bless the American youth and the youth of all nations. Let us rededicate ourselves to God and for His cause. — A

THE PLACE OF RELIGION IN OUR WORLD

Lenten Message by R. Gregg Cherry, Governor of North Carolina

Religious feeling and religious experiences and concern over these things hold a top position in the varied interests of all people. The existence of God and man's destiny have kept people praying, thinking and hoping for many centuries. Thoughts about religious feelings are thoughts about human progress. This is encouraging, and fortunate. Many twisted standards have grown up in our day. They do not lead to progress. In fact, there's been no progress on this earth except the progress born of religious feeling, using the word religious as expressing man's duty to his fellows—especially to the weak and the poor, and the oppressed.

We need in your state and mine not only an economic re-birth, but a spiritual re-birth as well. Sorrow and disappointment in some degree will always come, even in this American wonderland of the world. Regardless of our high economic level we cannot be permanently happy and progressive unless we have within ourselves a green pasture on which our souls can feed. We need a spiritual reservoir created by ourselves for our own refreshment. Much of the restlessness inside us, especially in young people, that there is so much talk about today, arises from the false assumption that what is outside us has the power to create happiness.

The Master was truly the greatest believer in the rights of men, more powerful and earnest than all the philosophers that ever lived, a defender of women and children, one whose heart was always with the sorrowful, and it was He who founded all progressive thought. Just think of that last scene of His early life. The brutality and ignorance of the mob that demanded the freedom of the criminal when they might have freed and heard the Saviour Himself. Think again this season about the journey to the hill outside Jerusalem. The poor women collecting coins to buy and give to the condemned a drink that should stupify Him and diminish the pain. The touching picture of the Holy Man refusing to drink, refusing to diminish the sorrow and horrible suffering that He had willingly brought upon Himself for the sake of others, for the sake of you and me.

In all the history of the world there is no picture such as that on the hill. The patient, upturned face of the Savior on the cross, the Sufferer destined to change the entire world. The Roman soldiers at His feet gambling for His scanty garments. The rabble hooting

Him, the thieves on either side denouncing Him because the miracle they hoped for did not come. The faithful women watching patiently until death should come and give His body back to them.

There are many wonderful scenes of heroism and self-sacrifice painted in history and painted in the blood of men willing to suffer for the truth. But there's nothing to compare with that one great picture and with the words spoken on the Cross: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Until you and I have studied the character of the Savior and the importance of His teachings, nothing else is worthwhile. Unless you and I possess religious feeling, no other feeling is worthwhile.

We can take heart. The spiritual roots of this state and this country are as strong and as full of vitality as ever—even stronger, I think, since the war. We are in a period requiring something better than quarrels and shrewdness. We want the Golden Rule in domestic affairs, in labor-management affairs, in state and national and international matters.

There is abroad in this nation a great deal of goodness and generosity. All about us in our daily movements we may see a surface of selfishness—but under this expanse of selfishness good impulses still beat hard and strong and with all the warmth of a good sound human heart.

Curiously enough, the longer we look at the unkind and the ruthless, the more evident it is that they are in the minority in most every group. I am an optimist in that respect for I am convinced that there is far more good in people than bad, that the generous kind souls in this world overwhelmingly outnumber the others and that most men and women would really like to do the decent, helpful thing if they are given an opportunity.

The problem then, I suppose, is to find out how we ourselves can open the way to these better impulses by our own behavior, our own attitude toward others. Surely a renewed confidence in each other, a revitalizing of our own individual attempts at cooperation and mutual consideration are badly needed, but will somehow form a part of the answer. We all believe in the principle that when anyone makes glad the heart of any man, woman, or child he makes glad the heart of our Great Master and God himself.

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1948.

NUMBER 12.

The Evangelistic Motive and the Missionary Task

Address by Dr. Leslie C. Sayre, New York, Secretary and Editor, Adult Division, Missionary Education Movement, Delivered at the International Council of Religious Education, Grand Rapids

The current joint home and foreign missionary study theme is World Evangelism. By this is meant the total Christian expression of the outreaching spirit of God in the world which is now twenty centuries rich in experience and global in extent. The Christian world mission today is powered by the same motive experienced by St. Paul. He found his inspiration in the central figure on Calvary where the tragic need for reconciliation was met by a sufficient reconciling power. The gospel of reconciliation was perfectly manifested by Jesus through his last words. His prayer "Father forgive them" sought reconciliation between the way of force and the way of gentleness. The word "This day thou shalt be with me in paradise" breached the gap between nationalism and the Kingdom of God. "Woman behold thy son" connected two grief-stricken individuals bringing them together into a family relationship.

Onlookers at Calvary saw only Christ's physical weakness—not his spiritual power. Today critics of the church point out divisions and weaknesses, still discounting her ability to reconcile. Friends of the church tend to judge her strength numerically overlooking the fact that this is no guage of spiritual strength.

Thousands of churches studying World Evangelism are being recalled to the original motivation to empower their modern methods. The spiritual tide has been rising high in these days overflowing the banks which mark the streams of social action, Christian education, stewardship, missions and so forth. World Evangelism shows that all are one.

This fresh awareness of the unity of the total Christian effort will not be weakened in the year ahead when two new study themes will be launched. "China in the Asia of Today" will be the foreign missionary emphasis while the corresponding home theme will be "America's Geographical Frontiers" by which is understood Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, Canal Zone, and the Virgin Islands. These areas will be studied as particular examples of World Evangelism as it is and as it ought to be.

A recreational field has been dedicated as a memorial to the late Rev. Eugene Rainey, minister of the Evarts Community Church in Harlan County, Kentucky, 1937-1945. Mr. Rainey began his ministry in the Southern Convention.

The Annual Convocation of our Florida ministers was held February 3-6. Convocation leaders included Drs. Wofford C. Timmons, Alfred Grant Walton, Russel Henry Stafford, Andrew Vance McCracken and Warren H. Denison.

Dr. Truman B. Douglass, Executive Vice-President of The Board of Home Missions, New York, was a visitor at Elon College during the past week. Dr. Douglass visited several churches in North Carolina in company with Supt. Scott.

The thirty-eight biennial session of The Southern Convention will be held at Liberty Vance Church, Route 1, Henderson, N. C., April 27-29, 1948. The list of delegates nominated by the Conferences appeared in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and it is hoped that every church will be represented at the coming session of the Convention.

Has your church voted on the merger proposed between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches? Churches are requested to register their votes on the proposal and send a statement of the number of people voting for or against the merger to The Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., not later than March 31.

Congratulations to our Leaksville Church of the Valley of Virginia! They are loyal supporters of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Through the good work and generosity of interested people of the church every family in the church is now receiving THE CHRISTIAN SUN regularly. We hope the Leaksville Church may encourage other churches to be 100 per cent in subscription to THE SUN.

Announcement is made of Rural Life Sunday, Sunday, May 2, 1948. A special order of service for observance of Rural Life Sunday in our churches are available from the Town and Country Department, The Board of Home Missions of Congregational Christian Churches, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. It is hoped that many of our churches will observe Rural Life Sunday in 1948.

The International Service Center of the Congregational Christian Churches, 110-112 East 29th Street, New York 16, N. Y., is now open. Please visit this Center when you are in New York. There is room for a limited number of overnight guests. The use of the building is for everybody with priorities given to those in New York on denominational business and to international visitors. Write to Mrs. Ruth Berry at the above address for further information and reservations.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond of Charleston, S. C., explained his eighteenth birthday to his congregation as follows: "Your minister was completely surprised on last Sunday. Going to the Lecture Room expecting to attend a committee meeting, he found the room full of people who were singing, 'Happy Birthday to You.' He observes his birthday only once in four years, excluding 1900, non-leap year, and had no appropriate technique for the situation. After partaking of cake and punch and enjoying a charming musical program, the gracious greetings of the church were given by Mr. R. A. Kessler who handed the minister a birthday card and an envelope conveying a most substantial token of fellowship and love. This is what theologians call an 'uncovenanted mercy'."

THAT EVANGELISTIC RECORD.

Easter is almost here. As soon as Eastern Sunday is over the pastors of our churches are urged to send a card to the Convention Office telling how many new members have been received into their churches since this present church year began. I am praying that we shall all have a good record. Most of our country churches have special evangelistic services later in the year, and some of our city churches do, but let us all seek to have some new members to report before March 31.

This week and Holy Week many churches will be holding special services. I am praying that God may put it into all our men and women to get behind this spirit of evangelism, and see to it that there is a good record going up from their churches. I am praying for all our pastors that they may be given grace and insight for leadership in these days that will help our church to rise to a new level in real evangelism.

THE EASTER OFFERING FOR MISSIONS.

Dear Friends:

“Christ in you, the hope of glory”—those were the words of St. Paul as he sought to impress upon the members of the early church the joy of carrying the Gospel of our Risen Lord to the uttermost parts of the earth.

In 1948—you are the 60th generation of Christians unto whom is committed the joy of giving the Good News of Christ to the world. In our troubled world—Christ is still the hope. The fulfilment of that hope to suffering and sin sick humanity rests with us. “Christ in you, the hope of glory.”

Your Mission Board earnestly urges the Sunday schools and churches of the Southern Convention to make a liberal, sacrificial Easter offering for missions.

Easter offering envelopes for the annual mission offering are being mailed to pastors and Sunday school superintendents. Please distribute these to your people, urging them to present the offerings on Easter Sunday, if possible.

The Easter offering for missions will go to help fulfill our pledge of $10,000 annually to our Lord and to our ambassadors in His name in Shao-wu, China, where Richard and Dorothy Jackson, Dr. Edward Riggs, and Miss Frances Whitaker are giving their all to share “the House of Glory” with the two millions of people there who need Him.

The Easter offering for missions will go also to the general work of the Mission Board as it seeks on your behalf to support the World Mission of Jesus Christ—at home and abroad.

Let us give generously and let us urge others to give generously.

Please send the Easter offering for missions through your church or Sunday school, or directly to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., for the Mission Board.

Faithfully yours,
THE MISSION BOARD,
H. S. Hardeastle, Chairman.
Wm. T. Scott, Executive Sec’y.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH,
PORTSMOUTH, VA.

It is always interesting to observe the unique differences between churches of our communion.

The First Church, Portsmouth, has a story unique and as different as can be imagined. Recent months and years tell of vast variations and contrasts of activities and expenditures interest and well being of the church.

A downtown church, regardless of what city it may happen to be in, has its problems; it is just a matter of finding the pattern to be followed. Then to give constant and patient service in working it out.

When a building has reached an age, it will demand repairs of a kind. If there are stained glass windows, and they happen to be large, the drive of weather, the season’s heat and cold will over a given period compel expenditure. If the building lot should be wet (as tidewater areas are apt to be) it will probably mean water in the basement. Woodwork, walls and floors all make their demands upon the exchequer of the church. Such things have cried out for attention in recent months.

There are years when the heating plant gives cause for worry and expense, and so often sizeable sums come knocking at the door when they are most unwelcome visitors.

The First Church has shown great courage in the manner in which has met and handled these different obligations. In 1946 the main auditorium was retinted, the lead-light windows repaired and the woodwork in general retinted at a cost of $2,535. In 1947 the basement was waterproofed, the roof repaired, much electrical work done, new iron railings were installed at the entrances of the church, a new electrical sign board placed on the corner of the building, the floors of the Sunday school were refinished, work was also done on the Primary room and much of the Sunday school room as well as the passage ways at rear, new chairs were purchased and altogether a cost of $1,230 incurred.

Furthermore, a new oilburner was installed and the kitchen thoroughly modernized with new cabinets and complete lighting system at a cost of $915.

In stating these items certain names come to mind, but it should be stated that the men and women of the church have shown a great loyalty and an untiring devotion in their united effort to complete these fine pieces of work.

When the new pastor came from New York State last June to take the pastorate, it seemed wise to purchase a parsonage. This was extremely difficult in that houses were not on the market, with but few exceptions. The committee on parsonage kept at it until a splendid home adapted to the needs of the church was founded on a large lot at 117 Greenway Drive. Thirteen thousand dollars for a parsonage in normal times is a fabulous sum, but in 1947 such was not the case, consequently there was much enthusiasm in this choice, and everyone is happy about it. The work of financing the new involvement was immediately started, a parsonage fund which had grown to $3,000 was used as down payment.

The Ladies Aid of First Church is divided into three groups—the Alice Petit Circle, the Fannie Revere Circle and the Holland Circle. The ladies of these groups are the finest workers that could be found in any church. For a long they had dreamed of a parsonage and they had worked for it, now the dream is a reality. In a truly characteristic way these ladies have faced the responsibility and are raising $100 almost every month, with a view to paying off the indebtedness on the new parsonage. Great success has followed the united efforts of these ladies as they have gone

EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE.

We are approaching the eleventh hour in our Convention-wide Evangelistic Crusade. Those who enter the Master's vineyard even now may render valuable service and earn divine compensation. But there is no time to lose.

"Arise," said the Master to his drowsy disciples, "let us be going. He that betrayeth me is at hand." Aggressive foes of the higher life beset us within and without. This is the time for action, not for loitering in the market place. God forbid that we should be recreant to our duty in this hour of greatest opportunity.

It is so easy to take our churches for granted and coast on the spiritual momentum of our forbears. One correspondent writes: "I feel sometimes that the younger generations know too little of the life of our early ministers and of the hardships they endured in order to preach the gospel and establish churches." Our vaunted pronouncements on evangelism are no more than dust and ashes if they are unaccompanied by our arduous and concerted efforts. The plan outlined for our crusade, if faithfully adhered to by every church, will bring joy to the participants and strength to the Kingdom. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

CONSUMMATION or CONSTERNATION.

Our denomination and our generation have within their grasp a consummation devoutly to be desired; namely, the union of two major Protestant bodies. Others have lived, dreamed and labored for such a realization, but, like Moses, have not been permitted to enter the land of promise. "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that without us they should not be made perfect." We may say with St. Paul: "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. . . . For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."

That there are difficulties and problems incident to this union, no one need minimize nor overlook. Only the naive would make such a claim. The belabored differences in our church polity, national background and social customs are really tests of our mountain-removing faith. If this union, with all its bristling and challenging difficulties, succeeds, then all other denominations standing timidly on the threshold of church union may take courage. Every hesitant and stammering denominational suitor may blurt out his pent-up proposal with the assurance that church union can succeed.

When some of our spies return from E and R territory with the report of giants, let us not forget that there is a different and more realistic report, even though it be a minority one. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? . . . Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us."

UNITED CHRISTENDOM.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church has called on the Protestant denominations to appoint representatives to draft a "Plan of Union" for American Protestantism, including a common ministry, and common missionary efforts.

The statement appeared in an article by Bishop Oxnam in the March issue of "Christendom," an ecumenical review of the American Committee for the World Council of Churches. Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Secretary of the Council, characterized the article as "the most forthright call to organic church union made by a major American church leader in the last decade."

Scoring the present "interminable discussion" of the details of church union, Bishop Oxnam called for "decisions of grand strategy" and declared that "our laity and our clergy desire union" and that representatives working out the Plan of Union should work "under basic instructions to achieve union."

Bishop Oxnam claimed that "the union of American Christianity would electrify the world and accelerate the trends toward union on every continent."

Noting that at present the "Roman Catholic Church refuses even to share in cooperative religious services," Bishop Oxnam stated that the "first steps toward union must be taken by the Protestant Communions." But he expressed the conviction that a union of Protestants and Orthodox churches would "enable non-Roman Christianity and Roman Christianity to work together for the eventual unity of all Christendom."

JOURNALISM and MISSIONS

An ever-growing number of China's college students are planning journalistic careers, according to James Y. Chiang, chairman of the journalism department at Congregational-supported Yenching University in Peiping. In a statement by the United Board for Christian Colleges in China, Mr. Chiang reports increased interest in this subject among students registered in the current session. He points out that many of China's foremost newspapermen who today head Chinese news agencies in the important capitals of the world owe their careers to the journalism education they received at mission-supported Yenching, one of the thirteen Christian colleges in China.

Among the many contributions these Yenching alumni, trained in the methods of a democratic press, have made to the life of modern China, Mr. Chiang states, has been the "influence they have had on the development of Chinese newspapers and the molding of Chinese public opinion on world affairs."

The Union: Pro or Con?

By DR. A. T. B. HAINES
Tarrenton, Penna.

"Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth. . . . He that is not with me, is against me."—St. Luke 11:17-23.

The Gospel for the third Sunday in Lent contains two timely references concerning the effects of division and the necessity of deciding where we stand. We know, through history and by contemporary facts what division has cost the people of the old world, and most sane people are determined that it shall not happen here!

We know—or ought to know—that we owe as much devotion to unity in the Church as in the State. Unless we are blind, deaf, and dumb, we know that division has done more than anything else to impair the effective witness of the Christian Church. We pray constantly for the coming of God's Kingdom here on earth, but we have failed ignominiously in our work on its behalf.

We have been perpetuating divisions largely based on past situations which have no relevancy to the present, oblivious to the fact that the ideological battle of this age is not between one set of Christians and another, but between Christianity on the one hand, and sheer paganism on the other. Christians must all pull together or ultimately perish from the earth. Our great need is to strengthen our forces here at home and in our own very lives or else we shall presently have little Christi-

Injudicious remarks in the presence of spies have led in times of war to the loss of thousands of lives. Injudicious remarks and carping criticisms of religion often result in destroying the faith of those whose hold on it is weak, and prompt the spiritually immature to relinquish all attempts to practice their faith. Desolation and failure are inevitable results of division. "Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation and a house divided against a house falleth." We have it on our Lord's authority, and the sorry spectacle of the world around us confirms this truth!

During the late war, it became impossible for nations to be really neutral, and nation after nation had to make up its mind where it stood. It is equally impossible to be neutral in the war against the axis of evil. Just as every citizen had to pitch in and "do his bit" to win the last war, so every Christian must take positive action in the war against sin. Jesus prayed that his followers might be one in this war, and that their unity should be so obvious that the world would notice it, and believe. Each one of us must take a definite stand in this matter of unity. We cannot be neutral. We cannot say, as I heard one minister say "I don't care which way it goes." We are either for or against the unity of Christ's Church. "He that is not with me is against me." We have to decide and be ready to stand up and be counted.

It is appropriate that this reminder should be brought to us this Lent, just before we vote on the matter of the proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and Evangelical and Reformed Church. For years this matter has been under discussion. Now comes the crucial test. There are many arguments pro and con, and they should be given full consideration, but on the general issue of Christian unity, there can be no doubt as to where those who follow the mind of Christ as he has revealed it, must take their stand.

The merger of the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church will not completely solve the problem of a United Christendom, but it will be a step in the right direction, an encouragement, and a pattern that others may follow. Congregationalists may take pride in that they have always been in the vanguard of movements toward unity. The coming together of the original Congregational group and the great Christian Church was one such movement, and the merging of the Evangelical Protestants with our Reformed Church was another. Now we are asked to consider a further step and there is evidence that, by and large, a majority in both parties to the projected merger are in favor of it.

It is noteworthy that almost every objection raised against this new merger was also raised against the preceding successful mergers, and even the opponents of this union are careful to state that they are not really opposed to Christian union, but only to certain details of the present proposal. Into these details I shall not enter at length. You have before you the Basis of Union together with arguments against the proposal and their rebuttal by qualified leaders.

Let me remind you that if the million odd Congregationalists merge with the several hundred thousands in the Evangelical and Reformed Church, we shall then have a representative body of two million Christians united for action. Will anybody presume to say that this would not be to the good? Both the parties to the union are descendants of the Reformers: both are democratically organized so that their members enjoy every legitimate Christian freedom: both hold to a common faith and a common purpose. There is absolutely nothing in their faith or polity to justify continued separation. Does any sincere Christian who approaches the matter from the point of view expressed by our Lord need to know more?

Among the major objections raised is the loss of the name "Congregational", or "Christian." One is tempted to ask "What's in a name?" when the practice of the United Church remains congregational. "United Church of Christ" is a good name indicative of a purpose in accord with our Lord's will for His Church, and suggesting a readiness to extend the hands of fellowship to all other Christians.

Others talk of a loss of freedom, but our own leaders and those of the uniting church assert, as does the Basis of Union, that final authority will remain in the local church, and that is the ultimate freedom. Moreover our own State Superintendent and the President of the Board of Trustees have written and told us that neither our local Conference nor our Association will be affected by the Union so far as functioning and autonomy are concerned.

As for those who argue that the Constitution of the new church should be drawn up before the union, they would, I think, hardly suggest that a bride and groom should sit down and draw up regulations for their future life together before marriage. Partners to such a union develop their plan of living together as they live and grow in mutual affection and understanding.

Actually the Basis of Union is the preliminary constitution, and will be implemented or amended as the contracting parties find it necessary. That is a fair and a normal way of procedure.

In material things, it is explicitly stated that every local church will continue to hold and operate its own property and money, and all trust funds are duly protected; while in the realm of faith, the statement of agreement follows the declared position of the Congregational Churches. The Apostolic Creeds when used, are

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I shall never forget the tramps across the fields, into the forests, and out again as I used to walk as a child to school. The crooked little, path, along a hedge-row, across a field—brown and seer with winter—and into a body of woods of oak, hickory, and pine, led at last to the school house. Often there were others with whom I walked, brothers or neighbors, but frequently I walked it alone. Except I was not ever alone, for if it were not the multiplication table, it was a page of spelling, or The Spreading Chestnut Tree or The Charge of the Light Brigade.

What good times a fellow had then! You could actually see the seasons come and go! Early fall swiftly changed to late fall, then winter. They were two of my favorite seasons. The singing of the insects, the blooming of wild flowers, or weeds, as I called them then, and the coloring of the leaves—well, something simply leaped up in me and I was glad! But winter, what a delight that was! Tall giant trees pointing their majestic branches into the bright, cold sky, as the wind whistled a merry tune, and the smell of burning oak and hickory came from the chimneys of the homes of many kind neighbors. Have you ever searched amongst the thick coat of leaves beneath a giant limber-twig apple tree and found a few apples as you hurried hungrily home from school? Well, then you know how it feels to find a little fortune!

But the small streams were so fresh and friendly and full of frolic in the winter, or late fall, before they froze over. And the oak leaves made such a fragrant odor raining down into these friendly little brooklets and almost hiding them at places. I have had the joy of watching a faithful milk cow drink water from such a brook in such a season when she would have to press her mouth against the leaves. What hundreds of things there were to interest the mind and heart of a boy in those wintry school days!

What I really meant to tell you, however, was that I was taught a religious interpretation of these things. I believed as I was taught that it was God's world. Home and church were a part of the regular background for all the learning of those happy days. The minister was my personal friend, and the Sunday school teacher was just as much of my program as the public school teacher. I am glad it was like that. I see so much now to make me happy when the world is all tied up with its problems, and I have a sort of short cut across the fields to the goodness and gentleness of God. I can never forget the beautiful psalms I learned in those days, and it is hard now for me to memorize any other. There was some sense to the words—"He leadeth me in the paths . . .," and to those beautiful lines, "The heavens declare the glory of God." Every instrument of helpfulness a person can give a little child will serve him in such good stead for such a long time.

GETHSEMANE.

By Robert Armster Whitten.

Out from the scene in the upper room,
Into the garden of prayer;
Facing Calvary, death, and the tomb,
And my sin was His sorrow there.

Dark was the night and heavy His load,
The burden Jesus bore there for me;
Piercing and deep the scars of sin's goad
Which He suffered to make men free.

The forces of evil combined in the plan,
To put Him to death at all cost.
His sacrifice purchased Salvation for man,
Won back the erring and lost.

He bore it alone! Gethsemane's hour!
He prayed, "Not my will—but Thine."
His Father endued Him with heavenly power,
This wonderful Saviour of mine.

HAW RIVER CHURCH.

The church completed its new parsonage last October. The parsonage is located on Highway No. 62 one mile from the church, on a lot donated to the church by Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wilson. The house is a six-room brick veneer, plastered on the inside and furnished by the church. The people of our Haw River Church are to be commended for their work in raising the money and building a fine home for their pastor. The cost of the parsonage was a little more than $10,000, with a balance due in the form of a loan of $4,000.

Last summer the church was painted on the outside. The money for painting was raised by the Young Men's Bible Class, and with the help of other classes in the church.

A kitchen has been installed in the church, mostly by the Pilgrim Fellowship, and with the help of the Men-of-the-Church who put running hot and cold water in the kitchen. The kitchen has been useful to different organizations who choose to meet in the basement of the church. The Men-of-the-Church meet once a month in the church for business and a social.

The Pilgrim Fellowship has undertaken a worthwhile project which will add beauty to the church and to the worship services. The project is to buy a new Hammond organ. This is a big job for about a dozen boys and girls most of whom are in high school. They are willing to work and I am confident that they will raise the money for the organ.

The Haw River Church went on a full-time program in 1944. They proposed to pay the pastor $1,200. Some people were cynical and said that the church could not do it. There are only about 150 members, most of whom are mill workers or small farmers. But they have done it and besides they have built a parsonage, painted the basement and installed venetian blinds and a kitchen, painted the church on the outside, bought a piano for the Young People's Department of the Sunday school, purchased a bulletin board for the outside, bought a mimeograph machine and have bulletins for the morning service, and raised the pastor's salary to $1,800.

A new communion table was donated to the church by the Wilkins family in memory of Miss Ida Wilkins. A baptismal font was a gift to the church by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Blue in memory of Miss Mary Emma Thomas and Miss Mary Ann Thomas.

The choir has been organized and has weekly rehearsals under the direction of a paid music instructor. There are many more things that need doing so that the church will be adequately prepared to meet the needs of the community. But this letter will show that we have been busy and also the pastor's appreciation to the members for their fine spirit of co-operation.

STATEMENT ON SUPREME COURT DECISION IN McCOLLUM- CHAMPAIGNE CASE.

By DR. ROY G. ROSS, General Sec'y,
International Council of Religious Education.

The United States Supreme Court has spoken in the Champaign Case. Its decisions should and must be respected by conformity to both the spirit and letter of its interpretation of the law.

The decision constitutes a great blow to week-day religious education. Even more serious is its indication of a changing government attitude toward religion. The decision helps to clarify the implications of the first and fourteenth amendments for numerous specific practices, some of which are cherished by our American people while others have been of doubtful value.

The court's majority opinion appears to leave in doubt the validity of the released time principle, that is, excusing pupils during school hours for religious instruction outside the school building. However, the supplementary statement in which it was reported that four of the justices concurred indicated that this court decision was not intended to invalidate this principle in all cases while a fifth justice dissented from the opinion because he feared that it would have this affect. Thus, it would seem that a majority of the justices clearly did not intend and would not approve invalidation of the released time principle.

The decision will require drastic readjustment of existing practices by week-day schools which in the past have been allowed to use public school property as have other community organizations. This will be most serious for rural communities where church buildings are not in close proximity to public buildings. However, these adjustments can be made if our American people fully realize the indispensable place of religion in our American culture.

The most serious aspect of the decision is the evidence which it presents of a shift in government policy from an attitude of friendliness, encouragement, and helpful cooperation toward a position of neutrality if not positive disinterest. This is not in keeping with our American tradition. Neither do I believe that this position was the intention of those honored leaders who framed the first and fourteenth amendments of our constitution. A strict application of the decision would make illegal many practices which have persisted since the founding of our nation.

The official policy of the International Council of Religious Education in the light of this decision remains to be determined. Certainly it will include full compliance with the law as the Council advises the 3,000 communities with school enrolling over 2,000,000 students, these schools now located in 46 states. It is obvious that this will mean the discontinuance of use of public school buildings for religious classes as is now the practice of 40 per cent of these communities. We hope, however, that most of these communities will be able to readjust their procedures so that they can continue religious classes off of school premises. The decision will also mean the discontinuance of certain other practices which have been followed by a small minority of week-day systems contrary to the advice of the International Council, including (a) registration of week-day classes in public school buildings, (b) supervision of classes by public school authorities, and (c) entering of grades for religious classes on public school report cards.

It is my hope that our Protestant Church forces working together in the International Council will take three steps:

First—That the churches will seek further clarification of the law with respect to the released time principle. The Supreme Court opinion does not seem to clarify this issue though it appears inconceivable that the court would deny the right of public schools and churches to so arrange their schedules as to provide to each an adequate opportunity to exercise its legal functions.

Second—That the churches will help week-day schools to adapt existing week-day systems so that they will be brought fully within the law as interpreted by this and other decisions of the Supreme Court.

Third—That the churches will give attention to the increasing secularism which seems to me to be augmented by this latest decision of the court regardless of its intention and that it will take steps to obtain laws which will make constitutionally possible the wholehearted cooperation of church and state in the pursuance of their respective functions.

Week-day religious education on released time has been developed by the churches with the whole-hearted cooperation of many public school leaders because of a common desire to stem the tide of secularism which threatens the religious foundations of American life. It is true that at times leaders of a community have unwisely embarrassed public school authorities by exceeding their legal rights in developing such a program. These instances, of course, are to be deplored.

However, thousands of public educators are as concerned as religious leaders for the spiritual welfare of American youth. They see the necessity of a close relationship between public and religious education in preparing the citizenry for a democratic nation. This decision seems to deny the right of such cooperation. Such a denial has serious implications for the future.

The American people of all religious faiths should be aroused to a fuller realization of the trends in our American life which seem to be further crowding religion out of a central place in our culture. If a united stand against these trends can be accomplished, the decision will serve a good purpose.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE W.N.C. CONFERENCE.

Following are the Standing Committees of the Western North Carolina Conference for 1947-48:

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS

American Board Mission,
Foochow, Fukien, China,
March 3, 1948.

Dear Friends:

Life has settled back to normal. Schools are getting started after the biggest holiday of the Chinese year. February 10 was the China New Year and for weeks previous to that day there was an air of happy expectancy as people bought gifts, new clothes, extra foodstuffs, and prepared their homes and businesses for the big event. In fact, I felt more "Christ-massy" then than I did in December, as I saw shops with large supplies of goods for sale and streets jammed with buyers and sellers.

New Year's Eve was the time for families to be together. That day the last-minute shoppers found prices doubled and tripled; for everyone knew the next three days there would be no place to buy, and many shops would even be closed a week. By evening the boards were up (most shops, having no windows nor doors, have a board "wall" facing the street. This is taken down every morning and put up again at night), and the only signs of life in the street were the dim slits of light filtering through the cracks and the faint sounds of families within preparing the New Year feast.

The quiet of the night was constantly being shattered by bursts of firecrackers. The dark hours of early morning and the clear new day found no let-up in the noise, rather an increase, as children and grown-ups came out of their homes to welcome the New Year.

Timothy Chang's family had very thoughtfully invited us to share their New Year's Eve feast with them. Frances' nurse friend, Mrs. Kao, also wanted us; so Ed and Frances went to her home and Dick and I went to the Changs'. Two huge red candles in lovely Chinese holders were on the table, and firecrackers were set off just before we ate. Though the food was special feast food, it was not served feast-fashion; for this was a family meal. Usually there are no guests, just members of the family who have come together, often from far places. Yahua Chang told us that many of the non-Christians would not be having their feast 'til around midnight. Why? Because the ancestors must first be served. The food is partly prepared by early evening and spread out for the ancestors to "eat." Then the food, of which only the "spirit" has been eaten, of course, is taken up, the last bit of cooking and mixing and seasoning is done, and the living family partakes of the feast.

During our meal with the Changs my thoughts went into the room next to us, to the mother of this fine Christian family, confined to her bed by a long illness. Would the new year bring her health? She is such a capable Christian worker, she means much to the Shaowu work. And her son, Timothy, would this thirty-seventh year of China's Republic find him started on his American studies for the ministry? Then as we sampled one delicious dish after another (there were sixteen in all, so we couldn't eat much of any one), I thought of the homes all over China that were unable to celebrate their New Year in such a happy fashion.

You folks have probably read in Ed Rigg's letter about all the feasting we had between New Year and the day of our leaving Shaowu. Some of the feasts were honoring a bride who had come to be with her husband's people; so there were many gala occasions. Though we enjoyed the food and fellowship, thoughts about the

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Miss Frankye Marshall was the leader for the union service of the churches in Walnut Cove on the World Day of Prayer.

—o—

The Woman's Board of the Southern Convention met in Henderson, N. C., Saturday, March 13, for a business meeting. Plans for the School of Missions and projects for next year will be discussed.

—o—

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman was hostess to a luncheon for several members of the Convention Woman's Board at her home recently. Mrs. O. H. Paris, Convention President, told the group of her recent trip to the Midwinter Meetings at Grand Rapids.

—o—

Long's Chapel Missionary Society has just been reorganized with the following officers: Mrs. H. A. Jeffreys, president; Mrs. Elmer Massey, acting secretary. Among other committees appointed was a committee to keep the church clean and to supply flowers.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER IN THE VALLEY.

Some interesting reports have come from the Valley Conference on the World Day of Prayer observance.

A most unusual word comes from Rev. and Mrs. Clyde Koon in the account of the way in which their group observed World Day of Prayer. Much time and preparation had been given to a program in which women from each church in the group were to take apart. The services were well advertised but when the day came the ground was covered with snow and the weather, almost a blizzard, was unusual, even for this section. Mr. Koon's parish covers a radius of many miles, but his people came. One hundred forty-eight of them gathered at Bethlehem for the special service. There was a most inspiring worship service and a fine spirit of fellowship. Both Rev. and Mrs. Koon felt most gratified at the result of a united effort on the part of the group to which they have most recently given themselves in service. We are happy with them for this fine report.

To date I have not heard from other groups except Winchester. Our own local society ordered the suggested film strips and had the Federated Council of Church Women as our guests for the showing on the Wednesday preceding the World Day of Prayer. The group was most appreciative and we felt that we had some contribution toward "working together" with Christian women of other denominations.

The World Day of Prayer was sponsored by the united group of which our women are a part. The service was held in the First Baptist Church. The speaker, Mrs. John Robertson, a Methodist of Richmond, brought a most inspiring message on "Personal Prayer." The service was largely attended, in fact, the best I have seen in Winchester. Our own denomination was well represented and I believe we all left the service with the feeling that we had truly worshipped and been richly blessed.

expense of such feasts and about the world's hungry millions always lessened our pleasure.

During the holiday season there were daily worship services at East Gate or South Gate or the hospital. That first one at East Gate on New Year's Day seemed to typify the press of China's ancient custom and modern materialism on Christianity. If you could worship in a community playground Saturday with all the noise of play plus a children's band nearby, you could have worshipped there at East Gate with us.

The fine day had brought everyone out in the street to celebrate; some children and young men had gathered in an impromptu band of cymbals, gongs, drums, and voices. There is no way to shut the noise out of the church; and indeed, the congregation was not without its own little disturbances. I was reminded of the efforts in American city churches to combat noise; not all of it is from the street, either! However, the service had its moments. The very presence of so many worshippers clean and shining, come to seek a Presence this first day of New Year was an inspiration to all.

The fourth service of the week was led by women, for that was the World

Day of Prayer. You folks were no doubt asleep as I was making my talk to that congregation. But we were thinking of you, knowing that later, while we slept, you, too, would be remembering us. It was good for us around the world to think again of all the great meanings embodied in our Lord's Prayer. And it was good for Chinese Christians to have at their New Year such an opportunity to unite in prayer with Christians of many lands and races.

Now Dick and I are looking forward to a private little new beginning of our own. Around Easter time we shall become more of a real family. With the new life God is giving us, the words "Christian home" will take on new meaning and will be a new challenge for us. For you of the Southern Convention we feel sure Easter will bring the increase in number and spirit which your Evangelistic Crusade promises. Dick joins me in wishing for you all, inspiration from this Easter season and renewed faith that Christ has overcome the world—yes, even this dark despairing world of the Atomic Age.

Your workers in China,

Thelma Fonville was made vice-president and chairman of the program committee. I am sure the programs will be interesting and inspiring.

A few of the young people got busy and secured fifteen subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The young people plan to reorganize the Pilgrim Fellowship right away.

The men have cut and hauled logs to the sawmill, sawed lumber and erected a double-garage at the parsonage. One side of which will be enclosed for storage purposes.

The young people are very active in the Belew Creek Pilgrim Fellowship. They have raised funds and purchased six dozen hymn books, and have almost half enough funds in hand to purchase a new piano. The women of the church plan to reorganize the Missionary Society right away.

We are planning a special Easter service March 28, when we are expecting to take in several members. Three deacons have been recently elected and installed.

With the coming of pretty weather we are expecting great increases in the Sunday schools.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

Now that spring is on the way, almost here—from my window, the very same one at which I sat and saw the snow, I now see furred catkins on the pussy willow and jonquils nearly ready for blooming. Everywhere boys and girls are out—visiting, flying kites and sharing. I want to share with you some letters and news.

Mrs. W. E. Wisseman suggested that leaders of children's work might share their activities with us. Mrs. D. M. Estes of Durham, N. C., writes that the juniors there are working with Mrs. Arnis Glenn. Once a month they study about missions and have a jar for extra money to send abroad. Two interesting things she wrote about were their custom of sending old papers to the country home, hospitals and mission centers, and of their sending cancelled stamps to the National Sanatorium in Denver, Colo., where the dye is extracted and sold. The money made from the sale of the dye is used to give care for tubercular patients.

A long letter from Mrs. E. H. Stephenson in Suffolk tells of good work being done there. She writes that missionary education is promoted through the Sunday School and that their juniors have been studying The Bible Around the World. At Christmas the boys and girls presented a program with stories, songs and a movie. Afterward they received an offering and used this for the Christmas remembrance of a girl at our Orphanage whom they have "adopted." Soon they will be giving a play "Famous Missionaries Who Have Taken the Bible to Other Lands" and they will invite their parents. Wouldn't you like to see it? I would! Such good activities make us happy. Won't you share yours?

Now I want to share a letter that came to me from Defiance, Ohio. It was written by Mrs. T. H. Peters whose father and husband were Christian ministers. Mrs. Peters wrote to tell me about Joseph Thomas, "The White Pilgrim." In her childhood home there was a portrait of him and it fitted the description that I gave of him. Her father knew the Rev. John Ellis, who wrote the commemorative poem about the Pilgrim.

Mrs. Peters writes: "One of Joseph Thomas' preaching places was in my grandfather's home. He made frequent trips through central Ohio, and on one of these trips, the Pilgrim's white overcoat was badly worn and thin. My grandmother made him a coat using a new white wool blanket which had a very narrow colored border. In the front facing of the coat a few of the colored threads showed. When the White Pilgrim saw it, he said, 'Thank you, it is very nice, but I cannot use it with the color.' Then my grandmother removed the threads with some trouble!" How thrilling to hear from Mrs. Peters this incident in the life of a great man.

Thanks to all of these people who have written, and an invitation to all.

HELP THEM TO GROW UP.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Little Richard arrived this morning!" That was the joyous announcement my neighbor, Mr. Handley, made to me a little after sunrise one morning, ten years ago, when his first child was born. He did not say, "Our baby has come," or "We have a new baby at our house;" he spoke of the new baby as an individual. From that time to this, Richard's father and mother have treated the boy as a person who would one day make important decisions.

Richard Handley has had devoted care, but with it he has been permitted to develop self-reliance and self-control. Never have I seen his parents do anything for him that the child should have done for himself. I remember Richard's pride of achievement when he first was able to put on all of his clothes and to fasten them up himself. He was still slow and awkward at tying his shoes, but tie them he did, with a great deal of huffing and puffing—he was a plump little fellow!

Richard's younger brother, James, and his little sister, Rosalie, are likewise capable of doing things for themselves.

One evening I went over to thank Mrs. Handley for a bouquet of roses that she had sent me. The three were with their father in the garden, where each of the children has the entire care of a small plot of ground of his own.

I smiled as I looked out at the busy little figures and said to my hostess, "It's a great satisfaction to see how self-reliant your children are. Many of the boys and girls who come to the children's library, where I work, seem unable to make any decisions without their parents, even in the matter of a choice of books."

"I'm glad you feel we have accomplished something in that direction," Mrs. Handley replied. "Hal and I were school teachers before our marriage, you know, and both of us were amazed at the extent to which our pupils depended on their parents—not my little fourth-graders only, but also the senior high school students who were in Hal's science classes.

"Some of the parents insisted on having their children study their lessons with them," she continued. "Some mapped out their children's complete schedules without consulting the children's individual aptitudes and interest. Many denied their boys and girls any opportunity to learn to handle money.

"Hal told me that he sometimes felt like asking those parents if they expected to guide their sons and daughters through adulthood to old age. They certainly were not preparing them to take on the responsibilities of places of their own in the world.

"After Richard came to us, we tried to think ahead and to picture him as he would be in years to come, when Hal and I would no longer be at his side to give him directions and help. We had both witnessed demonstrations of the fact that people who depend too much on others are not as happy as those who can think and act for themselves. This forward-looking attitude did not prevent us from seeing to it that our boy enjoyed and profited by the present. We know well that each level of development is a precious section of the complete lifetime.

"It was easier to keep from giving too much help to our first-born than it has been to avoid doing so for the other two children. Richard has always been a practical lad, while James is more of a dreamer. Then, too, Richard was so fond and proud of his little brother that he wanted to do everything for James. We had to explain to Richard why James must learn to dress and feed himself and to put his own toys away.

"As to Rosalie, Hal and I were both captivated by her charms the minute we first saw her. She was such a dear little doll that it took a big stretch of imagination to picture her as a capable young woman; but that is exactly what we want her to

MISSIONARY ADVANCE.

The first general meeting of foreign mission boards to consider what promises to be the most comprehensive set of plans yet devised by Protestantism for an overseas missions program took place recently at Buck Hill Falls, Pa.

As outlined by Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, general secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference, the Advance Program is based on the conviction that "the structure for permanent peace can be built only upon the foundation of world-wide spiritual unity, which can resolve the world's conflict of economic interest in the spirit of good will; and that the surest way to attain that spiritual unity is faith in God through Christ, and so thoroughly 'in Christ' that his commandment to love one another is fulfilled in all human relations."

Turning to details of the Advance Program itself, Dr. Fairfield said it would be wrong to consider them as the rigid blueprints of a "master plan" to which foreign mission boards must conform. The Advance Program is more accurately to be regarded as a series of guideposts to assist mission boards to chart an effective course of Christian action overseas. Here are some of the most important "guide posts" that bear watching as the Advance Program swings into action.

1. Rural Rehabilitation and Training.—Since the majority of Christians in foreign countries, with the exception of those in Japan, live in rural villages and communities, the Advance Program calls for a more highly concentrated rural Christian ministry. It seeks to replace the piecemeal system of "a little health work here, a bit of agriculture there, a homes program somewhere else," with a broad approach to rural problems, including rural family and home relationships, occupational interest, technical agriculture, and spiritual welfare.

2. Modern Educational Methods.—Based on the belief that modern techniques for mass education should be adopted for missionary use, the Advance Program stresses the need for the development of audio-visual aids. This includes motion pictures, display materials, graphic arts, radio and recording station, and other mass media. How these aids can be most effectively used is being explored by a three-man deputation, now on a three months' tour-round-the-world flight.

3. Cooperative Approach to Medical Work.—Recognizing medicine as an integral part of the Christian ministry, the Advance Program proposes a "strengthening of denominational medical work along with a cooperative approach to future medical planning in the mission field." Specifically, the Advance calls for increased cooperation in medical and nurses education; public health (an undeveloped phase of the Christian medical program), special health projects, such as mass chest X-ray units, traveling high power insect eradication units, and sanitary construction units; and the establishment of specialized institutions, such as tuberculosis sanatoria, leprosaria, and mental hospitals.

4. Bible Distribution.—Haunted by reports that Bibles in Korea and Japan are being purchased on the black market, the Advance Program, through the American Bible Society, urges immediate action to help meet the unprecedented demand. The spiritual hunger for the Bible, especially in Japan and Germany, matches the physical hunger for food. Though nearly a million and a half Testaments have been issued in two years, government officials urge no reduction in Japanese scriptures.

5. Emphasis on Family Life as Central Unit of Christianity.—Since, in non-Christian lands, the Christian home is Exhibit A for the Christian religion, the Advance Program lays special emphasis on the rooting of home and family life in Christian principles. This calls for an increase in high school and college courses dealing with human relations, domestic science, psychology, home economics, home nursing and child care, together with a development of day nurseries, mother's clinics, recreation centers, and suitable books and play materials.

6. Relief and Rehabilitation.—Through the agency of Church World Service, the Advance Program advocates continued relief to war-torn countries. While food, clothing, and shelter for immediate relief needs will have top priority, projects for long-range rehabilitation of underprivileged people are being considered. These would include village industries, child welfare centers for war orphans, and direct financial assistance to church-sponsored institutions.

7. Christian University for Japan.—By unanimous vote, the Conference called for speedy establishment of a Christian University in Japan. The University is urgently needed to meet the unparalleled opportunity existing in Japan for the growth of Christian leadership through higher education. Requests by the University Committee asked for a contribution of one million dollars from foreign mission boards, with an additional 14 million to be raised through outside Christian sources.

8. Literacy Promotion.—Further extension of the mass education methods initiated by Dr. Frank Laubach are contemplated in the Advance Program. It recommends the establishment of Literacy Committees which will be responsible for the recruiting and training of teachers. They will maintain a tested list of the most-used words in the languages involved and prepare charts, primers, and follow-up literature.

9. Missionary Personnel to be Increased.—While no figures have been set on the number of missionaries needed to implement the Advance Program, indications are that a vastly accelerated rate of recruitment and training is necessary. The Japan Committee recommended a minimum of over 300 more missionaries in the next five years; the Committee on Rural Work estimated that 1,000 agricultural missionaries will be needed in the next ten years with 300 each to be sent to Japan, China, and India, and 50 each to Korea and the Philippines. There is also a need for radio experts, doctors, journalists, teachers, ministers, and chemists. Better training and more careful testing to determine candidates' suitability for mission work is also contemplated.

The Advance Program as presented by the Committee of Reference and Council at the FMC conference is next scheduled for review by the 118 participating mission boards. On June 1-3 the boards will send representatives to Columbus, Ohio, where final details of the Advance will be blueprinted for presentation at the Foreign Missions Assembly in Columbus, October 6-8.

Following the Columbus gathering, the Advance Program will be presented in 36 key cities in the United States and Canada. A conference will be held in Richmond, Virginia, October 19 and 20.

As the Advance Program moves forward, it is well to remember that the world mission of the Christian Church is to make disciples of all nations and peoples. This mission includes every effort in the United States and Canada to make our home countries really Christian, in personal life, and national policy.

The evangelistic purpose is the uniform warp upon which is woven the many-colored pattern of Christian missions today. Both the doing of "good works" and persuasion through the spoken and written word are integral parts of sharing the Christian message.

ETERNAL LIFE. (EASTER.)

LESSON XIII—MARCH 28, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: This is eternal life, that they may know thee, the only true God, and Jesus whom thou hast sent.—John 17:3.

LESSON: John 21:1-14; Colossians 3:1-4, 12-17; I John 5:11-12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 14:2-6.

The Mystery and the Miracle of Easter.

Jesus was dead. There was no doubt about that. His friends were convinced of that—they had seen Him die on the Cross. And later, some of them had taken his dead body and after hasty preparation had laid it in a new tomb in a nearby garden. His enemies made sure of it. They were taking no chances, so they made doubly sure of the fact by having a spear thrust through His side. The authorities also made sure of the fact that He was dead. Before Pilate the Roman official would release the body to His friends, he got an official report from the guard that had been detailed to perform the dirty deed, and got the assurance that the Man was dead. Jesus was dead, and that was that.

And He was buried. They put His body in a new tomb in a nearby garden. They did not want any monkey business about this thing either. They had heard Him say something about rising again the third day, and although his enemies knew, of course, that there was nothing to it, they were not going to be caught off guard, they were not going to let His friends pull a fast one on them. So they not only sealed the door of the tomb with the official Roman seal, but they had Pilate to send a company of soldiers to guard the tomb. Even though friend and foe alike knew that Jesus was dead, it might complicate matters if in some way His friends could steal the body and then report that He was alive again. So they took special pains to thwart that slick trick. It perhaps did not occur to them that His friends would have gotten cold comfort out of saying that Jesus was alive again, when they knew they had His dead body hidden away somewhere. But like a lot of smart folks, they could be plain dumb sometimes. In any event Jesus was dead, and buried, and His body was guarded by armed soldiers. That is the place to start any story of the mystery and miracle of Easter.

But this Jesus who was dead and buried, did not stay dead and buried. He came alive again from that tomb. There is no doubt about it. It is a stubborn fact of history, as well as a keystone fact of the Christian religion. The fact is attested to by the consternation of the enemies of Jesus. In their confusion they bribed the soldiers to tell the story that while they were asleep, the disciples had come and stolen away the body of Jesus. Did it never occur to them that it might be quite a serious offense for a soldier to be asleep at his post of duty? Or that, as has been said above, they could hardly expect the disciples to go about asserting that their Master was alive again from the dead, when they knew all the time where they had hidden his dead body? The enemies of Jesus knew that He was alive again from the dead.

And His friends knew it, too. Not all at once. Not as a matter of wishful thinking. Indeed, as much as they would have liked to believe it, they came to believe it, at least some of them, only after a period of skepticism and unbelief. And even after they did come to believe it, it seemed too good to be true. "They believed not for joy" says one gospel writer. But Jesus appeared to them so often, and to so many of them at one time or another, as Luke says "He showed himself alive to them by many infallible proofs for a period of forty days," that His friends knew that He was alive again. There is no other way to account for the change which came over them. There is no other way to account for the Christian Church. There is a big element, a tremendously big element of mystery and miracle in the story of Easter, many questions about the how of it. But there is no question about the fact of it. In all the maddening maze of things, and in spite of all the baffling mysteries of the Christian religion, this one thing stands sure—Jesus Christ rose again from the dead, He is alive, and is alive forevermore.

The Practical Side of Easter.

All this has a practical aspect. Paul knew that full well. For although he did devote a whole chapter in one of his letters to establishing the fact of the Resurrection, for the most part he simply took it for granted, he made it a starting point for drawing some practical conclusions. For Paul, and for John, the Resurrection was not so much an intellectual matter to be believed, as it was a spiritual experience to be appropriated. If through faith in Christ one arose in newness of life through Him, then one ought to live differently. Christ's followers were to set their affections on things above, not on the things of the earth. The power of the Risen Christ was available to them for daily living. This fact is emphasized not only at the end of the immortal fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians where, after establishing the fact of the resurrection, Paul enjoins his readers "to be steadfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Because they had new life in Christ, the believers ought to live in a new way. He repeats the same idea in the lesson for today, but he uses another figure of speech. They are to put on the new man, they are to embody and express the virtues of compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering, love and gratitude. The Spirit of Christ is to dwell in their hearts richly. Life is to take on a new quality and a new measure of fullness. Easter ought to make a difference in the way a person lives.

Eternal Life Here and Now.

Folks, at least many of them, think of eternal life in terms of the world to come. They think of it as something which they are going to have and to enjoy in the other world. They think of it as something they will get in heaven. They also think of it in terms of length, of something that merely endures forever. But Jesus did not put the emphasis here at all. While there was a future element in it, eternal life became the privilege of folks here and now. He that believed, said Jesus, already had entered into eternal life. Furthermore the important feature in eternal life was not its length or quantity, but its quality. Eternal life is a matron higher levels. It is life and life more abundantly.

This eternal life is in Jesus Christ. Indeed Jesus went so far as to say "this is eternal life," that people might know God, the only true and living God, and Jesus Christ whom God had sent. "He that hath the Son hath life." We need this emphasis anew at the Easter season. We need to discover newness of life in Jesus Christ.

THE CONGREGATIONAL LIBRARY.

By FRANCIS W. ALLEN, Librarian.

In that "ex-Athens" of America, Boston, there still can be found a few vestigial remains of the culture which flourished there some two centuries back. Though neither a vestigial remain nor two hundred years old, the Congregational Library at 14 Beacon Street does attempt to exist as a cultural service, not only for the Boston community, but also for Congregational Christians the world around.

The Congregational Library has a two-fold purpose for its existence. First it acts as an aid to ministers and lay workers by furnishing current theological, religious and related books and periodicals. Secondly, it is a repository for Congregational Christian history and the religious history of America. In this capacity it has become one of the most important of research libraries for scholars in this special field.

In the Library are some hundred and fifty thousand books, pamphlets and periodicals in every field of human knowledge, but specializing, of course, in works of value and use to the clergy and to the denomination. Among our special collections are some five hundred rare Bibles and nearly all modern translations and editions of the Book. We are proud, and we feel justly, of our traveling Bible exhibits. On the request of a minister or education director we make up Bible exhibitions for local occasions and send these exhibits to any church in the country.

Other strong fields include theology and religion, pastoral and homiletical works, church history in general and of all denominations, education including religious and education, hymnology and church architecture. We try to collect all council minutes of all local associations, thus sharing with Chicago Seminary the official records of the denomination. Many local records of discontinued and inactive churches are also deposited in the Library.

Of particular interest to members of the Southern Convention is the fact that the Congregational Library is your library, just as much so as if it were in your own study. With the exception of its rarest books and periodicals the entire resources of the Library are as close to you as the nearest letter box, the only expense involved being postage charges. The Library publishes a Quarterly Bulletin of its new accessions, with occasional special bibliographies and we will be most happy to send this Bulletin to you regularly. Just drop a card and let us know that you would like to receive it.

The Library receives requests for books and periodicals in any form the borrower desires. Some of our patrons send in a list of a hundred or more titles, specifying the number they want at a time. Others request only a single book. Either way, or any gradation between, we file the request and send the books as the borrower desires. Normal loans are for three-week periods, with renewal privileges. Generally we send no more than two current titles at a time, but there is no set limit on older titles.

In addition to this regular mail service we have a few special services designed to meet special needs. Scholarly works in foreign languages not owned by the Library may be borrowed from other research libraries and loaned to our patrons.

The Library has a series of traveling libraries for church school teach-

Finally, we offer a mail and telephone reference service for research questions. These questions often involve considerable research and may take some time, but we endeavor to supply satisfactory answers to all questions coming within the limits of our collections.

THE UNION: PRO OR CON?

in the nature of a testimony rather than a test! Congregationalists have nothing to lose and much to gain by this merger. There will be not only numerical gain, but an added strength of witness and extension of fellowship. Duplication and wasteful competition in some areas will be remedied, and, since actions speak louder than words, the United Church will be preaching unity in a way that cannot be misunderstood or denied.

What the world of today needs more than anything else is reconciliation, understanding, trust, cooperation, and fellowship between all its people. No divided Christianity will be effective in restoring unity to a dis-united world. Effective missionary work will receive constructive aid from the union movement. I happen to be the Director of a home for training adolescent boys. We are united in all the undertakings sponsored by the House, but on Sundays we are divided into small groups belonging to competing churches. This is a tragedy. If we were united at this point, our work would be helped enormously. By the same token, the present religious, cultural, and economic chaos in the world may ultimately be resolved by a global Christianity, and now is the time to take a step towards it.

I, therefore, venture not only to hope but also to pray that you will mark your ballots when they come, for the union of these two great Christian communions and I suggest that before voting, we should all consider more than anything else, the words of our Lord, the great Head of the Church, as we hear Him say: "Neither pray I for these alone but for them also who shall believe in me through their word. That they may all be one, as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they may be one in us, that the world may believe. . . . Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation, and a house divided against a house falleth. . . . He that is not with me, is against me" Solemn words, purposeful words, true words, having much greater weight than all the partisan words of men!

become, so we try to be sensible in dealing with her, too."

"You are helping all three to grow up for years of happy living," I answered. "I wish more parents would take time to look into their children's futures."

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

I hope we will soon be through building and making repairs. We are making some repairs on Johnston Hall, which has been needed for some time. The plaster in the large front room continued to fall off. We have had it put back several times, but it would fall off again.

The Chairman of the Orphanage Board suggested that we use Johns Manville glaze-coat ceiling panels, 12-inch square, or some other similar material. For twelve long months we have been trying to find it. No one had any. We tried all the lumber plants and did find one man who could buy it, but his price was so high we would not pay it. Last week a good friend in Burlington, a lumber dealer, got a car load, and let the Orphanage have what it needed at a fair price. We happened to catch a carpenter who is a fine workman, and he agreed to bring his crew of workmen and put it up for us. Except for the painting, this will put Johnston Hall in splendid shape. The walls will have to be painted to make it a finished job.

We have built a poultry house that will take care of three hundred hens, but we have no hens to go in it. We have not asked for any, because we had no place to put them. We are going to try to produce enough eggs to give the children eggs to eat. It may cost us more than we could buy them for, but we will have the satisfaction of having fresh eggs to eat. We want to ask the good women in our country churches to furnish us some hens. If you good women will get together and furnish one or two hens each, you will soon make up a coop of hens. We will be glad to pay the express and return the coop. If twenty-five church communities would do this, it would fill our poultry house and no one would be hurt. Everyone who contributed would be happy in knowing that they had a part in sitting a platter of nice fresh eggs on the breakfast table before the children. You, in your imagination, can see the happy smiles that would play on their faces. Who will send the first coop of laying hens?

We have fixed a first-class brooder house and got in two hundred biddies today. We will get more later. We want to raise several hundred pullets this year for layers next season. Don't forget that we want twenty-four coops of hens with twelve or fifteen hens in a coop. This is one of our needs now.

AN ADAPTED EVANGELISM.
Address Before International Council
By DR. GAINES S. DOBBINS.

Wrapped up in the word "evangelism" are many of the great concepts of Christianity.

The New Testament makes it clear that in the beginning evangelism did not connote a separate function but was a richly descriptive term to characterize all preaching, teaching, witnessing, whose primary purpose was to bring to me the message of salvation through Christ.

It is unfortunate that evangelism should have come to be thought of as something apart, and the evangelist as a professional specialist. The proclaiming of the gospel message is not the whole work of the church, neither is it the specialized task of a few individuals. To be sure, some can do the work of evangelizing better than others, and they should be encouraged and given every opportunity for the exercise of their special abilities. Yet no Christian, much less pastor or teacher, is exempt from the duty or cut off from the privilege of witnessing by word and life to the saving power of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and this is the heart of evangelism.

In the evangelization of children, we would make much of the influence of the home, the loving care of the church, the importance of direct teaching of Biblical truth, the weight of attendant learnings, the development of habit patterns affecting conduct and character, but in all these considerations we would keep clearly in mind the fundamental necessity of conscious personal choice of Christ and his way of life in the presence of the alternative choice of an egocentric way of life.

An adapted evangelism must take into account the winning of adolescents to Christ. Scarcely less important is the evangelistic responsibility for winning life-long committal to Christian ideals and standards and loyalty to the church and its causes. Early childhood convictions and decisions must be re-thought in the adjusting adolescent years.

An effective Christian evangelism must confront them with Christ and his gospel as the answer to all their deepest needs. Their frank response of doubt that this is true will best be met by Christ's own answer, "Come and see!"

An adapted evangelism calls imperatively for the winning of adults to Christ. A dangerous corollary of the theory that evangelism is primarily concerned with children and young people is that the evangelism of adults may become a lost art.

Adults feel the need of all that Christ has to offer far more than children. The uncertainties of life and the certainty of death impinge on them with inescapable force. The burdens of life grow heavier for the majority of adults as they grow older, and their yearning for peace and rest deepens. Their capacity for understanding the claims of Christ and their appreciation of the reasonableness of these claims and his demands and promises develop with maturity.

forward sharing in the splendid effort of annexing to the church property a home of which every one is proud.

The property portion of our finances has been heavy and will continue to be for some time. Many of our members and friends of the church have come to the rescue again and again, so that there is every reason to believe that with patient and steady effort and a united spirit we shall soon have wiped out our whole indebtedness.

The spiritual life of the church is growing, congregations have been most heartening, and a spirit of optimism is abroad, as we work together through the Lenten Season, striving for an ingathering on Easter Sunday.

Book Reviews

TOMORROW IS HERE. Kenneth Scott Latourette and William Richey Hogg. Friendship Press. $1.50.

Kenneth Latourette, noted church historian, along with one of his best students, after surveying quickly the advance of the church across the world in the "tomorrow that is here," describes this advance in terms of personalities. It centers almost wholly around ideas and men at Whitby, Ontario, seat of the International Missionary Council in the summer of 1947.

Admitting that the reader may not like the "tomorrow that is here," the authors picture it in most certain phrases. The small volume reads like the abridgment of a masterpiece, so that one wonders how much larger it might have been in the hands of writers less astute.

After telling the story of six leaders, mostly from the "younger" churches, the authors point out that only unity will make possible the final achievement of the missionary movement today. The last chapter but one gives the concrete steps by which this may come about, through evangelism, race relations, visual aids, and international relations. The final chapter tells specifically what Mr. and Mrs. Christian within the local church can do to help this world mission. This is the heart of the volume for the average reader, who having read this far will seek just these specifics that the authors give.

NO TRUMPETS BEFORE HIM. Nelia Gardner White. Westminster Press. $3.

The novel, No Trumpets Before Him received the Westminster Award for Fiction of $8,000. The book has been serialized in Saturday Evening Post and now appears in the book stores.

Nelia Gardner White is a popular writer who treats her subject in a popular manner. This story concerns itself with a young minister and his wife who are attempting to find their way and their salvation in a difficult city church. It is a good subject, and a good theme, but it has one difficulty: it is the same old story. Will no writer in our generation rise to give real meaning to a minister? Everyone should know that ministers and their wives are breathing, hating, loving, living individuals. Almost without exception the cloth is presented in a hackneyed manner.

In this case, Paul Phillips, the minister, is young, attractive and a misfit. The majority of young ministers are. Too soon out of seminary for realism and too radical for listening to advice, it takes time for them to find the way. Mr. Phillips' way is complicated by the bishop's daughter, his wife, his trustees, and his congregation. Little is said about his brother ministers.

As a prize-winning novel it will achieve wide acclaim and a great many church people will read it and nod piously that it is indeed a true study. It is filled with the common ideas that ministerial people are supposed to either champion or preach against smooth hypocrisy, class and racial distinctions. Is it necessary for all American clergymen to think alike on race, creed, bazaars, suppers and sex? No! May some good student of man arise and write a tale of the minister and his fame that will do him justice, honor and present him in a manner true to life.

Not all ministers have to face racial riots or discrimination. The majority of them concern themselves with everyday matters: babies arriving, parents not understanding their children, routine affairs, marriage, death, committees, talks, their own families. Their lives are very ordinary really, they have given themselves. What other group in contemporary America throws itself and its family upon the mercy of another group of people to receive their salaries and shelter?

Too long has there existed a "pumped-up" estimate of the American clergy. Award or no award, No Trumpets Before Him blows the same old tune. Turn the page, Maestro!

THE COMBINED GOSPELS. Russell Hubbard White. Colonial Press. 100 pp. $3.00.

This is a book that many Bible students and Bible teachers will welcome with enthusiasm, as it gives the reader the benefit of the countless hours of tiresome effort in reducing a Harmony of the Gospels into a single narration giving the Gospel Story, as found in the four Gospels, in one composite whole and with no repetition of verses. It is indeed unique in conception and in presentation. The different subjects are presented in chronological order. The book is arranged in nine parts: (1) "The Birth and Youth of Jesus," (2) "Jesus in Galilee," (3) "Jesus in Jerusalem," (4) "Jesus in and about Galilee,"

(5) "Jesus in and about Judea," (6) "The Betrayal of Jesus," (7) "The Trial of Jesus," (8) "The Crucifixion," (9) "The Resurrection."

It gives the entire New Testament without any repetition, 1,116 verses of purely duplicate material being eliminated.

No doubt many pastors will find this volume useful in reading their scripture lessons in worship services as it will make unnecessary the awkward turning of pages to find related verses. Church school teachers will find it useful in preparing their New Testament lessons. Bible readers, generally, will find that this chronological presentation of the material contained in the four Gospels, makes the material itself not only more accessible, but also more readable and more interesting.

FIVE MINUTE STORIES FROM THE BIBLE. E. Jerry Walker. Abingdon-Cokesbury. 128 pp. $1.25.

"Something different!" That will be the comment of many after reading the twenty graphic Bible stories found in this attractively edited book. The old stories here find a new presentation which lends interest to what always have been interesting in their own right. The author is a young man who has early won an enviable reputation as an author and as a radio speaker. He makes the Bible characters to live again in the uniquely told stories he has taken from the greatest story book in the world.

Sunday school principals of the Junior and Intermediate Departments will find these stories very serviceable for being read as a part of the worship program. Young People's groups and Adult Groups will find the mequally interesting.

Evangelism and the Societal Pattern

Address by Dr. J. Paul Williams, Professor, Department of the History and Religion, Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass., at the International Council of Religious Education

Evangelism in some form is essential to the church and to the nation.

As I see it there are two areas in which evangelistic efforts are essential today: one is the area of our differing personal religious convictions, the other is the effort to undergird the ethics of democracy with religious conviction.

Let me comment on each of these areas in turn. Surely most of the old-line churches need to make evangelistic efforts. Any institution which believed it had something of value to human beings could hardly avoid some type of evangelism. Large sections of our population have never had any real exposure to Christian teachings and have only the meagerist notions of what the churches stand for.

Concerning the evangelistic efforts of the churches, may I make six observations:

1. Evangelism must include adequate follow-up, that is, elaborate educational arrangements to go along with evangelism. Now if follow-up is essential, it would seem a move of dubious wisdom to do more evangelizing than we can do educating and educating is much the most expensive job.

2. Wherever educational follow-up has been successful it has generally made use of group experience. Much of the weakness of traditional evangelistic campaigns has been that decisions have been made under the influence of temporary crowds; after the evangelist has departed the crowd has disappeared and the convert has been left to shift for himself. The permanence of his decision is largely dependent on his success in finding a group with which he can share experience.

3. Evangelistic goals should be simple. The error in evangelism is not in having a simple aim, but in assuming that the attainment of the simple aim is the end of the process. Adequate Christian living is a very complex thing. To assume that a decision makes a Christian, in some deeply significant sense, of a person who has little experience of Christianity is to cheapen Christianity and to further weaken the position of the churches in our society.

4. It will probably be more difficult in the future than in the past for the churches to conduct successful evangelistic campaigns. Campaigns of Christian evangelism in this country have generally been revivals; that is, they have assumed that the persons approached have had a Christian background and need to be called back to the Christian life. I side with those who believe that there is less and less knowledge of Christianity in our society, and therefore feel that the evangelism of the future will have to be a longer and more elaborate process than it has been in the past.

5. Honest efforts at evangelism should express the same level of emotionalism as do the general run of church experiences—for the purpose of evangelism is to persuade individuals to begin a given course of action, and they need to have genuine samples of what this course of action means to other people.

6. I see no reason for making a special evangelistic appeal to children. Of course persons who are part of a vital Christian fellowship are constantly confronted by new aspects of the Christian life. The need for such challenge never ceases; within the church let us have a constant campaign of evangelism, evangelism in the sense that we never cease being urged to make decisions for the improvement of our spiritual lives.

EASTER

By JOHN GALLOWAY TRUITT

*Easter is so different
And its memories so dear,
The flowers bloom so bravely
And the birds call so clear;
Somehow I've come to thinking
The Holy One above
Has given the Easter season
An extra load of love.*

*Every humble pathway,
And all the hidden spots
Are fragrant with the pansies
And blue for-get-me-nots;
And deep within the forest
Lest we forget to see
Are a thousand lighted candles
On every dogwood tree!*

*The home is bright at Easter,
The church is sweet with prayer,
The parents and the children
And neighbors are all there;
Until I've come to thinking
The Holy One above
Has sent the Risen Savior
With an extra gift of love!*

SOUTHERN CONVENTION LAYMEN.

A group of laymen sat around a table in one of the rooms at Elon College on Saturday afternoon, March 6, discussing the laymen's work in our churches. They had come from different parts of the Convention as representatives of their respective section. This was a called meeting of the Southern Convention Laymen's Council.

Chairman George Coleclough called the meeting to order and Dr. Scott offered a prayer for guidance. Past activities relative to the organization of the men of the Convention were reviewed and a program necessary to the further development of this work was studied.

It was decided to prepare a report for presentation at the afternoon session of the Southern Convention on April 28. This report will contain information regarding progress made thus far and plans for the future. It is intended also to have a laymen's supper meeting on the same day, about which more details will be given later.

A committee, composed of Mills Godwin, Harry Lee, R. D. Holland, Charles Heath, Jr., and Dr. Scott, was appointed to draft a Constitution and By-Laws for presentation to the laymen.

What is this all about? What is this Laymen's Council? What is this Laymen's Fellowship? Let us go back to a recent bulletin issued by the Convention Committee on Laymen's Work.

"Realizing the steady growing interest of men in Christianity and the Church, and feeling the need for improvement of the total Church's program of the Southern Convention, the Convention Committee on Laymen's work recommend:

- "1. That each local church appoint a chairman and secretary of laymen's work in that church.
- "2. That every unit of men's work in a local church, such as Bible Class, Men's Evangelistic Group, Laymen's Brotherhood, or similar groups be considered jointly as the Laymen's organization of that church.
- "3. That the Convention be divided and that each of these districts appoint a chairman and secretary of laymen.
- "4. That the Convention Council on Laymen's Work be created to be composed of one representative elected by each Conference, together with the Chairman and Secretary of each geographical districts.
- "5. That the Convention Council on Laymen's Work establish and maintain a working relationship with the National Committee of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches."

AUSTERITY.

A current magazine article carries this heading: "Britain Can Offer the Traveller Much in Little—Scenic and Historic Interest of the Island will compensate for some Evidences of Austerity." Many Christian people applauded the picture of England's austere minister of economics, Sir Stafford Cripps, refusing a drink just opposite a liquor ad in Life magazine. Yes, there are many compensations for the lack of food: culture, entertainment, scenery, and noble living. Push this truth to its logical conclusion and one understands Jesus: "I have food to eat that ye know not of."

The story is told of the preacher who repeated his subject: "John was an Oyster Man," until someone corrected him: "John was an Austere Man." But our world is more interested in oysters than austerity. Even during Lent the evidences of carelessness and extravagance are on every hand. One is able to detect little if any diminution of smoking, drinking and other forms of pleasure. The Mission Period as well as Lententide should prompt us to simple living in order to release more income for the service of God and man. Self-rationing in behalf of others, of great causes, of imperative needs, has ever proved life's most liberating and joyous experience. Our Convention-wide missionary period extends the time for spiritual discipline and purposeful austerity from March through June. Gear your program of stewardship to this schedule.

Our world and our church is slow to realize the spiritual power which may be liberated through austere living. Gandhi could bring a nation to its knees by fasting. How often the church has exchanged its birth-right for a mess of porridge! Church suppers are far more prevalent and popular than Austerity Luncheons.

Easter, when properly understood and celebrated, is a joyous occasion. But if it means the casting off of our superficial restraints and sacrificial endeavors, it is without significance. These words, written by William Graham Cole, are so appropriate for our continuing mission period:

They say you fasted forty nights and days
And wandered hungry through the desert ways,
Refusing stones that cried out to be bread:
"Man does not live by bread alone," you said.
Today you walk again in hunger's wake—
In Europe's desert, where an anguished ache
Comes to your heart to hear the children cry,
While all around their parents slowly die.
Could you but speak a word to cruel stones!
Transform them into food for flesh and bones!
There are such stones—not there, but here—in hearts
Grown hard and lifeless, shopping in our marts
For food that's wasted, left in garbage pails—
Food that would silence children's awful wails.
Speak to our stones and change them into bread!
Speak to our hearts, and through us make them fed—
The aged, sick, the young, forlorn and lone,
Help us to hear their hunger's frightful moan.
So shall our fast a richest blessing be
To us, to them, but most of all to Thee.

FEDERAL COUNCIL ACTION.

Endorsing "in principle" the recent proposal by President Truman that $570,000,000 in economic aid be given to China, the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, meeting March 16 at the Marble Collegiate Church in New York City, urged that "steps be taken by our government designed to alleviate human suffering in China."

The executive body asked that the aid be given in order "to afford that country an opportunity to initiate measures of self-help, stability and public order, to retard economic deterioration, to promote projects of long-range reconstruction, and to maintain in China conditions that will enable the Christian churches to carry forward their missionary and educational activities."

A further action of the Executive Committee urged that inclusion in any new tax bill of a provision to increase the present limitation of fifteen per cent for income tax deductions on contributions to religious, education and charitable institutions. Stating that "we believe that the use of the 'standard deduction' in its present form tends to discourage the making of contributions since the individual receives the same deduction whether he actually makes any contributions or not," the committee also recommended a change in the individual income tax form where the 'standard deduction' lumps together contributions and payments of interest on debts, taxes, etc.

PROTESTANT RADIO COMMISSION.

Formal organization of a Protestant Radio Commission, a cooperative agency of fifteen major denominational and eight interdenominational bodies, has been announced.

Commission spokesmen stated the major purpose of the newly created organization is to encourage a wider and more intelligent use of radio for religious purposes; to maintain Christian standards of public decency and good taste in commercial programs; to serve as Protestantism's representative before the Federal Communication Commission; to represent Protestantism on inter-faith broadcasts; to further cordial relations with the radio industry; and to help ministers and church leaders to make more effective use of radio.

One of the first projects of the Commission will be to institute a comprehensive research study of the field of religious radio, and its relation to the church.

A statement outlining the purpose and function of the Commission stated that for the first time in history the church has in radio "a God-given instrument whereby the Gospel of Christ may be brought to all men."

"In this day of crisis and opportunity, the church must speak with a united voice," the statement said. "A divided and competing Christianity cannot bring a united world. Earnest-minded Christians in all the Protestant denominations are calling for a concerted program of witness of the Lordship of Christ."

"WHAT CHRIST MEANS TO ME."

II TIMOTHY 1:12 (MOFFATT).

A Sermon

By REV. AARON N. MECKLE, Pastor,
First Congregational Church,
St. Petersburg, Florida.

That ardent crusader for Christ, Hugh Price Hughes, was once telling a London audience what the Master had wrought in the lives of famous men. But his appeal reached its most thrilling climax when he said, "And I, Hugh Price Hughes, also, with to tell you what Christ has done for me." It is when our Christian witness gets over into first person singular, that it becomes compelling, contagious and irresistible. We are so weak when we merely argue. We are powerful as we testify what God's Grace has wrought in our lives. It is then a man can say with the Psalmist, "I will declare what God hath done for my soul." (Psalm 66:16.)

I come to that one who next to the "Crystal Christ" Himself has been my unfailing source of inspiration through the years, the Apostle Paul. I ask, "Paul, tell me what Christ means to you?" He replies: "I know whom I have trusted, and I am certain He is able to keep what I have put into His hands till the great day." And then, with stirred and grateful heart I find myself replying, "Paul, when life is most real for me, I can say that, too. Your confession of faith becomes mine. I, too, know in whom I have trusted." My "here" in the realm of faith, has helped me to tell what Christ means to me.

And now, let us make a few frank and candid observations on this greatness of all themes.

I

First of all, for me and for countless other Christian believers, the Christian religion is epitomized and gathered up in a Personality, Jesus Christ the Son of God, and the Savior of men. My salvation, for time and eternity, is not determined by my relationship to a creed or book or a system of theology. It is brought to a focus by my relationship to One who through faith, has become my All in All. Emil Brunner, distinguished Continental theologian, uses a telling and apt word in speaking of salvation: the word encounter. God coming face to face and standing over against His creature man in Jesus Christ, demanding of him his "yes" or "no" in response to the offer of life—the ultimate destiny of man's soul hinges on that. And it is when man, by means of a child-like and available faith, lays positive hold on that offer of life that God imparts to him the gift of new life in Christ. Thus, John Bunyan tells us that he beheld in a dream Christ standing at God's right hand, making intercession for him. And new life floods in on his sin-darkened consciousness when he is led to confess, "There, in Him, is my righteousness."

Professor John Knox, an American theologian, stresses the need for the believer to confront what he terms the "total Christ," that is, Jesus Christ in the full context of his divine relationships. Thus, when we say "Christ" we mean no solitary and confined figure, but a Divine-Human Person, plus the Church He brought into being, plus the radiant witness of His saints through the ages.

But alas! which of us shall delineate this "total Christ?" Who shall adequately compass the greatness of the Son of God? I feel the warmth of Florida sun's rays illumining my body, but cannot adequately describe that flaming orb. What we can know for certain is what Jesus Christ means to us at the point where He has warmed and enriched our being. That is what Whittier does in the much loved and quoted words: "But warm, sweet, tender, even yet, A present help is He, And faith has still its Olivet, And love its Galilee."

And so, friend, if you are seeking the inner, saving message of the Gospel for your life, stop making reconnaissance flights afar! Come, with your deep need, and with a sense of new surrender to Christ say with Paul—yes, and with many a one since—"I know whom I have trusted, and I am certain He is able to keep what I have put into His hands till the great day." "I am certain," says this great heart. "I am certain!" No guess work here!

II

So also in the realm of character and in the universe of moral values, I have primarily to do, not with a code of ethics but with a Character and a Person. Ethical and moral codes are necessary, to be sure. But Paul long ago pointed out that at best the Law is a "school-master to bring us to Christ." Once a man has found his life-center and spring of action in Christ he is no longer negatively bound by a code of ethics. He is positively released through a Person and a Spirit. He begins to sense the truth in the Augustine dictum: "Love God and do as you please!" His conscience is delivered from the bane of scrupulosity. Here in the area of personal character where a man or a youth is, in the dark, what he is in the light, he can agree with Browning, that: "That one Face, far from vanish, rather grows, Or decomposes but to recompose, Becomes my universe that feels and knows."

My good friend, Dr. Frederick L. Fagley, once said that he wished someone would write a book on the subject, "Why be a Christian?" Yes, why? Thousands in this day who seek to rationalize away their shoddy and careless conduct, are asking if not flaunting that question. After teaching for a while at Columbia University, Paul Gallico writes in Esquire to say that there is "an appalling lack of simple ethics and moral probity on the part of the younger generation." The young people of today, he says, do not seem to know the difference between right and wrong. And he concludes his indictment with the words, "Unless there is an ethical and spiritual renaissance of the good, the great and the dignified that live in man, we will all be back in the primal slime from which we came. The atom bomb won't get here a minute too soon!" (Reads Digest, December, 1947.)

"But wait a minute, Mr. Gallico!" one finds himself saying in response to this summary indictment; "If our youth of today are ethically and morally ignorant, who's to blame? If Christian standards of conduct are ridiculed as Victorian on many a college campus, whose fault is it, if not ours? If we of the older generation have sown to the wind, shall we not expect to reap the corruption of loose and vagrant morals? After all, it's not so much easier to write a book on moral casuistry than to live a life which is an ethical beacon to the "lost generation" of our time. Smug self-righteousness hardly becomes us!

I have only one word to offer young and old alike in a morally confused day. Far from being a word of censure or blame, it is a word of simple testimony: Keep close to Christ! Do only what you feel confident He would approve. In the midst of uncertainty, ask, "What would my Master do in this situation, and what is His will

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Palm Sunday came to a close today in the Suffolk Church with the chapel choir singing the final triumphant notes of their beautifully rendered Easter Cantata: "The Dawn of the Kingdom." It was a full choir of forty voices, and as their talented director, David Brown Harrell, said to me at the close of the day, "Everyone did their best." It was beautiful. And the congregation packed the church balcony and main floor. It was a lovely climax to several weeks of good practice, and also a week of evangelistic meetings.

Our pre-Easter evangelistic services closed this morning at the 11:00 o'clock service. At the closing this morning we received thirty-six new members—twenty-eight on profession of faith, and eight by transfer of their membership. During the week we had received ten, thus bringing the total for the week of service up to forty-six. Prior to the pre-Easter ingathering we had received ten, which brings us up to fifty-six. We need forty-four more to reach our goal for this church year of one hundred. And from the fine work done by our laymen and women during this campaign it looks like we shall reach it yet. At least we shall keep working along that line.

The congregations have been very encouraging to the pastor during the week, and especially since he was doing the preaching. We received new members at every service save two, and the congregations increased right up to the closing service. Our four choirs each had a turn at leading the congregational sing. and bringing a special number and each of them did their part well. I wish, too, to emphasize the fine work of calling done by members. I have not yet had time to fully check the results, but several persons are expecting to come into the church before summer as a result of their calls.

It is one of my favorite slogans to say: Work tells. Today we have seen that slogan exemplified in our church. And many of us have caught a vision of sharing in the work of the church in such way as to make for continuous progress in our own spiritual development, and in the effectiveness of our church. I wish our total had been many more for today, and indeed there were several others whom we expected, for I am earnestly praying that all our churches will have good reports by March 31. We are humbly grateful for what has been accomplished and shall press forward in His name to cultivate and train those whom we have recently received so that they may make good and faithful workers in our church.

NEWPORT NEWS NEWS.

Two things of interest, among other possibly interesting things, have taken place at our church recently. First of all, the Robert Lee House Bible Class presented the Sunday school with the basic equipment for Visual Education, including a Tri-Purpose Reflector suitable for the use of films, film-strips, and slides; and a large portable Radiant Screen. Stimulated by this generous act and this very serviceable gift, the Sunday school purchased a full set of slides of the Life of Christ by Elsie Anna Woods. In addition to these materials, several film strips and individual slides have been added to what we hope will be an increasingly large and usable library of visual educational materials. These slides and films can be used both in the individual classrooms and in general assemblies of worship, both for teaching and as themes for worship. There are splendid possibilities in these materials. A Special Committee consisting of Mrs. Herbert West and Mr. George Dangler are in charge of the Visual Education Equipment.

A second matter of interest is the recent landscaping project, also initiated by the Robert Lee House Class. The church lawn has been plowed and graded and seeded with grass seed. And a large number of shrubs and evergreens have been set out around the church. The effect is already pleasing, and in due time we are going to have a place of beauty as a setting for our church. The cost of the landscaping is to be met by volunteer gifts, but the class has underwritten the project.

HOLY WEEK.

Do you know that to cover these seven days, requires five chapters in Matthew, three in Mark, two in Luke and six in John? Read all of these records and you will gain a conception of the importance of those few days in the life of our Lord.

The glory of the approaching season shows itself clearly in Jesus' experience. Easter would be the culmination of his own work on earth. It was preceded by a glorious burst of life followed by the darkness of storm, before it revealed the beauties of the risen life. Had Jesus possessed only the power to see Calvary as he rode into Jerusalem that day, he would have turned back. Calvary was just another horizon to him, and he seemed to know that it had to be passed before he could conquer the world of men on the other side. He is reported to have lamented over Jerusalem, and yet he must have had the power to see beyond. We wonder how great is his lament as he views the world this Easter? Or how great is his joy to see in how many places the things for which he died have become facts?

Perhaps he would not recognize the crosses on churches, but he would see institutions in keeping with his ministry. He would see people striving to make a new world and rich nations sharing with those in need. The power of a religious life is not alone to be measured by its own self, but by what it shares with others. Religion is dead if it cannot stand that test, and we need not be ashamed of the world-wide achievements of his followers. The Christian faith and work is the one bright spot in world news today.

When one sees only the plague spots on humanity, he sees what all would be like if Jesus had not lived. On race hatreds, corruption, injustices and warfares, the only attack being made on them is the constant impact of the spirit of Jesus. Palm Sunday should be a day of spiritual pilgrimage, and Passion week should be a time of reconstruction to his ideals, just as Easter should become a new birth in the conviction that God's purposes are eternal.

News of Elon College

PUBLIC EDUCATION.

Emphasis is placed today on education. We decri the lack of education. We give no quarters to ignorance. Ignorance is our greatest national enemy. We are demanding that the facilities and opportunities for education be made available and afforded to all. We are insisting that every normal child in America at the proper stage in life give himself earnestly to the pursuit of an education.

In these requests and insistencies we know full well that present facilities and instructors are not sufficient to offer educational advantages to all. Out of this sense of inefficiency, there is an insistent demand that the states and the nation make available huge sums of money that necessary equipment for universal education may be made available and that a sufficient number of capable instructors may be secured. This is all good and well. It is encouraging that America is becoming aroused to the educational needs of our people. God speed the day when every child and every American home shall have the opportunity of a good and well-rounded education.

In our insistencies, however, we should not overlook the fact that the Church in this country was the first to cry the need of education and denounce ignorance as our greatest hindrance to progress, that it is the Church through its schools and colleges that has kept the light of learning burning all down through the years, and that even today the Church is perhaps offering fifty per cent of the opportunities and facilities available for education.

In the common parlance of today education offered by the state is "public education," and that offered by the Church or privately-endowed schools is "private education." The inference being that education offered by the state is for the public and that education offered by other agencies is for private individuals. This is a misnomer. Our church schools and church-related colleges are public institutions and serve the public as truly as any. An invitation is extended to all qualified students to enroll for instruction in our church schools. They are enrolled when they apply and are given every possible advantage. The church school trains for the church's needs, of course, a service that a state school will find it difficult to render, but the church school also trains for society, for the public needs of the community and for the state. The church school may be a private school in a technical sense but in a real and a vital sense it is a public school. It endeavors to train the whole of life for the total responsibilities of the total community. Its curriculum is broad, its instruction is thorough, its motives are pure, and its vision is community-wide. The church school as such should endure, but to endure and continue in its present efficiency, it must receive from some source or other support beyond present receipts.

The church school is rendering a public service that is indispensable to good government and wholesome living. The church, the state, the nation, society cannot afford to let the church school die. Give, give, give that it may live.

HEALTH AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION AT ELON COLLEGE.

The Department of Health and Physical Education has been greatly bolstered with the signing of likeable James B. Mallory as Director of Athletics. This provides Elon with a well-rounded program of athletics, health, and physical education equal to that of any school of its size in this vicinity.

Mr. Mallory, former head coach of Burlington High School, will coach football and baseball, and has already assumed his duties with the forty odd baseball candidates as well as those football players who are participating in spring training.

Aiding Mr. Mallory is Assistant Coach Garland Causey, who was responsible for the stalwart line Elon produced on the gridiron last season. Following the resignation of Coach L. J. Perry, Mr. Causey, an Elon graduate, guided the basketball quint through its rigorous schedule to an acceptable position in the North State Conference.

The remaining members of the staff of physical education are Professor J. L. Pierce and Instructor V. K. Whicker, Directors of physical education for men and women respectively.

Mr. Pierce is one of the best informed men in North Carolina on the subjects of health and physical education. (Continued on page 14.)

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

All of us like to be remembered. No one is fond of being forgotten. The College did not fare so well during the month of February. We are catching up during the month of March. Today we are submitting two reports in one, and they are encouraging reports. It would be of great help and encouragement if all of our churches and Sunday schools would remember the College and forward contributions for its support.

We are grateful to those who do help.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Yankow, China,
March 6, 1948.

Dear Friends:

The Old Testament (Exodus) tells us that the sins of the fathers shall be visited on the children down to the third or fourth generation. The sins of a divided Protestantism are today bearing fruit in China, and it makes the heart quite sad. Strength and energy which should be used to bring Christ to the heretofore unreached, now often pours into useless competition.

Yesterday we went into the country to a small village of Chienkow, about two miles from Yankow. A number of years ago, because of the work of the early missionaries and their colleagues, there was not an idol in the village. This is a rare phenomenon even today. There was a building used for a church and the Yankow minister went out regularly for services. Some of the Chienkow people organized teams and went through the countryside preaching.

Then two things happened. Our missionaries left because of the Communist invasion; and the depression in America made it impossible to return. Secondly, the Seventh Day Adventists came. This group found fertile soil for growth among our Christians. It was not too difficult to prove to these uncritical and unsuspecting folks (from the Bible), that the ideas of the missionaries were all wrong. In fact, the minister of our churches, himself, was convinced. Saturday became the Sabbath. Many of the folks were re-baptized and the church became hopelessly split. Even today, the two groups of Christ's followers in Yankow will have little to do with each other.

Today, in Chienkow, there is little left of the Christian vitality which once characterized the village. One of the younger men told me, "The majority of the people neither worship God nor idols." A divided and quarreling church did not attract the younger generation.

Before we left the States, I had heard that denominationalism was at a minimum in China. I was told that the various missionary boards had agreed not to compete with each other but had divided up the territory. In the main, this is true. The Episcopal, Methodist, E. & R., Brethren, Congregational Christian and other major co-operative denominations all work together very well. Interdenominational rivalry is at a minimum. Only the individualistic sects refuse to work together.

Let it be said that some of them do a good work. They are more aggressive for Christ than are many of our churches. The printed material they make available free for people to read is attractive, well written and beneficial to all Christians.

I was reading this morning from Luke 9:49, 50, where Jesus rebuked his disciples for forbidding a non-disciple from casting out devils in Jesus' name. The Master said, "Forbid him not, for he that is not against me is for me." This surely should be our guide in our dealings with these groups, but it hurts to see our churches so divided.

Pastor Fan, my present companion and fellow worker, is also troubled by these divisions among Christ's followers. He told me that in Foochow one group split off from the church who called themselves "The True Church." Later, another group sprang off from the first called "The True True Church." Pastor Fan has read of Dr. Stanley Jones' speaking tour in America in behalf of interdenominational cooperation and federation. "We need someone in China like him," he said.

Surely the church in America must lead the way in a united Protestantism. China is already so divided by language, customs, politics, and even war. She needs desperately a great unifying force—not a divisive one. The church can be that when we take Jesus' prayer seriously "that they shall all be one" (John 17:21).

I am glad to hear of the steps our own Congregational Christian Churches are taking in union with the Evangelical and Reformed Churches. I sincerely hope not only that the merger is effected, but that it is only a beginning to greater cooperation in the future. I am confident that such action by parent churches will do much to cause the younger churches to "become one."

Sincerely,
DICK JACKSON.

WHY RETURN TO CHINA?

Come over . . . and help us.—Acts 16: 9.

The love of Christ constraineth us.—II Corinthians 5:14.

On the eve of sailing we should like to answer a question that has been asked us several times: Why return to China where discouraging chaos and confusing conflict appear to reign? Why?

1. Because we have had almost forty years of happy life in China. We love the Chinese people. We want to help them in the difficult task of salvaging and continuing the Christian missionary and educational work through which alone we see hope for the future.

2. Because we believe that such Christian service in China is the most

REV. RALPH R. SHRADER TO SPEAK AT SPRING RALLIES.

"World-minded Christians regard the age in which we are living as both appalling and glorious. They know it is appalling because of the fruits of war—fear, hatred, slavery, starvation, poverty of mind and soul. They see it as glorious because of what it may become—a world community under the fatherhood of God. Christians not only have faith that a world community can be achieved, but know that it already exists as a result of the world mission of the Christian church," says Rev. Ralph Raymond Shrader of Boston, Mass., a Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions. Mr. Shrader will speak in North Carolina and Eastern Virginia at the spring rallies: March 30-April 2, in North Carolina, and April 6-7, in Eastern Virginia.

Mr. Shrader, who is a member of the staff of the Congregational Christian Missions Council, is familiar with life in the Orient having served as an American Board missionary in Foochow, China. There Mr. Shrader taught in Foochow College. He has also had pastoral experience in the U. S. A., his last church being the Bethany Church of Montpelier, Vt.

In 1937 Mr. Shrader visited the churches of Hawaii where with racial backgrounds of Caucasian, Chinese, Filipino, Hawaiian, Japanese and Portuguese, the people live and work together in an amazing exhibition of "one world" in microcosm. With Mrs. Shrader, he flew to the Hawaiian Islands, where in 1820, the American Board sent the first missionaries and where there now is the independent Hawaiian Evangelical Association doing its own missionary work.

Mr. Shrader's background, prior to assuming his present post at international headquarters included not only foreign service as a missionary and American pastorates, but religious education work, leadership in young people's conferences and work with pastors' conferences.

Born in Kansas, Mr. Shrader was educated at Washburn College (AB), Chicago Theological Seminary (BD) and the University of Chicago (MA).

Following are dates and places for the Rallies:

North Carolina—Tuesday, March 30, Durham Church (Durham, Wake, Vance, Warren); Wednesday, March 31, Union Ridge Church (Alamance, Guilford, Rockingham, Forsyth); Thursday, April 1, Ingram Church (Halifax); Friday, April 2, Randleman Church (Randolph, Chatham, Lee Moore).

Eastern Virginia—Tuesday, April 6, Richmond Church (Waverly); Wednesday, April 7, Cypress Chapel Church (Suffolk); Thursday, April 8, Bay View Church (Norfolk).

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

HINES CHAPEL.

Our society is having a good year under the leadership of Mrs. R. W. Isley. Planned programs, usually adapted from the Plan Book suggestions, are given each month as we meet in the homes. These are usually well attended.

At our Thank Offering service, which was held in the church auditorium as a part of the regular morning service, we were most fortunate in securing Mrs. O. H. Paris as featured speaker. It was an inspiration and a challenge to all churches in the Convention to hear the urgent need of a home for our Convention Superintendent and his family. We could well see the need of such a home, since we are in the midst of a building program for a home for our pastor and his family. The offering received was $100.

At Christmas, all members and their families met at the community building for a supper which was served in the cafeteria. Some of the leaders from the Baptist Church along with their pastor and his wife, were in attendance. Our pastor, Rev. M. V. Welch, was master of ceremonies, with readings given by Mrs. Welch and Mrs. Rowland Isley, while some of the school-age girls sang songs, accompanied by Mrs. Dot Boswell. The games, the beautiful tree, the gifts for all, and the offering of $25 for C.W.V.R. showed the real Christmas spirit.

Friendly service gifts have been received and are being mailed while those in our community who are shut in are regularly remembered.

Several of our members attended the World Day of Prayer Service at Greensboro. This was interracial and is a forward step to World Brotherhood. We are looking forward to our special Easter Services and our District Rally at Union Church near Burlington.

THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

The Woman's Council of the Congregational Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., comes to the half-way mark of the year's work with mingled feelings of pride and regret. While all requirements have been met to date, we feel even more should have been done.

The program for each meeting has been prepared to suit that particular occasion with a brief, but carefully studied devotional emphasizing the theme of the meeting.

The Thank Offering meeting was well attended, and probably surpassed in interest any of previous years.

The Council was pleased with the response to the plea for overseas relief, and 127 pounds of new and used clothing were sent to New Windsor, Maryland. With this clothing there were several boxes of "Christmas Cheer" packed especially for children. Christmas boxes were also sent to local orphan children.

In December, the Council sponsored a supper and bazaar. Both were largely attended, and provided fine fellowship.

The World Day of Prayer was observed with the City Union Service, and the churches of this area held an evening service at the Christian Temple. The February blizzard prevented one of the year's highlights when a delegate to the Copenhagen Alliance was to bring us a message on "After War Missions." In March, we had a luncheon meeting, when Mrs. J. F.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Easter Greetings:

Do you feel all spring-like and are you wearing new shoes or getting them? Some of our boys and girls at church last Sunday were showing me shiny patent leather ones and new socks and telling me about their Easter plans and the many flowers blooming in their yards. Our first violets are peeping out rather shyly and our plum tree is showering blossoms on our heads when we sit or play under it.

Easter is such a happy time. It is nice to have new clothing but the important thing to remember is that it is a time to re-clothe one's life besides one's body. We see the bulbs coming up and we know they are shedding their dry brown coats and we must shed our old winter feelings and be happy and thankful that God has made His seasons and this is the nicest of them all.

In our family we are still young enough for baskets although we call the bunny "just for fun." Do you keep your basket from year to year? We do. We got sturdy ones that would last and we have them out now filled with fresh grass ready for any gifts that we may receive. Already a great-grandmother has sent china biddies to go in them. The baskets came from Mexico and were woven of wide fibers that are in beautiful colors. We also have a smaller twig one that was made for me as a real egg basket by a dear lady at Apple's Chapel long ago. I treasure it very much.

We like eggs, too, but it really is a frightful waste to boil them and roll or hide them and never to eat them and so we have been collecting egg shells for the past weeks. Whenever possible we broke the end as little as could be and washed the shells and have saved them carefully for this week's coloring and decorating. For hiding the eggs may be filled with plaster of paris and dyed in the usual way. Put a sticker over the cracked end. Glue the broken part to a button mold and make it into a humpty-dumpty, rabbit, or girl. For humpty, paint the button mold black, paint the bottom of the egg dark, and then put his face on the upper half. Glue on plaited pieces of wool for legs and arms. The rabbit needs a face painted, whiskers made of string, and pieces of paper lined with pink and glued on the sides for his ears. The girl requires more work. She can have hair of wool or a bonnet made from scraps. Put lace around the button mold so that she looks as if she had a collar. Paint her face and you might glue on an old pearl bead for her nose. These are lots of fun and look very attractive in a basket. We like them better than stale eggs.

In the older part of our Bible, in the book called "Songs of Solomon," we may read of the wonders of the spring. It says: "For, lo, the winter is past; the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of the birds is come." I know some boys and girls that wrote a litany about this verse. Here it is:

The seeds are awake for winter is gone
God made it so.
Only gentle rains will fall now.
God made it so.
Birds sing and build their nests.
Thank God for spring.

ALLEN'S PLAY-LIKE STORIES.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Four-year-old Allen and his mother were visiting at "Grandfather's." In the big yard there was a pipe carrying water to the garden. Grandma had been gathering tomatoes, and she was taking them into the house just as Allen came out. Soon the little boy's mother heard water running, and on going to the garden found a faucet on full force.

"Did you turn the water on, Allen?" she inquired.

"No. Grandma did it to wash the things she picked up. She left it running; and didn't she make an awful mess?"

Mother went back to the house, but in a little while she returned and approached Allen in a wiser way. "What did you want water for when you turned the faucet on?" she asked. "Grandma turned it on," Allen persisted.

"No, Allen, Grandma didn't turn it on."

"How do you know?"

"I asked her. She said she didn't wash anything."

"Well—it just turned on by itself."

"But a faucet can't do that. You probably gave the handle a little turn," suggested Mother gently.

"Yes, I turned it just a little bit. Then I went over there and the water came out with a big rush."

Upon further questioning, Allen, who is fond of fishing, admitted that he wanted "a river to fish in." Mother explained that they could not afford to have water running away, and then she helped Allen to fill a pail. When, supplied with a cord and a bent hairpin for fishing tackle, the boy was calmly fishing in the pail, she said, "That was just a play-like story you told about Grandma turning on the water. You remember I told you about play-like stories."

"Yes," faintly.

"What was the real story?"

"That I turned it on."

"What are the two kinds of stories?"

"Real stories and play-like stories."

"Which are true?"

"Real stories."

"Which are the ones you make up?"

"Play-like stories."

"Yes, playlike stories are only make-believe—they are like the fish in your pail. I like you to know about play-like stories; they give you all the pleasures of make-believe. Still you must make a difference between play-like and real stories. When people ask questions about make-believe things, you may answer with play-like stories; but when they ask you about real things, tell them real stories."

How much of this did Allen understand? Not all, probably, but his understanding will grow if Mother continues, quietly and patiently, to require real stories about real things. Will he always tell real stories about real things when he does understand? That will depend largely on his experiences. Let no one blame the child or introduce the element of fear. Then, if he is always gently pressed to tell real stories about real things, there is little doubt that before long he will do this without any help.

I believe the recipe for happiness to be just enough money to pay the monthly bills you acquire, a little surplus to give you confidence, a little too much work each day, enthusiasm for your work, a substantial share of good health, a couple of real friends, and a wife and children to share life's beauty with you.—J. Kenfield Morley.

EVANGELISM IN CHINA TODAY.International Council AddressBy DR. LUTHER C. S. SHAO.

One of the reasons why Christianity has not been deeply rooted in the Chinese culture it because its literature is still alien to the people. Buddhist literature commands real admiration of even the most learned. Buddhist terminology has been deeply inculcated in the life and thought of the Chinese masses. The Chinese people are noted for their respect for good literature. The Bible has a larger circulation than any kind of Christian literature in China today. However, other types of Christian literature seem to be mostly limited in Christian circles. The translation of Christian literature from other languages to the Chinese is important, but we need more writings by the Chinese Christians themselves.

It seems that through Christian schools, colleges and universities, and other channels of Christian work, the Christian movement in China has succeeded in reaching many students and brought them to become Christian or show an interest in the Christian enterprise. In most cases the moral and religious needs of the student classes cannot adequately be met by the present Christian ministry. A call for qualified and consecrated church leadership is of uttermost importance and urgency.

You have heard much about "the untouchables" in India. I find that in China, there is a larger field of evangelism which I would likewise term, "the untouchables." I would like to mention two classes of people who might exert unusual influence in the national life of China if they were to be reached by our evangelistic efforts—namely, the intelligentsia and government officials.

Chinese people, particularly in the student groups, always pay high respect to the learned scholars, the so-called intelligentsia. We take it for granted that they are out of our field of evangelism. This is a challenge to select few Christians who are competent in the various fields and who have a rich Christian background. There is need for some who will prepare and consecrate themselves to reach this group of men and women.

The second group is composed of the so-called government officials. Methods of strengthening the spiritual life of a few devoted Christian officials and through them reaching out of some non-Christian officials should be devised.

Audio-visual aids are new methods of evangelism. This appeals more to the Chinese because they are realistic and practical. The National Christian Council of China and the University of Nanking under the leadership of Dr. Arthur Rinden and Mr. Swen Ming-Chung are working on some religious moving pictures and still-films to be shown in rural and city churches.

Before the war we had several Christian broadcasting stations, but now there is only the one in Shanghai. Even though we have more freedom to arrange our own programs, it is expensive to run our own broadcasting stations. The alternative would be that Christian organizations appeal to the government broadcasting stations to allow churches to broadcast the Christian message and church music from time to time.

Morgan brought a great message on World Fellowship and Evangelism "in connection with our mission study, Committed Unto Us. Instead of waiting until fall, there will be a visitation and membership campaign during the spring months. Under the interested and efficient leadership of our president, Mrs. A. B. Jarvis, we press onward toward a goal of 100 per cent loyalty to denominational and kingdom interests.

WAVERLY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Waverly Christian Church would like to share with our readers some of the things we have done so far this year. We were privileged to entertain the Eastern Virginia Women's Missionary Conference at the last session October, 1947.

Our Thank Offering service was held on the second Sunday night in December at the church. On February 13, we observed the World Day of Prayer. It was a union service with the other churches in our town in attendance and taking part in the program. Mrs. F. E. Knoeller of our church was the leader. Our society also has a membership in the Eastern Virginia Missionary Association.

We are now about to begin on our penny-a-meal plan for the Mission Period. We hope to have good response from the members of our church.

We also wanted to have a part in the work on the foreign field, especially in Shaowu, where Dick and Dorothy Jackson are. So, we decided to send $50 to help Dr. Edward Riggs to buy anti-malarial medicine.

We have sent boxes of clothing to our church at Fancy Gap, Va. Also, we sent a box of clothing to the Elon Orphanage for Easter.

Our Mission Study Book is being reviewed by Mrs. W. H. Johnson, one of our members.

BEREA (NORFOLK).

The Ladies' Auxiliary of Berea Christian Church of Great Bridge is happy to report a successful fall and winter session of work together with our president, Mrs. E. E. Waterfield.

We have had five meetings with a large number of our members and visitors present. Each meeting has been an all-day session, with covered dish luncheons. We have observed the morning sessions with an appropriate devotional, and Bible study of Matthew. The Bible study has been presented by Mrs. T. L. Dozier. This study has been presented with inspiring messages, we all look forward for the inspiration we receive from this study each month.

Our public service was on Sunday evening November, 1947, with a large number of our members and congregation of Berea present. Mrs. E. E. Waterfield conducted our devotional.

She was assisted by five other members participating in a very effective mission service.

Mrs. E. A. Eason and Mrs. W. S. Sorey reviewed the work and messages of the Jacksons from Shaowu Mission in China. Our thank offering amounted to $6.00, and this was sent to Shaowu Mission.

Our auxiliary had the pleasure of entertaining our church on the evening of January 3, 1948. This was a reception and miscellaneous shower in honor of our new pastor, Rev. Ellis N. Clark and family coming to us from Burlington, N. C. We do appreciate so much the interest and help they are extending in every department of our mission work.

On February 13, 1948, we observed the World Day of Prayer service by having an evening service so everyone would have the opportunity to attend. Our pastor, Rev. Clark conducted this service using the "Lord's Prayer" as his subject and regular order of service from "The United Council of Women." Even though it was a big snow of the season we had a large number present. We are so thankful that we had an opportunity

A PROPHET AMONG THE EXILES.

LESSON I—APRIL 4, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel.—Ezekiel 3:17.

LESSON: Ezekiel, chapters 1-4; 33: 1-9.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 137:1-7.

The Prophet.

Folks often think of a prophet as one who predicts of foretells, on who reads the future, and in some instances a kind of fortune-teller. To be sure there is that idea involved in the word prophet. And the biblical prophets often foretold what was to come to pass. Basing their predictions, both in their knowledge of the character of God and His will, and the signs of the times, they foretold what was to come. With inspired insight they read the meaning of the times in which they lived, against the holy character of God and His eternal purpose, and forewith they boldly proclaimed their prophetic message.

But the root idea of the word prophet is "one who speaks for God, or in behalf of God." A prophet did not always predict or prophesy. But the true prophet always spoke in behalf of, or for God. He often prefaced his words with the statement "Thus saith the Lord." He had a direct experience of God. One of the characteristic features of the prophetic office was the feeling that God spoke through dreams or visions or voices. But God also spoke through the ordinary and the natural, as well as the extraordinary and the supernatural.

A Major Prophet.

Ezekiel belongs with the major prophets. His mental and moral stature, his grasp of national and international affairs, his insight into human nature, his spiritual statesmanship, and his spirit of devotion to his fellow-countrymen and his nation stamp him as one of the great men of the Bible and of history. To him, perhaps more than to any other, is due the credit for taking the dispossessed nation and welding it into a church. He spiritualized religion. To be sure he belonged to the priestly class and much of his writings have a legalistic tinge to them. But he emphasized the spirit of religion, and he sought to give it an organized form and fixed content. He was one of the giants of the pre-Christian era, and ranks in God's Hall of Fame.

The Prophet's Call and Commission.

The prophet's call came in a somewhat weird form. The account of the vision as recorded in the first chapter of his preserved writings is a symbolic and confusing thing. There are those of course who know—they think they do—what every detail of the account means. The basic fact was that the prophets saw in it all the "glory of the Lord," and heard in it the voice of the Lord God calling him to dedicated service, and commissioning him for that service. He was to be God's man, and he was to speak for God to God's people. His message would not be popular and it would demand courage to proclaim it. But the word was deeply implanted in his inner life and he had to proclaim it. Furthermore he was not to be afraid of the face or the words of men. Nor would his mission always be successful. He was not to be responsible for results; he was to be responsible for effort. He was to speak for God, whether they heard or not. He was to be instant, in season, and out of season. His mission involved hardship, misunderstanding, identification of himself with his deported fellow-countrymen

The Prophet as a Watchman.

Ezekiel had a responsible position. Even as a sentry on duty must be vigilant and alert to the approach of an enemy, and ready to sound the alarm and call to arms, so was Ezekiel to be as a watchman unto Israel. He was to see the signs of the times and warn Israel against the dangers involved in the course they might pursue. God had given to him clearer insight, greater skill, and God had given him the responsibility of standing guard over his fellowmen. He was to lift a cry of warning, to point out danger, or extend a restraining hand. Woe unto him if he slept at his post or was recreant to his duty.

Watchmen are needed today. There are many sinister forces and factors abroad in the modern world which can, and are playing havoc with individuals and institution. The times need watchmen who will lift up their voices in warning against the liquor traffic, against the increasing secularization of life, against the peril of Communism, against formalism in the churches, against the tyranny of materialism. Ministers and teachers ought to be waking people up. This is no time for comfortable preaching in the sense of soothing preaching.

Early Visual Education.

He would not have called it such, but Ezekiel was good at teaching by the use of visual education. For instance when he wanted to bring home to the people the impending siege and capture of Jerusalem, he made a working model of the city out of tile and placed miniature battering rams around the model, thus dramatically illustrating what was to take place. Furthermore he placed an iron wall—here was an early "iron curtain" but in this case it was a symbol of the way in which Israel had cut itself off from Jehovah. Again and again in his ministry Ezekiel and other of the prophets, used the method which Jesus later used superlatively, by teaching abstract spiritual truths by objects and stories. The method is sound and is finding increasing use in many modern Sunday Schools, as well as in the public schools.

The Responsibility of Hearing.

Would the people listen? Would they change their ways? Would his preaching do any good? Well, it just could not be said. But this principle comes out clearly in the story. If Ezekiel does not warn the people, it is his responsibility. If he warns them, it is their responsibility. Even in that far off day God was warning folks to take heed how they heard.

The Bible is the window in this prison world, through which we may look into eternity.—Timothy Dwight.

EASTER.

By RUTH ELLIOTT, Overseas Consultant for North Carolina Council of Churches.

What does Easter mean? It has many associations, some of them having nothing at all to do with its real significance. To a child it may mean stories of an Easter rabbit and a basket filled with green straw and bright colored candies, or it may mean a hunt for painted eggs. To an adult it may mean an early morning service or new spring clothes or crowds of people going to church. To almost everyone it brings the thought of life re-newed after the cold of winter.

Above all, and to a Christian, Easter is a time of hope. But in much of the world this year, as last, there is no hope at Easter. Instead the day comes in the season when food is scarcer, when hunger is most bitter, when bodies are worn out with the struggle for survival. In this spring of suffering, many see no help for their misery. For them there are no new clothes, no candies for children, no comfortable services in churches, often, not even homes.

Yet, in almost every needy area of the world, the Christian churches of America are working. Through their cooperative efforts, especially through Church World Service, they have helped to ease the suffering that war left in its wake. Clothing, collected in America, has been shipped to replace the ragged garments of destitute people. Shoes, blankets, sheets, medicines, vitamins and tools have gone, but still the need continues. And the work of the churches cannot go on without funds. Money must be had to keep on supplying extra meals for undernourished children, medicines to the sick, care for the orphaned. Money must be had, too, to ship the many millions of pounds or donated supplies overseas. Without such funds, some needed work must be curtailed or stopped.

But this is not a time to give up. As never before, the lives of thousands depend upon the gifts of the church people here. Easter Day will bring the climax of Church World Service's special Lenten Appeal for funds. Christians throughout the nation are urged to give now, through their denominational relief committees so that the work of overseas relief may be carried on and increased in the time of great need.

In every pang that rends the heart the Man of Sorrows had a part.

—Michael Bruce.

WHAT CHRIST MEANS TO ME.

for me?" Wait for His green light! What are those words of shame and remorse issuing from the mouth of tragic Judas as he goes out to take his life? Listen: "I have betrayed," he is saying. But what? An ethical code? A moral abstraction set down on paper? Listen again: "I have betrayed the Innocent, the dearest and most trusted Friend I ever knew." How many a son or daughter have been kept morally straight by the remembrance of a mother's sainted face! Recall the warning Francis Thompson places on the lips of the "Hound of Heaven": "All things betray thee who betrayest Me."

III

Once more, Christ is for me the one stable and abiding Center in an otherwise unstable and careening world. The generations rise and pass away, but he remains. The "earth reels to and fro like a drunkard" (Ps. 73) but there is a stability in Him that outlasts the stars and shall remain when our human annals have run their course. A heightened awareness of Him is greatly needed just now with so many hearts fearful, and anxious. One remembers the plaintive bed-time prayer of the little girl closing with the words, "And now, dear Lord, be sure and take care of Yourself, because if anything happens to You we're all sunk!"

Listen then again to the tones of calm assurance issuing from yonder prison cell in Rome. Suppose we go together to "look in" on this flaming Apostle, this "fool for Christ's sake," whose spiritual zeal turned the stream of civilization into new channels. And let us draw near quietly, for Paul is dictating a letter to an amanuensis with quill in hand. Observe that he is chained to a Roman soldier, but mark the calm and confident repose on his face as he speaks. "Who has put down death" he is saying, "and brought life and immortality to light by the gospel? Of that gospel I have been appointed a herald and an apostle and a teacher, and this is why I am suffering." He is thinking affectionately of a young man named Timothy, an early convert of his as he continues, "Still I am not ashamed of it: I know whom I have trusted, and I am certain He is able to keep what I have put into His hands till the great Day."

At that essential point of a Crucified, but also of a Risen Savior, Paul's universe stands intact. Because he is sure there he is sure everywhere!

Dear friend—committed to Him, you, too, will know yourself kept, through time, and through eternity!

WHY RETURN TO CHINA?

effective way in which we may have a personal share in the worldwide struggle for human rights; a personal share, also, in helping meet some of the worldwide human needs of these days; a personal share in working for world peace.

3. Because we are convinced that the spirit of Christ opens the only way for overcoming the barriers between divided and conflicting human groups. Think of them—the racial, national, economic, political, cultural conflicts! And all insoluble except through good will, mutual respect, willingness to cooperate. Only as the love of Christ constrains men as brothers in the one household of God, can these solvents be found. The world's need is spiritual. The essential primary solution is religious, the touch of God's grace on human hearts.

4. Why do we go back to China? Is it not the very reason that you who send us go to church? You gather to worship together because you believe in God. You believe that all things work together for good to those who love God. You believe in the love of Christ revealed in your own experience, in the experience of our own country, in the fruits of Christian missionary service. You go to church to renew the inspiration of Christian love in your own living, so that in your daily contacts with men and women you can become the channels of God's grace to others. You go to church to worship because you believe that Christ is the way and the truth and the life for men. You believe that his is the only way. You try to be messengers for him in your particular place. We, too, believe that Christ's is the only way. And like you, we try to follow his way in our place. Your work and ours are the same.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Easter will soon be here. It is a time when the children look forward to a chicken dinner and eggs. The writer well remembers when he was a young lad. Mother raised a lot of chickens and we boys would start several weeks before Easter and rob the hens' nests. We would hide Easter eggs, and on Easter morning we would bring up our eggs and count them to see who had the most. We got a real joy out of seeing so many eggs at one time. It was lots of fun —while it gave mother some concern about getting fresh eggs to set the old hens, but she was patient with us and never scolded us.

The good women throughout the Southern Convention have sent in many beautiful dresses for the girls to have a new dress for Easter. The writer has been thinking of the part he has to play in buying the new Sunday shoes and getting them fitted to their feet. There is nothing more painful than to wear a shoe too small, because we know from experience and have suffered all through the years from a bunion caused by wearing a shoe too small, when a young boy. We try to get good fits so the children will have a comfortable shoe to wear. To do this takes time and patience, but it is worth the price.

We think little Jackie Wilkins will be about the happiest child on our campus for Easter. The Huber Class of the South Norfolk Church has adopted Jackie to clothe. They wrote me to take him to town and dress him up from head to foot. We took him to town today, March 19, and bought him a beautiful Sunday suit, shoes, cap, and other clothes he needed, and he is the happiest little fellow you have ever seen.

It takes a lot of work to get them all fitted out in their spring clothes, but on Easter Sunday morning to see them all march off to Sunday school and church with happy smiles on their faces, one forgets the trouble and worry, and just feels happy to see them happy.

We have the best group of children we have ever had. Our biggest trouble is that the majority of them are under ten years of age. That makes us short of help. But they will grow up one of these days and then we will have plenty of help.

We have not heard, as yet, from any of the Men's Baracca Classes about a living room suit. We have had a price of two suits for $345.00 in plastic. Who will donate one?

Miss Whicker, a graduate of Appalachian State Teachers College, conducts a similar intramural program for girls. Volleyball, basketball, and softball teams compete in periodic tournaments. The Elon girl's basketball team took third place in the "Playing Day Exercises" at Lenior Rhyne College, competing against other teams in the North State Conference.

Jointly, Mr. Pierce and Miss Whicker are responsible for the required program of physical education, the training of more than fifty future teachers of health and physical education and the admirable intramural program.

MRS. W. S. SOREY,

W. W. KIMBALL.

Mount Auburn Christian Church has sustained a great loss in the death of William Warren Kimball. Brother "Bill" died at the age of eighty-two, on February 7, 1948, after an illness of thirty days. He had given his life to the service of the church, having been a member seventy years. His devotion to the church serves as a beautiful pattern for others. He never swerved in a task, but did it well. For about thirty-five years he was the active and faithful treasurer of Mt. Auburn; always having in mind the effect of the service, both toward the donor and the one, or cause for which the money was given. His theory was that it would be easier to go back, and with success. In all my years of service in the church I have never had a more loyal and devoted co-worker.

From the human viewpoint we may think of death as ending, but when we look with the leavening influence, faith in Christ, we may change to think of it as life beginning, and that more abundantly. John Milton said, "Death is the golden key that opens the palace of eternity." So death always brings sorrow here; and sometimes despair. But that sorrow can be alleviated. Then let us look beyond the grave to the eternal home where our departed ones now are. Then we may attend to the words, "Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you."

Brother Bill was a son of James Allen Kimball and Mary E. Watkins Kimball. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Mary Read Kimball and six children, Mrs. H. M. Robinson, and Mrs. L. R. Gooch, Jr., of Henderson; Mrs. J. C. Allison of Wytheville, Va.; Mrs. H. T. Strang of Roanoke, Va.; C. L. Kimball of Delhi, Ontario, Canada; and W. W. Kimball, Jr., of Wilson; and one brother, J. A. Kimball, of Manson. Eight grandchildren also survive.

BEALE.

In memory of Hugh Patrick Beale (deceased November 28, 1947), a member of Grace Memorial Methodist Church, Sedley, Virginia, and a co-worker with Johnson's Grove in every need. He was beloved by all who knew him. While he did not claim perfection, but followed that pattern which helped him to keep the faith that made him a devoted husband and a good father, as well as a loyal friend and neighbor. This writer never knew him to turn off a worthy cause empty handed, for he was generous and kind to the unthankful. His children are living monuments of faithful service. His widow is the wide-awake president of the W. M. S. of Johnson's Grove Church.

FRIENDS OF THE FAMILY.

BEALE.

Mr. Hugh P. Beale, a consistent and loyal member of the Sedley Methodist Church, passed away November 29, 1947.

He was also faithful in attendance at Johnson's Grove Christian Church, ready and willing to help at all times.

Resolved that: The Johnson's Grove Missionary Society has lost a loyal and faithful member in the death of our friend and brother.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call him from his earthly home, we offer the following resolutions of respect:

1. We wish to express our appreciation for his life, which was lived in consecration to God, his family and his friends. The influence of his life will live on.

2. We wish to extend our heartfelt sympathy to his family and we commend them to God, whose grace is sufficient in this hour of sorrow.

MATHEWS.

Mrs. Emily Smith Mathews, eighty-two, wife of Thomas W. Mathews, was born November 24, 1865, in Exter, England, and died January 23, 1948, at the Maplewood Nursing Home, Winchester, Va., following nine weeks of illness as a result of a fall that fractured her hip.

Funeral services were held at the Congregational Christian Church, Winchester, January 25, at 3:00 P. M. The body was laid to rest in the family lot, Mt. Hebron cemetery, Winchester.

The deceased is survived by her husband, two daughters, one son and five grand children, one of whom lives in London. Other realtives, both in America and England survive.

Mrs. Mathews was a member of the Winchester Church and had served the church faithfully and well during many years. She was a woman of sweet disposition, spiritually minded and loyal in service. Her faith in God which she maintained to the end will ever be to those who knew her intimately an inspiration.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

MILLS.

In loving memory of Mr. Stanley Gibson Mills, whom God in his wise providence called to be with him on October 11, 1947, we, the members of the Rosemont Christian Sunday School, desire to express our devotion to his memory as a faithful and loyal member of the church and Sunday school.

Mr. Mills was born May 10, 1916, and started his career in the Sunday school at a very early age. He was present every Sunday for fourteen years, prior to his entering the armed forces. Several months later he was given a medical discharge.

Mr. Mills was the son of Ollie S. and Mrs. Alice Gibson Mills. He is also survived by his two sisters, Mrs. F. A. Goforth and Mrs. F. J. Richardson.

Therefore, it is resolved:

1. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes.

2. That a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

3. That a copy be sent to the family.

Mrs. A. P. COFIELD,

GASTOR.

We, the members of the Board of Deacons of the Randleman Christian Church, hereby express our appreciation of the good life and long faithful service of the late Deacon A. P. Gastor, who passed away December 16, 1947.

Mr. Gastor was quiet and modest in spirit, friendly in attitude, and faithful in the performance of his duties. He loved his church and as long as his health permitted he attended the services of worship. He missed only three Sundays in forty-five years. He was treasurer of the church for forty years. He missed conference one time in the forty-five years.

He lived a consistent Christian life and had the respect and confidence of those who knew him. He was devoted to his family and to his home, and was characterized by a strong personality and a wholesome religious spirit.

We hereby express our sympathy to the members of his family circle. May the grace of God sustain and comfort them.

Respectfully submitted,

Rev. B. H. LOWDERMILK,
L. V. DORSETT,
W. G. LAMB,

WHITT.

On September 26, 1947, Liberty Christian Church lost a faithful, and devoted member, as long as she was able to attend. The Sunday school, church, and missionary society extend to the family and loved ones of Mrs. Elizabeth Bray Whitt, their love and sympathy.

She was the daughter of the late John A. and Sarah Tuck Bray, and on December 26, 1894, she became the wife of James D. Whitt to whom she was always a devoted wife, mother, and a true friend to all who knew her.

Two daughters and three sons are left behind to carry her life on, which is a good life to live. Those surviving are Mrs. John Tuck, Mrs. Erving Crutchfield, John, James, and Edward Whitt. We commend them to our Heavenly Father, who is able and willing to bear all burdens if we will only take them to him.

We are all deeply grieved at her going, yet we humbly bow in submission to our Father's will, knowing that in that heavenly home, where all is bright and fair, she who loved beauty and was so devoted to her church, and so loyal to her family, will continue to live.

Mrs. Y. A. BRAY,
Mrs. W. M. YEAMON,
Committee.

LILES.

We, the members of the Missionary Society of Oak Grove Church of Sunbury, N. C., submit the following resolutions of respect for one of our most loved and loyal members, Mrs. C. M. Liles, who departed this life on February 11, 1948, at the age of fifty-eight years. Besides her husband, Charlie M. Liles, she is survived by five sons of Sunbury, N. C., and Norfolk, Va. Three daughters, two of Washington, D. C., and one of Portsmouth, Va.; one sister of Portsmouth, Va., and one brother of Norfolk, Va.

She was a loving wife and mother, a very kind and considerate friend and neighbor, and will be greatly missed in her church and community.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we shall miss her in the sweet fellowship of our work together. We shall always cherish the memory of her friendship and faithful service.

2. That to her loved ones we extend our deepest, heartfelt sympathy in the name of our Lord, who is the Resurrection and the Life and will comfort them all, in their sorrow.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, one to "The Christian Sun" for publication and one kept for the records of the Missionary Society.

Committee.

ONENESS IN CHRIST'S BODY.

it or leave it;" the idolatrous attachment to a certain minister, and conversely, the unhealthy aversion for another minister, as if a minister made a church—how long are these capricious and selfish ways going to reduce our spiritual vitality and hurt the power of the visible fellowship itself?

When next we are at Christ's Holy Table, in those revealing and soul-stirring moments when we realize our oneness in his Body, let us think on these things, and ask his forgiveness. Let us be fellowship men, and not stubbornly self-regarding individuals. We must be right with his Body, the Fellowship, if we are to be right with Christ.—John W. Brush in Daily Devotions.

An Easter Meditation

By JOHN L. GWIN

It is of utmost importance that we ask ourselves on this Easter Sunday, "Do we really believe, down deep in our hearts, in the Resurrection of our Lord, Jesus Christ?" If we do, Easter gives to us a new hope for life and for living in these days of uncertainty.

Do we believe enough to do anything about our belief in our Risen Lord? "For not every one that sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but He that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Too often, we express verbally a belief in Jesus and His Resurrection, but our actions give conclusive proof that we really do not believe. Jesus tells us that "by their fruits, ye shall know them." Where there is no fruit, there is no real belief.

If there is a Resurrection, there is a Heaven! If there is a Resurrection, there is a Hell! If there is a Resurrection, there is a Judgment!

Are you living the life that your Risen Lord wants you to live? Are you the person you want to be for all eternity? If you are not, through the Power of Him who rose again from the dead, you can be. Remember, you are building your life for not only now, but also for eternity.

I searched the world for an eternal faith,
At times, it seemed I had lost my way;
Then He led me back to the Empty Tomb,
And I found that faith on Easter Day.

"Thanks be to God, who giveth us the Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

A PRAYER FOR THE CHURCH

*Father, who on man doth shower gifts of plenty from thy dower,
To thy people give the power, all thy gifts to use aright.
Give pure happiness in leisure, temperance in every pleasure.
Holy use of earthly treasure, bodies clean and spirits bright.*

*Lift from this and every nation all that brings us degradation;
Quell the forces of temptation, put thine enemies to flight.
Be with us, thy strength supplying, that with energy undying,
Every foe of man defying, we may rally to the fight.*

*Thou who art our Captain, ever lead us on to great endeavor;
Father, who hath sought and found us, whose love hath bound us,
May the Church the world deliver, give us wisdom, courage, might.
Holy Spirit, in, around us, hear us, Godhead infinite.*

NEWS AND VIEWS

The Editor is attending the annual meeting of the Church Press Conference in New York this week.

Rev. and Mrs. John L. Gwin of Norfolk announce the birth of their first child, Janet Ann, who was born at Leigh Memorial Hospital on March 27.

We salute the new town of Portlock. This newly-formed town is worthy of recognition not only because it is in the vicinity of Norfolk, but also because it is the location of our Rosemont Church. Four of the five councilmen are members of the Rosemont Church.

A new set of Deagan chimes will be dedicated next Sunday at our South Norfolk Church. They are the gift of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Hollowell, presented in memory of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Lane and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hollowell. Mrs. Lane was a charter member of the church which was organized in 1904. The service of dedication will be led by Rev. O. D. Poythree and the chimes will be played by Miss Gladys Hanbury.

ASHEBORO CONGREGATION WORSHIPS IN NEW BUILDING.

Easter was an occasion of rejoicing for the congregation at Asheboro, North Carolina. Though the church building is not yet completed, the first service was held there on Easter Sunday at eleven o'clock. All but six resident members were present for the occasion, and thirteen new members were received. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, and an excellent program was rendered if the nicely printed bulletin is any indication. An offering of $948.30 was received. We congratulate the pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester, and members.

PASTORAL PRAYER.

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

Thou God of infinite compassion and of unbounded love, we desire reverently and believingly to bow before Thee now in prayer. We come to Thee in prayer because Thou hast bidden us to come, and because in the experience of prayer we have received Thy blessing. Bless us each one as here assembled we bow our heads and our hearts before Thee with our need as our petition for Thy grace. Make our hearts responsive to Thy holy presence, and make our minds responsive to Thy divine truth. Make our thoughts of Thee to be worthy. Make our love for Thee to be constant. Make our trust in Thee to be firm. Make Thyself very real to us—so real that in reaching out for Thee we shall feel Thee and know Thee, "Whom to know aright is life eternal."

Forgive us our sins, our wasted time and our wasted talents. Help us partially to atone for our neglect and our failures by giving our best to Thee in service so long as life on earth is ours.

We pray for those whose lives are cast in unpleasant places, whether by the fault of others or by their own failures and mistakes. We pray for those who are fighting a losing battle against temptation. We pray for those who have given up the fight and today are helpless victims of evil desire and sensual appeal. May all mankind—the bad and the good, the weak and the strong, the high and the low—look unto Thee and be saved.

In Jesus' name we pray. Amen.

pel." The session was called to order at 10:00 A. M. by President Roy A. Larrack. Opening worship service was conducted by Rev. Clyde O. Koon, host pastor. The enrollment revealed that all except one church was represented by one or more delegates.

Superintendent Wm. T. Scott address the Conefrencce on "Our Church and How It Works." Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College, spoke on the Conference theme, pointing how the support of all the institutions and agencies of the Convention add to "The Furtherance of the Gospel." He made a strong appeal for adequate support of Christian Education in the homes, Sunday schools, and in our colleges. Miss Elizabeth Chicoine spoke on "The World Mission of Our Church," giving a review of the various mission fields served by our churches at home and abroad.

Rev. S. E. Madren appealed for more adequate support of the Christian Missionary Association pointing out how the Association serves the churches. Mr. Madren also led a discussion on the Young People's Summer Conference to be held at Powell's Fort in August.

The proposed merger between the Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church was discussed and the Conference voted overwhelmingly in favor of it.

The afternoon Devotion Service was conducted by Rev. R. E. Newton.

Initial plans were made for the Centennial Session of the Conference to be held at Antioch Church August 4 and 5.

It is always an encouragement to attend a session of the Valley Conference. Harmony and eagerness are manifested in all actions taken.

The Valley Conference continues to demonstrate the successful grouping of churches into pastorates.

WM. T. SCOTT,
Superintendent.

By Maj. Gen. LUTHER D. MILLER, Chief of Army Chaplains, U. S. Army.

O Eternal Lord God, be pleased to receive into Thine almighty and most gracious protection the soldiers of our country. Support them in the day of battle, and in their service to our country amidst the storms and floods of national disasters. Shield them from all danger; keep them strong and steadfast; give them courage and chivalry; uphold their hands as they seek to further the cause of righteousness for the maintenance of a just peace. Hold in Thine omnipotent keeping our many comrades, who, having made the great sacrifice upon the altar of liberty, now rest with Thee. Grant that we, the living, may keep faith with these brave ones who have gone before us, to the end that we may glorify Thy Holy Name and be worthy trustees of the moral heritage of our beloved country. Bless our comrades, we pray Thee, O God, wherever they serve; and keep this our land, the United States of America, under Thy holy protection. Amen.

CRUSADE CONTINUED.

The results of the Evangelistic Crusade have not been tabulated at this writing. Tentative reports at ministers' meetings indicated many prospects for the Easter ingathering and it is reasonable to assume that this condition prevailed generally throughout the Convention. This Palm Sunday and Easter had added significance in many churches because of the new members who swelled their ranks. Prayers were answered. Parents, relatives and friends rejoiced as those, long sought, returned to the Father's house. "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Valuable experience gained in this Crusade should be conserved, but it can be conserved only as it is utilized. Few, if any churches have exhausted their prospect lists. Prayerful concern and systematic visiting revealed unsuspected prospects. Laymen had, some for the first time, the inexpressable joy of leading people to Christ and into the Church. New life, new talent, financial and spiritual resources have come into our churches. New members must be assimilated. The machinery and momentum of the Crusade should be maintained.

Pentecost is our next spiritual objective. All those churches which discovered additional prospects, plus the churches that failed to explore the evangelistic possibilities of Lent, should join now in a mighty effort to duplicate our Easter record at Pentecost. It can be done! Those who have been initiated so recently into the evangelistic fraternity should not be dismissed just when they are ready to do their greatest work. Easter and Pentecost are indispensable landmarks in the history of the church. What God hath joined together in the spiritual record of the race, let not man put asunder. On, therefore, to Pentecost!

OUR NEXT MODERATOR.

One of the most exciting moments of the General Council is the election of a moderator. A moratorium is hastily declared on all Ferdinand sessions. Standing room only is available as candidates are placed in nomination. Delegates await with bated breath the result of the balloting and the announcement of the election.

Who will be elected at Oberlin in June? Those who attended the last Oberlin Council (1934) will remember the speech of Hugh Elmer Brown nominating S. Parkes Cadman. Dr. Cadman was elected honorary moderator; J. T. Stocking, moderator.

According to the customary rotation of the office between the clergy and the laity, Moderator Palmer will be succeeded by a layman. Roger Babson, William Sweet, and Ronald Bridges, are the lay moderators who have served in recent years.

Nathaniel A. Talmage of Long Island, N. Y., is nominated in the May issue of "Advance" by Raymond F. Elliott, who writes: "In the business field, Mr.

Talmage is one of the outstanding dirt farmers in our state, a graduate of Cornell University, an authority and counselor on farming problems and agricultural organization. . . . He is a Director of the Board of Home Missions, is a member of the Layman's Fellowship Committee of New York State and his local church affiliation is with the Baiting Hollow Church, one of our rural churches with 103 members."

Many of our people would roundly applaud the election of a dirt farmer as moderator. Our rural churches should have greater recognition and leadership. Our urban and urbane programs need to be brought down to the good earth. No greater benefit could come to our denomination than a biennium of constructive rural emphasis. Moreover, the communicants at Popes Chapel, the constituency at Holy Neck, the members of Apple's Chapel and the parishoners at Shallow Ford would have their hearts warmed and their dignity restored by the election of a moderator from Baiting Hollow!

CHINA BANKRUPT?

"Fix your eyes upon China's present economic bankruptcy, her civil war, her multiplied post-war problems, her lack of able and honest leadership, and you can become completely pessimistic about the future," the Rev. F. Olin Stockwell, Methodist missionary in Chengtu, West China, has declared. "But climb to a peak where you can get a longer perspective—her history of 4,000 years, or only of the past hundred years—and see what mighty changes have been wrought in this great land, in all fields of social advance. See what a magnificent role the Christian Church has played in this. Then add to your perspective some of the faith and love and hope that drove Judson Collins, the first Methodist missionary, to come to China one hundred years ago today—and you will thank God and put your shoulder to the task."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

Dear Editor:

The Christian Sun plays a great part in our home because it is a bright light coming into our home once each week. The children read The Christian Sun as well as the parents. First, when very young, they read the Orphanage Page and the Children's Page. As they grow older, and reading becomes easier, they read other articles and the financial reports. Children are eager to know just what "My church" and other churches are doing to support Christianity.

Therefore, when the children become adults, they read The Christian Sun from cover to cover, and wish it contained more. For the small sum of $2.00, I wonder how this weekly contains so much inspiration and such splendid guidance for better living in our homes.

Sincerely,

ERNEST D. FRY.

North of the "Invisible Line"

By JOHN R. SCOTFORD

To the naked eye Canada looks very much like the United States. The railroad trains, the automobiles and the scenery are identical, although the bill-boards are somewhat different. Canadian money is the same size and has the same value as ours but is adorned with the royal family rather than with busts of liberty, Indians, buffaloes and Abraham Lincoln. Traffic keeps to the right and goes as fast as it dares. Tea is more abundant and quick lunches much scarcer than in the United States. The English language and English ways prevail except where one encounters the French—which is another story.

The real differences between Canada and the United States lie beneath the surface. The fundamental fact is that although the area of the Dominion is somewhat greater than that of the forty-eight states there are at least twelve times as many people south of the international boundary as there are north of it. There are more people in the metropolitan area of New York City than in all Canada.

Matters are made worse by the way our ten million northern neighbors are scattered. It is much further from Halifax to Vancouver than from New York to San Francisco or even from Boston to Seattle. Canada is divided into four sections each of which is separated from the others by natural barriers. Between the eastern sea coast of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and the settled portions of Quebec and Ontario is a great wilderness given over to hunters and lumbermen. The railroad connecting these provinces is compelled to go several hundred miles out of its way to keep from trespassing on the state of Maine. North of Lake Superior lies another barren region where the chief settlements are the railroad division points. Because no highways have yet been built through this section Canadians cannot drive across the continent without availing themselves of the hospitality of the United States. The third great barrier is the mountains which intervene between the prairie provinces and British Columbia.

The scantiness of the population combined with truly magnificent distances affects Canadian life in more ways than one might think. The simple truth is that everyone is compelled to bear part of the cost of getting men and materials from one place to another. Aside from commodities which are locally produced, prices are higher than in the United States largely because the cost of distribution is so much greater. Gasoline can be delivered to the twelve million people who live in the State of New York much more cheaply than to the same number of possible customers scattered over half a continent. Canadians pay more for what they get than do those of us who live south of the line.

Another by-product of Canada's appalling distances is government ownership of all her important railroads except the Canadian Pacific. This has been the result of circumstances rather than desire. The maintenance of rail communication is essential to the well-being of the Dominion. Private capital could not operate the railroads and make a profit, and so the government took them over and pockets the annual deficit.

Because the government must spread itself over so much territory it cannot permit itself such luxuries as are indulged in by the United States. The post office does not go in for granite and marble but sells its stamps in modest quarters. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police is famed for its efficiency, but knows little about style. Those who run afoul of the law are questioned in the front parlor of the house where the sergeant happens to live. Court houses and city halls are modest places with the accent on the antique. Necessity has made the politicians acquainted with frugality.

One of the interesting by-products of Canada's many miles has been the merger of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational denominations into the United Church of Canada. For these bodies to endeavor to stretch themselves across the prairies of the West seemed both silly and impossible, and so they came together into one organization.

"Why has not the small and scattered population of Canada tried to escape from some of their burdens by seeking to become a part of the United States?" is a question which the visitor from south of the line is almost certain to ask. Several answers can be given.

The first large group of English-speaking settlers to come to Canada were the United Empire Loyalists who fled from the thirteen colonies at the close of the American Revolution. Before that time Canada was a territory which England had only recently acquired from France and whose people were overwhelmingly of French descent. This influx of people who had left their homes in the United States because of their loyalty to England tended to create a strong tie with the mother country. As an English speaking country Canada was founded by people who did not like the United States.

In a curious way the French who overwhelmingly dominate the Province of Quebec have bound Canada to Great Britain. The one ambition of these people is to be let alone in the use of their language and the maintenance of their customs. Their most obvious loyalty is to the Roman Catholic Church. Soon after she took over the country the English government guaranteed to the French that they would not be disturbed in their language, laws or religion. As soon as the French were sure that England meant what she had said they settled down to live happily under her flag. They trusted England but distrusted the Protestants of the United States.

For over a century and a half the French and the English have lived together in Canada without mingling their blood to any perceptible degree. Each has made the other more loyal to their own traditions. The presence of the French has heightened the devotion of the English Canadians to the British crown.

A small country always fears lest it be absorbed by a larger neighbor. Through most of her history Canada has dreaded the superior numbers and power of the United States. Fortunately the boundary has never been fortified, and the Great Lakes have been kept free of ships of war since 1815. On the other hand, England maintained the fortress which she took from the French at the City of Quebec and built a great citadel overlooking the City of Halifax where she boasts that the British flag has flown continuously since 1749. The only foe who would ever have been tempted to attack either fortification was the United States. And until the beginning of the present century Great Britain maintained garrisons in Canada equal in manpower to the army of the United States.

As Canada has grown in numbers and strength her fears have diminished. The British army departed from her shores at the time of the Boer War, and has never come back. The citadel of Quebec still has a garrison—of Canadian troops—but the citadel of Halifax is merely a show-place where visitors can hob-nob with

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Forty-six junior boys and girls, members of Miss Ruthanna Foard's choir and choral club, sang Easter carols at the two hospitals, and several homes of shut-ins, on Easter Sunday morning at sunrise; and were entertained for breakfast at the Elliot Hotel by the father of one of the juniors, Mr. L. S. Burton. It was a privilege of the pastor to join with them, and to pray an Easter prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving at the breakfast table. Mrs. Truitt and a few other ladies who had driven cars shared in the breakfast. Mr. Burton was thrilled at the privilege of being host to the entire group, and we were all equally grateful to him. At eleven o'clock the children, and I mean very small children, had their day. They sang and recited the story of the risen Lord. Easter lilies, singing canary birds, and costumes, sweet, gay, and beautiful—and the hush of their prayers as well as the triumph of the great resurrection hymns made a service which brought honor to the Christ and joy and happiness to many homes. It is not the traditional Easter service, but it has become a tradition in the Suffolk Church, and standing room goes at a premium.

Several of our Eastern Virginia churches have been receiving new members during this week and on Easter day. My friend and fellow-pastor, Dr. I. W. Johnson, did a week of pre-Easter preaching in his Berea Church and had a joyous and happy meeting. Several of the ministers at the recent meeting of our ministers' organization made encouraging reports concerning their ingatherings, and their outlook for today. We are hoping that reports will go into the Convention Office showing some inspiring results. What a fine thing it is for our churches to catch the spirit of working together to make great local churches, and conferences. Our local churches are made of mighty good people, and we should all so work together as to have strong conferences, and a really good spirit of progress and growth in our Southern Convention.

Easter has come so early this spring I am hoping that we shall go right into April and May with inspiring Sunday school and church attendance, and in that way make up somewhat for the unusually inclement weather we had during the winter. Easter sounds a note needed in our times—victory that goes beyond the darkness and confusion of the hour. We can have it in our own hearts and minds, and we can help to give it to others. Let us begin by loving one another, by being kind and thoughtful, and patient with one another, and then there shall be victory in our own souls which the world cannot give, nor can it take away.

STEWARDSHIP.

By ENID S. GRIFFITH.

If I can chant a bit of song
When the world is clothed in pain,
Then I must search the highest scale
For a heavenly, glad refrain.

If I can point some beauty out
When the world is drab and gray,
Then I dare seek its hidden face
In each cranny along the way.

If I can hold a high ideal
When the world is pagan-led,
Then I must cling at any cost
Though it leave me alive, or dead.

If I can but be spirit-filled
When the world is an earthy clod,
Then I dare not do otherwise,
For I have a trust from God.

THE PRODIGAL URN.

[The following article was written by Mr. Clyde Fields in Mrs. L. S. McDonald's Creative English Class at Elon College. Mr. Fields is pastor for our churches at Berea, Ingram and Mt. Bethel.]

Through bitter cold, across frozen brown grass, over icy dead leaves, with impetuous wind driving the snow into our faces, we hurried across the forsaken south campus of Elon College. My ministerial student companion had just uttered very pompously, "Why, we Congregationalists came over on the Mayflower," as we came abreast the imposing O'Kelly monument at the edge of the walk leading to the Alamance building. "Ouch," was all my dignity would allow me to say as my moving feet tangled with a round piece of stone masonry. My face was hot with humiliation as I arose to explode my "righteous indignation" on this stone foot-tripper. My anger melted into shame as I recognized the "prodigal" urn, kicked about the campus, lured away on various occasions by kidnapping students, unnoticed, profaned instead of revered—the urn set by loving friends in the center of the oval monument to James O'Kelly, Champion of Religious Freedom.

The Methodists have their Wesley, the Lutherans have their Luther, the Presbyterians have their Calvin, the Congregationalists have their Browne, but the hearts of pre-1932 Southern Christians have a shrine room in their hearts for James O'Kelly, founder of the Christian Denomination—or do they?

In 1942, Columbus set out to find a new world, later to become a land where men and women might be free to worship God according to the dictates of their own hearts. Three centuries later, November 1, 1792, in Baltimore, Maryland, another quest for freedom was initiated.

The "papal" gavel of Bishop Asbury raps the desk for the Methodist Assembly to come to order as he shouts, "The power of the bishop has been and will continue to be the final authority of ministerial practice and conduct in the Methodist Church."

Like another immortal Virginian who loved liberty more than life itself, James O'Kelly stands up. All eyes and ears battle for his reply. "Brother Asbury, Christ is the Head of the Church; the Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice; and Christian character is the fundamental test of Christ fellowship." In his eyes are the tears of a martyr but in his determined march from the assembly shines the courage of St. Paul. One thousand like-minded men quietly pick up their wraps and file out behind James O'Kelly. The great assembly sits dazed as if the whole world has tumbled down on them.

Mounting slowly to their horses, with their great coats buttoned about them, silently adjusting their saddlebags, they ride away into the glorious sunrise of religious freedom. With the banner, woven in the fabric of secession from the Baltimore Assembly, flying proudly in the breeze, the O'Kellyites storm the "stronghold of evil" in North Carolina and Virginia. So successful are they in "snatching men from the fire" that meeting houses spring up rapidly throughout the two states bearing the simple Biblical name, "Christian Church." These churches bear a visible testimony to the consecrated efforts of this nineteenth century apostle.

About six months after willing five dollars to his son, John, ten dollars to the heir of his departed son, William, and designating the remainder of his few possessions to his loving wife, James O'Kelly paid the price for being mortal. Almost within the shadow of what was to become Duke

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE.

The Valley Conference met in mid-year session Thursday of last week. This is the only conference in our Southern Convention that has two sessions annually. Mr. R. A. Larrick of Winchester is the president, and a good one. Mr. Larrick is a layman, loved and respected by all. He presides with positiveness and fairness to everyone. His programs are clear-cut and well executed with precision and effectiveness. He does a good job. There were some whisperings that Mr. Larrick would probably retire at the next annual session of conference in August. I hope not. His retirement from office would be a loss to the conference and to its entire program.

This mid-year meeting is not for the transaction of business but for fellowship and inspiration. The president said that since this was not a business session, they always tried to have some "big" speeches. That is why they insist on having Bill Scott present and on the program morning and afternoon.

At this particular session they were considering the work of the Church as a whole. The theme: "Unto the furtherance of the gospel." Our superintendent gave his famous "thumb and finger" address in which he gave us a clear picture as to how all the local organizations of the Church and agencies of the Convention work together for the furtherance of the gospel. Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, our young people's worker, led the conference in a discussion of the missionary phase of our church activities. Rev. S. E. Madren, a pastor in the conference, presented the claims of the Christian Missionary Association and explained its functions, opportunities, and responsibilities.

The one important item of business to be considered was the effort on the part of the Congregational Christian Church and the Evangelical and Reformed Church to merge these two constituent bodies into one body to be known as the United Church of Christ. We are all interested in this question. It is a vitally important question. The members of the conference approached this problem in a sane, sensible way. There were differences of opinion certainly. The ones in favor had their say and were confident that they were right. Those who were not in favor spoke with conviction and were grim in their decision. There were no serious contentions nor bitterness of any kind. All were anxious to do the best thing for the Church and wanted to be guided by the Spirit that no mistake be made. When the vote was taken it was in favor of the merger by a safe majority.

This mid-year session was held at Bethlehem Christian Church. It is the custom of the conference to hold all spring sessions with this church. The Rev. Mr. Coon is the pastor. Mr. Coon is a young man with energy and ambition. He and Mrs. Coon have done a splendid work with the Salvation Army for a number of years. They are transferring their membership and interest to our church that they may have the privilege of locating in a given pastorate and concentrating their efforts and interest for the growth of the Church. They are serving the Bethlehem pastorate and are getting started in a fine way. We are glad to have them in our fellowship.

The Rev. R. L. Williamson, a member of the conference for years, conveyed by letter his regrets at not being able to attend. It was announced that Mr. Williamson was in bad health and it was necessary for him to go regularly to the hospital for treatment. The conference expressed its interest in a substantial way. I am sure that many of our people throughout the entire Convention will remember Brother Williamson. He was born and reared in our church and has served in different sections of our Convention. He and Mrs. Williamson will appreciate your interest and prayers. They are now making their home at Charlottesville, Va.

CONFERENCE APPORTIONMENTS.

The expenses of the College are continuous. Heat, lights, janitor services, upkeep, faculty salaries and all are daily. The Convention is aware of the continuous and continuing expenses of its college and has provided for its support on a similar basis. Our churches and Sunday schools are not expected and cannot make their contributions for the support of the College daily. They make their contributions, however, at stated periods throughout the year. The Convention has provided and requested that all Sunday schools in the Convention make a contribution for the support of the College at least on each fifth Sunday. These contributions to be forwarded promptly and to be added to the College's current funds in order that it may meet its obligations promptly. The majority of our churches endeavor to carry out this provision of the Convention. The College would feel much better if all of our Sunday schools would cooperate in carrying out this request of our Convention.

The College expresses its gratitude for the cooperation and support of the Church in our program of Christian education.

Socrates took his place on the couch; and when the meal was ended, and the libations offered, and after a hymn had been sung to the god, and there had been the usual ceremonies—as they were about to commence drinking, Pausanius reminded them that they had a bout yesterday, from which he and most of them were still suffering, and they ought to be allowed to recover, and not go on drinking today. . . . All agreed that drinking was not to be the order of the day. Then, said Eryximachus, as you are all agreed that drinking is to be voluntary, and there is to be no compulsion, I move, in the next place, that the flute-girl, who has just made her appearance, be told to go away; she may play to herself, or, if she has a mind, to the women who are within. But on this day let us have conversation.—Plato.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

DEAR FRIENDS:

In North Fukien, if there is a heavy fog early in the morning, you can be sure the sun will come out later and the day will be clear. It was such a morning while the fog was still covering the hilltops that we left Yankou to visit some of our interior churches. Pastor Joshua Fan, the district chairman, Liao Ho, the newly elected secretary of the Synod (corresponds to the superintendent of the Southern Convention), Lin Chang Liang, a recent graduate of the Foochow Theological Seminary, our load carriers and I made up the party. Pastor Fan told me, "No foreigner has been up there for over twenty years." I knew I would be a curiosity.

As we were leaving town, we met a young man who came running up excitedly. Pointing to me, he said, "When I was in the army during the war against Japan, I met you in Hunan, didn't I?" I had to confess I had never been to Hunan. Pastor Fan explained to him, "All foreigners look alike." I had to laugh because when I first came to China, I thought all Chinese looked alike. Now I know better, but I didn't realize that they thought we all looked alike, too.

That day, March 9, was market day in Yankou (there is a market every five days) so we passed quite a number of people coming to sell their goods. It was an interesting sight to see them coming with two baskets hanging from the ends of a pole across their shoulders. They were bringing rice, vegetables, paper, cowhides, firewood, etc. One man had two small pigs, one in each basket, and they were squealing for all they were worth. Some carried skins of animals they had trapped. One skin in particular is quite attractive. They call it leopard but it is much too small so I don't know exactly what animal it is. One farmer had two small animals which looked like a cross between a rat and a groundhog. The hair is used to make Chinese brush pens, I was told.

We met one of the members of the Lanhsia church who was on his way to Yankou. After apologizing many times for not being there to entertain us, Pastor Fan asked him how the road was. He answered: "Meiyou shreching" (literally "not anything" which is to say "no bandits"), so we need not fear.

When we left the river and walked back into the country, we saw the most heavily forested region I have seen yet in China. I was much surprised as in most areas, including Shaowu, the mountains are burned over yearly. "How is it there are so many trees?" I asked Pastor Fan. He answered that here lumbering was the chief industry and that the people really took care of their forests. A little later we saw people out planting trees. I was amazed to discover they were successful in planting cuttings from larger trees.

"Lanhsia and Taikou have an old custom," said Pastor Fan, "which is very practical. When a male child is born, all the neighbors gather at the parents' home to rejoice and feast together. Then they all spend one day planting a mountain side with trees. When the boy grows to be a man, he will have a good start in the lumber business.

The path we were traveling followed a small stream down which the logs were floated to the Min River. There they are made into rafts and floated to Foochow. In Foochow, they are loaded onto ships and sent to other parts of China. The Min River is full of rocks and rapids so it takes considerable skill to maneuver the rafts for 150 miles. Quite often they crack up.

We arrived in Talikou (thirteen miles from Yankou) for a one o'clock lunch at the home of one of the Christian families. It surely was a good sight to see a home with Bible scriptures on the wall. Upon surveying the church, we discovered it to be in pretty serious condition because of white ants—in fact it was about to fall down. There had been no Christian worker up there for years and only two of the five hundred families were still Christians. "Most of the former Christians have either died or gone back to idol worship," Mr. Hsi told us. He was a graduate of Han Mei, our Shaowu school and had remained true to his faith.

After a good lunch in the Hsi home we started off again for the remaining seven miles to Lanhsia where we intended to spend the night. It was a beautiful day and the path, following around the little stream between the mountains, led us past some gorgeous scenery. We arrived in Lanhsia about five o'clock. Within a few minutes word was passed around and a large delegation of Christians arrived to greet us. Lanhsia, with its 300 families, is smaller than Talikou, but the church was in good repair and clean. Although there had been no minister for over twelve years, there was still a loyal nucleus of members. Pastor Fan explained, "I have never known a group of Christians to work together so well; and to be so willing to keep things going by themselves." After supper we had a worship service in the church. It was a real thrill to sing with them "The Morning Light is Breaking, the Darkness Disappears." Here were people who had found the light and who had held on to it firmly through these many years.

The next morning, a meeting of the members was held. The spokesman for the group said, "We would like very much to have a minister come to us. We have had no one for so long.

MT. CARMEL JUNIOR MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The Junior Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Church, Walters, Va., has completed a most successful year of work. We met on the second Sunday of each month during the Sunday school period. At that time we had a worship program and studied our study books. We found them very interesting and we feel that we have a better understanding of the people of India and the work that our missionaries are doing.

We made a cut-out sand table scene of India, kept a notebook or individual scrapbook on all happenings of India that we saw in newspapers, magazines, etc. We also packed a box for the Junior Red Cross with each child contributing a small gift.

We are looking forward to a new year with much hope and a prayer in our hearts to do even better work.

MARY C. TURNER,
Leader.

We would especially welcome Mr. Lin Chiang Liang (recently graduated from the seminary), and we will be able to give him six hundred pounds of rice each year. We would like to request the North Fukien Synod to send him to us." We could not promise to grant their request as the Synod is a democratic body and must pass on all appointments, but it seemed to be a pretty good possibility to all of us. Mr. Lin is anxious to do rural work and he sees here a real opportunity to serve.

"In addition to the need for a preacher, we also have other needs we hope you can help us with," said the spokesman for the church again. "We badly need Sunday school literature, Bibles, hymnbooks. We can buy them if you will make them available for us." This we shall do. Secondly, we have no doctor trained in Western medicine. If a doctor can come up to visit us now and then it would help reduce our high death rate." Another man spoke up, "My wife and child died of small pox last year," he said, "there is no one to vaccinate us." We promised to talk to Dr. Riggs about this and see if he could come with us next time.

Then followed a worship service during which Secretary Liao commended the Christians for the fine way they had carried on and expressed the hope that before long the church would be financially self-supporting. Before leaving, we took some kodachrome pictures of the Christians, the church and the attractive wooden covered bridge which crosses the stream. After a good lunch, we started back toward Talikou.

"There's one problem we have in Lanhsia which I find hard to answer," said Mr. Lin to three of us ministers. "You Americans wouldn't understand this, but all Chinese families want to have a son. If there is no son, they consider life a failure. Several of the families have no son and they said to me, 'Here we have been Christian for twenty years and we have no son. Why?' It's mighty hard to answer them. I told them to help a boy in some other family whose opportunities are small. They see this is a good idea, but it doesn't entirely satisfy them."

This time the Talikou folks were expecting us. The local magistrate (similar to the county sheriff), himself a Christian, invited us to supper, and what a feast it was. He even served us orange pop (probably from Foochow). When we suggested a preaching service, he said, "They're having a Chinese opera on the main street tonight. How would you like to go there and have a service first? I can arrange it."

We all went to the square to find a large crowd gathered. Magistrate Yeh asked the performers to postpone the play awhile so we could have a worship service. They very courteously agreed. The group of us, including the magistrate, sang hymns, prayed and read the Bible together. Secretary Liao preached to the large throng of people, the vast majority of whom had never heard of Jesus Christ. I watched their upturned faces as he spoke. The expressions showed interest and curiosity, but not conviction. The Chinese have been exposed to many kinds of religions over 5,000 years. They are a very practical people, taking what they like from each religion and rejecting the rest. Upon first hearing, they very seldom accept an inclusive faith like Christianity. But, though there were no visible results, we hope that some seeds were sown which may someday produce fruit.

Following the service, we stayed to watch the first act of the opera. It was a story of ancient China. The costumes were bright reds, greens and blues, and very appealing to the eye. The characters all wore masks. Unfortunately, Chinese music sounds to us Westerners like one continual discord and the nasal voices of the singers didn't help. They say Chinese drama has not changed in the last 1,000 years and it seems quite primitive to us. I will say however, the ultimate moral effect on the audience is good (encouragement to be honest, generous, etc.), which is more than can be said of many Hollywood productions.

The next morning found us back on the road to Yankou. As we walked along we talked about church and synod problems just as we ministers used to do in the Southern Convention on the way to conferences and conventions, and it was just as profitable. I thought to myself, "The North Fukien ministers are just as fine and consecrated as any in the world and it is a real privilege to work with them in this great work."

As I write this I am on a sampan on the way up to Tsiangle. We have the portable generator and slide projector with us which Pastor Fan is anxious to use in his own church. During my two weeks in Yankou, we showed pictures four times to capacity audiences. Last Sunday afternoon, we tried to divide it up a bit. In the afternoon the children were especially invited to come; in the evening it was reserved for adults. The same pictures were shown both times. Result: the children came twice; there was no keeping them out. The Elsi-anna Wood slides on the Life of Christ were especially well received. The pastor explains each picture as it is shown. As Mr. Lin Chang Liang says, "When they hear with their ears and see with their eyes, they don't easily forget." We hope he's right for that's why we came to China—to tell the story of Jesus to those who know Him not.

There is one incident on our return trip I want to tell you about in conclusion. As we neared Talikou, we stopped to see a Buddhist temple which has recently been fixed up and which was clean. Most of them are falling to pieces and uncared for. "Why," I asked, "do images all have such terrifying expressions on their faces." Mr. Lin's answer is worth remembering: "The method of the Buddhist priests is to frighten the

Dear Little Friends:

Are you planning an April Fool prank today?

Once there was a little girl named Jean. She liked jokes and pranks very much. But on this April Fool's Day, she knew she wouldn't be able to enjoy any tricks. That is what she thought. This is what happened:

Jean had the measles and was just feeling well enough to sit up in her bed. The shades in her room were pulled low and everything seemed very quiet and still when in came mother with Uncle Jack.

"Look, Jean," said Uncle Jack, "Aunti sent you something." Jean looked a little closer. It was a big white bowl with a napkin over it. She thought very quickly of the many things it could be—soup, custard, or ice cream. She hoped it was chocolate ice cream.

Mother said, "Don't you want to know what it is?" Jean nodded.

"Jack, does she need a spoon?" Without waiting for an answer mother hurried to get one.

"Now take a peek."

Slowly she pulled off the napkin. Imagine her surprise when she looked in the bowl and saw only a walnut. One walnut. Jean was trying to laugh and not to cry. She had wanted something special. Then Uncle Jack began to laugh as mother came back.

"Mother, look at my nut."

"Why don't you open it, Jean?" asked Uncle Jack.

Slowly she started to crack the nut. It came open very easily. Inside there wasn't a nut kernel at all. Instead there was a piece of paper. When Jean unfolded it there were some words written on it in big print:

APRIL FOOL.

Jean laughed and laughed and felt better. Then she happened to turn the paper over and on the other side Auntie and Uncle had written: "When you are well we will take you for a ride and get you an ice cream soda."

"Oh, Uncle Jack!" exclaimed Jean, "this is the nicest April Fool's Day I ever knew."

All the day Jean kept the little April Fool nut and slip of paper.

* * * * *

I hope that all your pranks for the day will be as pleasant as this one. I want to thank those of you who remembered me with Easter greetings and also for the many comments I have received about the White Pilgrim. I shall be writing about some of the great great men who have worked as ministers and helpers of God in our church.

RUDE GREETINGS.

By JANIE ELLIOT.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Hi, Smith!" This was the greeting from seven-year-old Maud to a lady entering the grocery. It was echoed by her chum, Jane. "Hi, Smith!"

The three being alone on one side of the shop, the lady's first impulse was to ignore such a rude greeting from her neighbor's children. But

CONSCIENCE.

"Good-bye," I said to my conscience,

"Good-bye for aye and aye."

And I pushed her hands off harshly,

And I turned my face away,

And conscience, smitten sorely,

Returned not from that day.

But the time when my spirit

And I said, "Come back," to my conscience,

"For I long to see thy face."

But conscience cried, "I cannot,

Remorse sits in my place."

on second thought she decided this was not the best course to take, so she said, in a friendly way, "That is not my name—I am Mrs. Smith. However, maybe that is too hard for you to say. It makes three 's' sounds in a row, doesn't it?" Then she mused aloud: "Miss-is Smith. Yes, there are three 's' sounds. I expect that's too much for your little tongues." And Mrs. Smith looked very sorry for them.

"I can say that," flashed Maud. "Mrs. Smith."

"So can I," echoed Jane. "Mrs. Smith."

"Why how lovely!" exclaimed the lady. "You can say it perfectly—as well as any grown-up person. That's fine! Now, shall we have some peanuts?" and she motioned to a clerk.

As the nuts were being divided into two eagerly-held pockets, the wise lady whispered, "Remember, dears, it's always Mrs. Smith."

A few days later, while she was hanging out the dish towel, there came a clear voice from the highway, "Hello, Mrs. Smith!" and then the echo from Jane, "Hello, Mrs. Smith!"

As Mrs. Smith waved enthusiastically in reply, she congratulated herself that the annoying discourtesy had been so completely and easily reversed.

Soon after this, the writer accepted an invitation to an afternoon tea. The hostess' little granddaughter opened the door. A Mrs. Blair and I, as well as several other ladies, entered together.

"Doesn't our little portress look lovely in her pretty blue frock?" said Mrs. Blair pleasantly.

We were about to agree, but our smiles were frozen on our lips when the child suddenly turned and shrilled, "You can just stop—you, Ellen Bond, you!—you're only trying to kid me!"

There it was again! Who was to blame for this youthful rudeness? Was the child merely reproducing the manner of speech commonly heard in her home? Did her mother think it was 'cute' to hear her six-year-old daughter call grown-up friends by their first names? Doubtless, she would have been as shocked as we had she heard this particular outcome.

No number of pretty dresses can make a rude child attractive. Fathers and mothers should realize that without politeness and some charm of manner even the daughters of highly respected parents are not acceptable in cultured society. Besides, rudeness to neighbors and other acquaintances is likely to be accompanied by rudeness to parents.

A simple way of preventing a child from forming the habit of using first names when addressing adults would be for the mother to be sure to use the title of each of her friends when speaking of them—Miss Stone, Mrs. Hough, Mr. Roxer. It should be Aunt Carrie and Cousin Sadie, of course, but always Mrs. Bond—not Ellen Bond.

If mothers let their little girls speak rudely, unchecked, when they are six, these children are likely to be among those who at sixteen are difficult to manage, and who at twenty-six have little remembrance or understanding of any way of assisting in the development of desirable behavior patterns—though great may be their need—for the benefit of their own children.

I haven't got to make over the universe; I only have to do my own small job, and to look up often at the trees, and the hills, and the sky, and be friendly with all men.—Grayson.

IMPRESSIONS OF AMERICA.

By MISS JEAN FRASER, Sec'y, Youth Department, World Council of Churches, Geneva Switzerland.

A great part of the value of international travel lies in interpreting one part of the world to another and it is only fair that the traveler should give his host the chance to correct false impressions as well as to see himself through the eyes of a stranger.

Hospitality during my six weeks in America, was as generous as I had expected from hearing many travelers' tales and I have never eaten such a variety of food. In one thing, however, I found the groups of Americans I had met abroad had not prepared me for the real situation. I had always met them in inter-racial groups and I had not realized to what extent they were still pioneering. I was thrilled with the boldness of the idea of a nation of equal citizens of many races. It is surely something worth working for even at a high cost.

The size of the United States I knew theoretically but I had not reckoned with the practical consequences in national organization. I was intensely conscious of the difference between Europe with its sovereign nations, mostly comparable in size to a single state, many with only one dominant form of Protestantism and the vastness of the United States with its multitude of variations of Protestantism. I was able to see the extent of the achievement of national organizations in the meetings of the International Council of Religious Education at Grand Rapids and of the Foreign Missions Conference and the Missionary Education Movement at Buck Hill Falls. Yet, the enthusiasm with which Americans tell their organizational story is apt to meet with little response in Europe, for it has not yet its counterpart in any large scale in Europe where traditions of local autonomy are still strong.

Perhaps my arrival in February in time for Race Relations Sunday, the birthdays of Lincoln and Washington and Brotherhood Week made me more conscious than I might have been at another time of year of the effort and energy which is still needed to weld this continent of many peoples and many faiths into a nation. The churches are obviously to the fore in seeking to strengthen healthy community life and the recognition of human rights, but this very position puts Protestantism to a difficult test. Can the churches emphasize that which Christians hold in common with all men of good will and at the same time keep the cutting edge of the Gospel with its call for decision and its power to divide? This question, I believe, goes deep into church life in every country.

One disappointment has been to discover that the American churches are no more successful than those of any other country I know in a ministry to the "masses." They seem on the whole to have abandoned the religious for the social ministry in the industrial areas of great cities, leaving the Christian message to be interpreted by "shop front" churches and sects or by other institutions. This suggests either that church membership as we understand it is not a necessary part of the Gospel message or that the industrial worker—typical product of modern society—is not capable of Christian faith. The difficulties of a constantly changing population and of the predominance of Roman Catholics among the immigrant workers has just been pointed out to me, but for the sake of the spiritual health of any church it seems that it cannot retreat behind an income or occupation bracket. It needs the contribution of faith, fellowship and experience which the industrial worker can bring. This is a pioneer mission field of primary importance throughout the world.

The churches might well reply that they have enough on their hands already. To be in the United States is to realize afresh how decisive is her position in the world and how important is the action of the churches. Their part in the ecumenical movement and contact with Christians of other countries gives them an important responsibility in public affairs. The economic power which now rests with the American people puts them in a position in relation to other countries and to the ecumenical movement in which it is very difficult to maintain relations of mutual confidence and understanding. A great deal is being asked of the United States in the war of dollars but even more in the war of charity in the strict sense of Christian love, which understands the reasons for misunderstanding.

This brings me to our last point—a fear that misunderstanding may arise through differing understanding of the word "ecumenical" in different parts of the world. It does not mean the same thing as inter-denominational or multi-denominational, though that may be implied; it does not mean the same thing as international. It means the church in any one place acting as representing the church—throughout—all—the-world. Therefore it means increasing knowledge of others who claim to be churches; therefore it demands common action by the congregations in one place but above all it means to be the responsible witness to Jesus Christ, responsible not only in that place but also for the world-wide mission of Christianity.

I think of this sense of the word "ecumenical" particularly as I go back to Europe where for so many international church relations are limited or impossible. These churches are also a living part of the ecumenical movement. They live in conscious fellowship with all who seek to bear faithful witness to Jesus Christ. They would make one appeal above all others to American Christians, "Brethren, pray for us."

ALCOHOL BY OUNCES.

In a glass of beer we have ten ounces containing five per cent of alcohol by volume, or one-half ounce of alcohol. If three drinkers are sitting at a table drinking glass for glass, one beer, one a highball and one a cocktail, at the end of a sociable evening, each having had five drinks, the beer drinker will have had two and one-half ounces of alcohol and the highball and cocktail drinkers five ounces of alcohol each. Will any or all be drunk?

All will be under the influence of alcohol. Whether any or all will be drunk will depend upon the individual drinker, his weight and size, his degree of tolerance to alcohol, the amount of food he has consumed, and what his mental and physical conditions are, and the time consumed between each drink.—The Foundation Says, December, '47-January, '48.

Alcohol increases the risk of bodily infection; it is injurious to health, and shortens life.

GOD'S MESSAGE TO A PEOPLE IN EXILE.

LESSON II—APRIL 11, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: A new heart will I also give you, and a new spirit will I put within you.—Ezek. 36:26.

LESSON: Ezekiel 18, 34; 36:22-38; 37:1-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ezek. 34:25-31.

The Law of Personal Responsibility.

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Thus did this great prophet of the long ago state the law of personal responsibility. We accept it, at least in theory, today without making much over it. But it was not thus in Ezekiel's day. Indeed, these words must have come as a shock to the people to whom he spoke and wrote. For they were people who were handicapped by the thought that they were hopelessly bound by the consequences of their father's sins. They had as a background for their theological and religious thinking the idea of the tribe or the nation as the unit. They thought that their trouble was due alone to the sins of their fathers.

To be sure, fathers do bequeath to their children some dire effects of their sins and wrong-doings and mistakes. A terrible example is the recent World War II. The blindness and the greed and the selfishness and the prejudices of the past generation furnished the seed-bed for the tragic, global war with all its devastation and death and despair. But what Ezekiel was emphasizing was that although fathers can bring upon their children the effects of their sins, they do not bequeath to them guilt for their sins. Each individual is responsible for his sin—the soul that sinneth, it shall die. This was a revolutionary doctrine then, as it is a disturbing doctrine now. Some of the hardest words to say are the words "I have sinned." We blame everything else, our heredity, our environment, our circumstances, our companions. We rationalize and temporize. We seldom have the grace to say, "I have sinned." "I am guilty." Our modern world needs this stern message from Ezekiel. We need to be reminded that every one of us shall give an account of himself to God. Outside forces may bring terrific pressure to bear upon a man; companions and one's fellowman can tempt him; but ultimately he is responsible for his own acts, and he will be held accountable for them. This man, Ezekiel, was a discoverer even as Jeremiah was, and as Columbus was and as Peary and Byrd were.

A God Who Cares.

As was so often the case with the other prophets, and with Jesus himself, Ezekiel could be tender as well as stern. Even as he proclaimed the judgment of God upon the nation and upon the individual, even so does he proclaim the tenderness and the compassion of God for His people and for the individual. And like so many of God's servants, he, too, used the figure of a good shepherd. His words as recorded in the thirty-fourth chapter read almost like the words of the Master in His picture of Himself as the "Good Shepherd." In language which the people readily understood, Ezekiel touched upon first and then another of the offices of a shepherd, his care, his concern, his courage, his healing ministry, his yearning for the lost sheep, his leadership and guidance, his shepherd heart. This message came as a source of comfort to the exiles, living as they were in a strange land, and feeling that their case was hopeless.

Men and women need to be assured of the care and concern of God. There are all too many who are lonely and lost because they do not know God in the fullness of His concern and His care for them. They fear Him, or they evade Him, or they ignore Him because they misunderstand Him. The universe is friendly, there is heart at the core of things, God cares.

A New Heart.

The solution of their problem was not to be found in a new program, but in a change of heart. Reformation was to come by transformation. "A new heart will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you." This is the only hope of the world—changed men. Regeneration must supplant revolution. There are many who think that if people only had better homes, or more money, or more leisure, or better jobs, or more things, that almost automatically they would become good people. The sad fact is that they would still be the same selfish, sinful people they always were unless they had a new heart. The hope, and the only hope of the world lies in men who have been born again, men who have God's spirit within their hearts, men who live not by law but by love. Only Christ can do this. Christianity as a religion of redemption is the world's hope.

people into doing as they tell them. Pointing to this fearsome idol they say, 'If you don't obey, this god will punish you.' That is why we Christians so greatly emphasize the love of God. We Christians serve God not because of fear, but because He loves us."

DICK JACKSON.

RECONSTRUCTION IN THE PHILIPPINES.

More than in any other of our war-torn mission fields the Philippines have been favored by a larger return to pre-war status as to missionary personnel. All of those in the field in 1941 have returned to the work except Dr. and Mrs. Laubach who have been released for world-wide service with the status of Missionaries-at-Large, the Scaffs who will not return to the Islands, the Woodwards who are home on sick leave, and Mrs. Tong held here by the educational needs of her children. As new members of the mission we are glad to introduce Rev. and Mrs. David Hamm, Rev. and Mrs. Elton Brown and Rev. Jesse B. Wolfe. Along with this fortunate situation goes also a better opportunity to rebuild and restore former work than is generally true in other countries. This is because war surplus supplies and native lumber are available, making it possible to give material aid to our Filipino Christians in their program of resoration of the destroyed one hundred and eleven churches on Mindanao, to plan for the future of the demolished buildings which house the work for the Moros in Dansalan, and for the immediate erection of the hospital at Davao.

Years of cooperation between the American and Presbyterian Boards have led to plans for pooling work by January, 1948, under the direction of the United Evangelical Church. This will be the end of the Mission as an organized group except as it continues in the program at Silliman University, and in the work—for the time being at least—among the Moros in Lanao. The plans for yet wider cooperation under the new Church of the past. It lacks the dignity of a battlefield, for it has never been fought over.

Although the Canadians no longer worry lest we invade their boundaries, their reaction to our size has led them to maintain their ties with Great Britain. Everybody likes to feel that they are a part of something big. We are prone to boast of our numbers and wealth. If Canada were an entirely separate and self-contained country she would feel herself hopelessly over-shadowed by the United States. She escapes from a possible inferiority complex by reminding herself that she is part of something even more imposing than her overgrown neighbor—the British Empire, or to use the newer and better term, the British Commonwealth of Nations. The French on the one hand and the United States on the other have tended to heighten English speaking Canada's loyalty to Great Britain.

Yet, hundreds of ties are drawing the two neighbors together. As matters stand today Canada enjoys just as much freedom and possibly a bit more democracy than do we in the United States. The only actual tie with the mother country is that the final appeal in legal matters is carried to England in lieu of a body corresponding to our Supreme Court. This has the advantage of assuring a more disinterested hearing than could be had at home! The more familiar we become with the English parliamentary system both in the mother country and in Canada the greater will become our admiration for both its fairness and its flexibility.

Meanwhile the "invisible line" is constantly being crossed and re-crossed. Travelers between New York and Chicago by way of Detroit go through Canada without even waking up! Thousands of Canadians from the eastern provinces have migrated to the United States, while many of the settlers in the prairie provinces of the West have come from our side of the boundary. Each country tends to take its vacations in the other. On a Canadian holiday a host of bargain hunters swarm across the line into the United States, while during the summer months automobiles from the States equal or outnumber those from the Dominion on many of the main highways of Canada. All the eastern provinces need is to finish improving their roads and then to hire some good press agents and a large portion of the United States will drive over to visit them. When it comes to the radio, neither country can keep out the entertainment, religion, or politics of the other. The only difference in the movies is that at the end the Canadians stand up and sing, "God Save the King!" All our magazines circulate in Canada. The two countries think the same thoughts.

Looking ahead, there is every prospect that the relations between the two neighbors will be increasingly on a basis of both mutual understanding and substantial equality. As Canada's population increases and her industries develop we will think of her less as a nephew or a cousin and more as a brother. In freedom these two nations will fulfil their destiny by walking together in peace.

PHILIPPINE RECONSTRUCTION.

Christ in the Philippines as laid down by the Planning Conference in September, 1946, include the Presbyterians, the American Board, the Evangelical United Brethren, and the Disciples. The completion of the proposed program will result in there being only two Protestant Churches of any size in the Philippine Islands, the United Church and the Methodists. Since the feeling of cooperation between these two is good, and the spheres of work well defined, we can be hopeful for the future of the church program.

The Island of Mindanao is the special responsibility of the American Board. There are new opportunities there unknown before because of the thousands pouring in monthly from the northern islands to the sparsely settled fertile provinces of Mindanao challenging the churches and individual Christians to help these homesteaders to find new locations, to get settled, and to make contacts with the nearest church as quickly and easily as possible. The fact that these are often in new and therefore unchurched areas puts a heavy responsibility on the United Evangelical Church which has today only one pastor to every four churches, a sobering lack due to death and loss in the ministry during the war years.

Another drain on the available leadership comes from the call for church high schools in practically every larger center throughout the Island. As it is, the pastors who see the need and answer the call are many, making the situation even more serious. The resulting schools, carried on in the face of much hardship, are doing fine work and giving the education and influence which will result in training strong leadership for the future, but the present outlook is one which causes a good deal of anxiety in our church circles, as one minister after another goes into the educational field.

This points up the pressing need for adequate training for leaders, both men and women, the need being answered by our College of Theology at Silliman University. To meet this adequately, however, there must be more funds for scholarships, for dormitories to house not only single men students but married couples as well, for a library, and for a chapel.

The work for the Moros which was started by Dr. Laubach and almost completely destroyed during the war, is, for the present, considered outside the sphere of the United Evangelical Church because of the uniqueness of its problems in its service to a Mohammedan people. That the Moros are eager for the resumption of the medical, education, and social work carried on in the past in Dansalan was clearly shown by the appeal for the Laubachs' return and the oft-reiterated appreciation of their work in the province. Rev. and Mrs. David Hamm have already moved into the one available house in the city and are gathering the Moros around them, having plans under way to reestablish many phases of the work that were destroyed. The Laubachs' return for a short visit in July and August, 1947, for survey, advice and inspiration was of inestimable value in bridging the gulf between the old and the new. Without doubt this is one of the most difficult of fields, the hardest group to reach in the Philippines. One in which, however, there is reason for deep satisfaction and a sense of achievement because these people are more accessible to the Christian message than are any other Moslem people in the whole world.—Missions are People.

Dear Friends:

Sometimes I think farmers have about as hard a time as any other class of people. It is natural that we think the other fellow has the easiest job. But if we could only see the other side I guess we could think different. Farmers have the weather to contend with. We can plan our work for a day ahead, but during the night it will probably rain and knock our plans asunder.

Last week the ground was nearly dry enough to plant Irish potatoes. We had scattered manure on the land with the intention of working it up into a seed bed and planting the next day. That night there came a heavy rain and our plans did not mature.

We have built a real poultry house and have already quite a number of laying hens in it. We are now building a fence around it so we can let the hens graze in rye, etc. We find they do better when they can have something green to eat. It is real nice when you can take a basket and go to the poultry house and get five or six dozen nice fresh eggs.

We have just finished painting the rooms on the first floor of "Johnston Hall." They look very pretty now. That puts all our buildings in good shape. We first thought, as we had to put John's-Manville celotex overhead on the first floor in the reception hall, that we would paint the walls and make the room look like a finished job, which we did. Then the dining room was so out of balance that we had to paint it. When the dining room was finished it made the kitchen look so out of balance we just had to paint it, too. To make it all look like a finished job, we had to go over all the rooms, but it looks very pretty. We still lack some new furniture to complete the job in the reception hall.

We need two living room suits to put in the two corners. Each should consist of a settee and two chairs, and should be upholstered in plastic, so when it gets soiled it can be washed off with a wet cloth.

What Men's Baracca Class or Ladies Bible Class would like to give one? It would be a nice gift and will certainly add to the beauty of the room.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION APPOINTEES.

Three new vice-chairmen of the North American Administrative Committee of the World Council of Christian Education have just been elected according to an announcement from the Council's headquarters at 156 Fifth Avenue, in New York City. The new officers are all prominent laymen and they are Lindsley F. Kimball, Francis S. Harmon and Frank E. Baker. All are active in religious circles.

Mr. Kimball is now personally associated on a full-time basis with Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in various philanthropic, civic and corporate affairs. A member of the Congregational Church, Mr. Kimball holds degrees from Columbia and New York University and is a recipient of the Medal for Merit for his work with the United Service Organization.

Mr. Harmon is vice-president of the Motion Picture Association and of the Motion Picture Export Association. In 1929 he was elected president of the National YMCA, being the youngest man ever elected to that office.

Mr. Baker is president of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange and widely known in financial circles. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Methodist Hospital of Philadelphia and of the Board of Trustees of Drew University. He is vice-president of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Church. One of the things of which Mr. Baker is proudest is his teaching of the men's Bible class of Bala-Cynwyd Church of Philadelphia for the past twenty-five years. Recently, he was designated as a lay delegate to the first meeting of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam, Holland, next summer. He was educated at Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill., and graduated with a B. S.

degree from the University of Pennsylvania in 1911.

Rev. Harry H. Kalas, new director of educational evangelism for the International Council of Religious Education, will join the staff April 1, according to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary. Mr. Kalas will succeed Dr. Harry C. Munro, who resigned recently after nineteen years on the Council staff to become professor of religious education in Brite College of the Bible, Texas Christian University. The new director will begin on half-time basis April 1 and will become full time May 10, Dr. Ross said. In this position, Mr. Kalas will be the director for the National Christian Teaching Mission, sponsored jointly with the Department of Evangelism and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. As executive secretary of Iowa Inter-church Council since 1945, Mr. Kalas has been active in promoting and directing teaching missions in that state. In recent months he conducted missions in Sioux City and Red Oak, Iowa.

CHURCH WORLD SERVICE.

the channels of Church World Service.

During the two months, there were 340 shipments of goods sent to aid the destitute peoples in 30 nations overseas. Chief recipients were European nations. Thirty-five per cent of the materials went to China, Japan, Korea, Pakistan, Okinawa and the Philippines. Most important items were two and one-half million pounds of staple foods and vitamins and a similar amount of clothing and shoes. To aid in restoring health to thousands in the disease-ridden areas of Asia, CWS shipped more than $25,000 worth of drugs, medical supplies and surgical equipment.

Help to the religious life of people in many countries went in the form of hymn books to Japan, theological libraries to Siam, China, Yugoslavia, Germany and Palestine, and other religious literature. Pastors in several countries received typewriters, mimeographing equipment and bicycles to aid them in their ministry.

One important shipment during the first part of the year was made up of seventeen pre-fabricated buildings, valued at $27,000, sent to Japan. Most of them are being used to replace churches and mission schools that were destroyed in the war. Four provide homes for Japanese pastors and mission workers.

In Memoriam

COX.

On February 9, 1948, the First Church, Greensboro, N. C., suffered a great loss in the sudden death of Mr. Basil S. Cox.

Mr. Cox was born September 15, 1893, a son of the late Rev. L. I. Cox who started the work in Greensboro about fifty years ago.

Mr. Cox had been a loyal member of First Church for twenty-seven years and took an active interest in all phases of his church's work. At the time of his passing he was active as a Deacon and as a Trustee.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Mabel Moffitt Cox of Greensboro, one daughter, Mrs. W. E. Schmidt (Dorothy) of Silver Springs, Md., and one son, Lenneous, of State College, Raleigh, besides a number of brothers and sisters.

W. E. WISSEMAN.

COX.

We, the members of the official board of the First Church, Greensboro, wish to express our deep sense of loss in the passing of one of our most beloved members, Basil S. Cox, who died on February 9, 1948, and to pay tribute to his memory as our very dear friend and co-worker.

Brother Cox was a deacon of our church for more than eighteen years, was director of finance of our church for several years and took an active part in our Sunday school. He was quiet, sincere, unassuming and devoted to every interest in our church, his home, and his community. His strong Christian character and his life of loyalty and service challenge us to follow in his footsteps, and inspire us to live better, more useful lives of devotion for our fellow man.

Therefore, be it resolved that we bow in humble submission to the divine will of the Heavenly Father in the death of our friend and brother, and that we extend our sympathy to the bereaved.

PARSONS.

A faithful and beloved member of Berea Christian Church, Mrs. Betty Whitehurst Parsons passed away on March 5, 1948. She was the wife of Mr. Herbert Shepherd Parsons, and daughter of Mrs. Evoleen Onley Whitehurst and the late Samuel C. Whitehurst. She was a native and life-long resident of Great Bridge, and a member of the faculty of Great Bridge High School.

Her church and community knew her greatest happiness was experienced in giving herself in service to others.

Surviving are her husband, mother, and four sisters, Mrs. Lola Curling, Mrs. C. P. Cannon, Mrs. S. P. Frost of Great Bridge, Mrs. Luther Gilbert of Princess Ann County and one brother, Mr. C. E. Whitehurst of Fentress, Va.

Funeral services were conducted from Berea Church on Monday afternoon, March 8, 1948, by the Rev. E. N. Clark, pastor of the church; Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk; Rev. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk; and Rev. R. W. Mapp, of Centerville Baptist Church, Fentress, Va.

Mrs. Parsons will be greatly missed by her church, community and many, many friends everywhere. To pay tribute, and desiring to express love and respect from the church, be it therefore resolved:

1. We are grateful for such a true friend and member, one who had a strong Christian character and lovable personality. May each of us strive to be more like her.

2. That we extend to her bereaved husband, and family our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the Comforter, whose grace is sufficient for every need.

THE PRODIGAL URN.

University, with its edifices and sacred crypts for immortal Methodists, about two miles from the church which bears his name, in the family burial ground, reluctant spades open up six feet of Chatham County soil to receive the earthly remains of the ninety-two-year-old veteran of the cross. Another mansion in glory is occupied.

Twenty-eight years later the Southern Convention of Christian Churches dedicate a marker to his memory on the spot where lies imprisoned the sacred ashes of its founder.

It is fitting to perpetuate his blessed memory; it is right to allow our hearts to swell with pride for the man who suffered the birth pangs of our denomination; it is natural for the places he visited and the churches he founded to feel the air charged with his religious fervor. Surely his humble, sincere manner, his Christ-like spirit, must be ingrained in the monument over his resting place; it must be necessary to guard his shrine from crusaders who would want to carry away his sacred remains bit by bit; it is certainly the desire of every member of the church he founded to make a pilgrimage to the O'Kelly tomb to offer a prayer of gratitude. Come with me.

In Chapel Hill we stop to inquire the way. We hire a guide. Out of town on Highway No. 54, off down Highway No. 55, to the end of the hard surface, along a sand-clay road we drive to O'Kelly's Chapel, the church founded by O'Kelly. I pull over to stop, but the guide motions on. After two more miles down a side road we park the car, get out, and walk toward a clump of bushes. We stumble over an unplowed field as a farmhouse looms in the distance. Unable to keep up with the guide, I slowly fall behind, perplexed at the utter desolation around me. At last the guide stops, tears away some fallen brush, chops down some small pines and bushes, takes out an old rag and seems to be wiping the leaves and rubbish from a tall marble shaft. Surely this is the entrance to the shrine and he is ringing the bell for the attendant to let us in! Not so.

I came; I saw; I was humiliated. No shrine, no hovering angels, no crusader, no guard, no beautiful gardens, no praying saints—just a jungle of wild growth, a sunken mound, a simple monument, a neglected and uncared-for resting place of James O'Kelly, Champion of Religious Freedom.

A "prodigal" urn kicked about a college campus, a bleak, forgotten, forsaken tomb, are these a proper memorial for the "Father of the Southern Convention?"

YOUR GIFTS TO OVERSEAS RELIEF.

Hunger, nakedness, cold, disease, are the words often needed to describe the suffering of millions in war-ravaged lands overseas. They bring to mind pictures of bare-footed children plodding to unheated school rooms in the rain, of meagre dinners placed on bare tables before thin-faced youngsters, of families crowded into basement rooms, of women waiting in long lines at food stores and scourging the country for scraps of wood to burn.

Often the individual simply shuts the whole picture from his mind for he feels there is nothing he can do about it. Or he feels that having contributed to funds for distressed people at home and abroad, and having given to two or three clothing drives, he has done all he can.

Yet, giving does not have to be great to help the work of church relief. Forty-three cents (43c) sent through your church relief fund will buy enough dried milk to give an undernourished child whole milk for four days; 48c will buy enough relief cereal to supply four days' basic food; 15c will deliver a pound of needed food or clothing overseas.

And in spite of many clothing drives, most households still have something to give. Seasons change, children grow. And beside clothing, shoes and bedding, worn sheets, towels and table cloths, surplus silverware, kitchen utensils, soap, candle stubs, hand tools and sewing supplies are all needed to make life in the devastated areas possible. These should be sent to the Church World Service Center at New Windsor, Maryland, for packing and shipment overseas.

To lighten the task of packing relief gifts, barracks bags, for collecting and shipping relief supplies to the Center are available without cost.

Missionary Partnership

The main lines of missionary policy were given in the command to make disciples of all nations and to teach them all that Christ commanded. Each church is committed to the total evangelistic task. Today that means the conversion of nominal Christians and the recovery of vast areas that have fallen away from Christianity in the lands of the older churches, as well as the proclamation of the Gospel to those who have never heard it and the winning of them to the Christian faith. There is one task. It is only emphases that differ in various countries. While the older churches still have much to contribute to the life of the younger churches, they need in the fulfillment of their charge the rich spiritual resources that are being developed in the younger churches. Indeed, part of the wonder of tomorrow that is here lies in the fact that the church in the United States and the church in England need a Kagawa quite as much as the church in India needs a Stanley Jones. This truth grows ever more apparent.

Opportunities far beyond the good beginnings already made must be created for young church leaders to visit in older churches, to enter into and understand the life of those churches, to bear their own distinctive witness to numerous congregations, and to meet for consultation with mission boards and church leaders. Already some churches have invited ministers of the younger churches to serve their pulpits as temporary pastors or to teach in their theological seminaries for longer or shorter periods. The time has now come when denominational mission boards should follow the example of some of the great interdenominational bodies and invite recognized leaders of the younger churches to serve as consultants and secretaries for a length of time to be worked out with the church concerned. All such development of these exchanges is to be encouraged.

The inviting of younger church leaders for temporary service in lands of the older churches is never of course to be pursued to the detriment of the younger churches. The movement of leaders from younger to older churches and from younger to other younger churches must always proceed within the framework of the total world mission of the church. The allocation by priority of available personnel will be to those areas where that personnel will most effectively aid the total mission. This is the two-way movement of "missionaries" in the tomorrow that is here.

Today church leaders are working in a new frame of reference. The recent past has seen the emergence of a world church—an ecumenical Christian fellowship as broad as the inhabited world. Increasingly, those who serve the churches will do so with a consciousness of their allegiance to this fellowship rather than to a particular denomination in a particular country. The old distinction between the national pastor and the "missionary" is rapidly disappearing. Both are laborers in a particular country for the church of Christ whose Gospel is for all the world. In the same way the old distinction between "sending" and "receiving" churches and "older" and "younger" churches is passing. Yet in accordance with God's provision of varying gifts in different individuals that Paul understood so well, in the tomorrow that is here different members of the world church will have varying responsibilities and contributions.

A Staggering Command: An Amazing Hope

By DR. KENNETH SCOTT LATOURETTE
Yale University

None of us fully grasps the amazing scope of the Great Commission. Read Matthew 28:18-20.

The little band of disciples was ordered to make disciples of all mankind in the same sense that they themselves were disciples. They were to teach them to obey all the injunctions which Jesus had given to the little inner group. This meant conforming to seemingly impossible ideals of the Sermon on the Mount.

For instance, according to the standards there set forth, all men are to love their enemies, they are to be absolutely truthful, and they are to subordinate economic motives to seeking the Kingdom of God. In our day this would mean that non-Communists would love Communists and Communists would love non-Communists—if, indeed, there would be any Communists in the Russian and Marxist sense of that term.

It would mean the end of race discriminations. It would mean that no nation or class would seek luxuries and even comforts at the expense of others. It would mean the radical and complete transformation of human culture, and institutions. Yet how absolutely necessary to man's highest welfare!

We all know that such a world would be heaven on earth. We know that in it God's full purpose for man would be realized and that this purpose will not be fully realized until such a world comes. Moreover, when we stop to think of it, we know that if the Great Commission had not been explicitly given, it is implicit in the Lord's Prayer. It is an expansion of the petition: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." If we pray that prayer sincerely, we will do what we can to make it effective. We are aware, to be sure, that we cannot bring in the Kingdom. The Kingdom is God's gift. Yet, we must even now live as citizens of that Kingdom and endeavor, hopeless as that may seem to be, to attain to its fullness.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION LAYMEN.

The Laymen's Movement for a Christian World consists of a group of men who recognize the power that religion could have if it were applied intelligently and fearlessly to all the aspects of everyday life. It is believed by this group that the laws of God for human conduct provide a workable pattern for living, and that the Spirit of God is the conditioning force that allows them to understand those laws and put them to work in an atmosphere of mutual faith and understanding with their fellow men.

It is their conviction also that the secret of Christian living is contained in the two commands—"Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind and with all thy strength"—and, "Love thy neighbor as thyself"—that the use of either command is good, but that the effectiveness is greatly reduced unless a balance is maintained between the two.

The urgency of the present world situation makes it critically necessary for these convictions to be taken out of the realm of vague generalities and put into detailed, practical operation in economics, politics and every other field of human endeavor.

It is the purpose of the Laymen's Movement to help discover these laws and to learn how to apply them.

The Laymen's Movement was spontaneously organized in 1941 by a group of laymen in New York City. It was incorporated in 1942. No attempt at mass membership has ever been undertaken—such growth being felt to be contrary to the design and purpose of a genuinely spiritual reconstruction among laymen. Yet, there are now active members in nearly all the states, Canada and New Zealand. An office is maintained at 347 Madison Avenue, New York 17, New York.

The Movement functions in several ways through:

1. Individual contacts of its members and the example which they try to set as practical Christians.
2. A gathering of men around the luncheon table in business districts and group meetings which are held in homes and which follow specific lines of Christian study.
3. Small conferences on specific problems such as the application of Christian principles to employer-employee relations.
4. Special projects on human relations, community tensions, social adjustments and world peace.
5. The Christian Laymen, a bulletin which is published regularly.

A special contact with the churches is maintained through the observance of Laymen's Sunday, which is sponsored each year in October. On this day, pastors are requested to invite laymen to give their interpretation of the application of Christian principles to everyday affairs.

NEW POTENTIAL IN LAY ACTIVITIES.

Calling for the building of a strong organization of lay people of all denominations in each community of America to work together in their community for "a growing moral and Christian culture," Thomas West of Chicago warned that unless a majority of Americans "will to be moral and Christian, America cannot be a moral and Christian nation." Mr. West addressed the Lay Section of the International Council meeting last February.

"So long as each person does not fight graft and corruption in public life, does not strive against the evils of divorcees and the liquor traffic, does not seek to reduce the prevalence of juvenile delinquency—each and everyone of us is surrendering our moral responsibility," Mr. West declared.

"While there are organizations which contend against these evils, as well as many character-building agencies at work in the life of the nation, yet there is something over and above all these organizations," Mr. West stated. "This is the common living to which we all contribute and for which each has his own measure of responsibility. It is made up of the attitudes which we express together in our everyday life, and is the mold in which the moral and religious standards of the oncoming generation is shaped."

CHURCH PRESS CONFERENCE.

The Protestant Church editors have been meeting annually for a number of years. This year's meeting was held last week in New York. Approximately 130 church publications hold membership in this organization. Meetings are held to promote acquaintance, provide information, and establish common goals for the Protestant press.

This editorial representative journeyed to that phantasmagora called New York, stared at the skyscrapers, went window shopping, drank penacolada on Broadway, attended the press meetings in The Christian Herald Building, provided a House for the Hostel at the International Service Center for Congregational Christian Churches, visited 287 Fourth Avenue, and attended a session of the United Nations Security Council. Many streets have their ecclesiastical landmarks. A short walk west from the Service Center at 110 E. 29th Street takes one to the Church of the Transfiguration, popularly known as the Little Church Around the Corner, and to the Marble Collegiate Church of which Norman Vincent Peale is the minister. Churches, museums, publishing houses, denominational headquarters, and a host of other items offer perennial interests to New York goers. The vast city is not only a concentrated cross-section of civilization, not only a Mecca for pleasure seekers, but it is one of the primary spiritual nerve centers of the world.

Church editors are human beings. They have their problems and "headaches." They must write and publish for a constituency with varied opinions and tastes. They must decide whether to give the reading public what it wants or what it needs. Many of them work under stringent financial limitations. Like the prophet Ezekiel, each editor must stand vigil at his watchtower, call the signals as he sees them, and report to his people without fear or favor. Uphold the Protestant press by your contributions, prayers and subscriptions.

BISHOP OXNAM CALLS ON PRESIDENT TO BROADEN EFFORT TO AVERT WAR.

Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam is one of the dynamic leaders of Protestantism. His forthright pronouncements on church union, Catholic-Protestant relations, capital and labor problems, and our relations with Russia have provoked serious thought and widespread comment. The fact that many Christian leaders disagree with the Bishop stimulates further thought and discussion of these current problems.

Nearly 1,000 people attended a testimonial luncheon in New York last week in honor of Bishop Oxnam, who was referred to as "a spiritual crusader, releasing latent powers in those responding to his appeal."

What should be the attitude of churchmen toward Russia? Is war imminent, inevitable? Right or wrong, the Bishop has a definite answer. He declared that "When war is on the horizon, churchmen must speak."

He made a public plea for the President to find other than military counselors and new principles of action in his efforts to block the threat of war. His views on this crucial problem are set forth in these excerpts from his message:

"There are at least two factors in the Russian challenge that must be considered, one, imperialism, the other, an ideology. Armed might may block the advance of imperialistic armies, but it cannot stop the infiltration of an ideology. Our present policies appear to be developed by men better acquainted with stopping the expansion of imperialism than with ending ideological infiltration. Our policies are therefore partial; and because they are partial, they neither solve the real problem nor prevent war.

"The peoples of Europe know what we are against; they do not know what we are for. They saw our superb armies defeat the forces of Hitler and of Mussolini. They understood our democratic pronouncements; and we were indeed the forces of liberation. But these people are at a complete loss to understand policies that back reactionary regimes; that support leaders who have lost the confidence of the people; that can tolerate and even cooperate with a Franco; that can even now consider the wisdom of restoring to strength a Germany that has twice made war upon democracy within a generation.

"What we are for becomes more important than what we are against, because it is the practice of democracy and the creation under freedom of justice and of brotherhood that will eradicate communism. An attack upon communism, unaccompanied by a democratic program, is not likely to be successful.

"Who are the counsellors of the President? Has he had the counsel of religious leaders who are more interested in peace and democracy, in world law and order, that they are in the power, prestige, and property of the church? Has he had the counsel of missionaries who have served their Lord overseas and are fully conversant with the yearning of the common people for more abundant living, who know that hunger has been the lot of millions through the year, and that a dole now that does not change the conditions that permit a few to live in luxury and the many to exist in poverty can never win the consent of peasants who cry for land and their children who cry for bread?

"Must we live in the hysteria of headlines, in the bated breath of broadcasts? Some columnists and some broadcasters give us the impression that they sleep under Stalin's bed, that they have seen all and heard all, but because of our immaturity and their omniscience, they cannot tell all. The holy tone of the preacher that the church thought had been properly buried has risen from the grave to live in the radio. But, seriously, is there no more that can be done?

"We have not hesitated to take unilateral action in the case of Greece and Turkey. What about the door the President said is open to Russia? What are doors for? If they are locked, they are to keep people out; but if they are open, they are to be passed through. We are strong enough to take the initiative. Surely the billions we have spent for defense must have bought something. Certainly, our industrial potential that made us the arsenal of democracy is still present. Surely, our resolve to remain free and to preserve freedom for mankind is alive in the American heart.

"Very well, what about the door? Has the President done all that can be done? The answer is 'No.' Let us admit the bad manners of the Russians at past conferences, count up the vetoes in the Security Council, face realistically the frightful facts of Russian control in satellite lands and the totalitarian tyranny within its own borders. Let us remember the Czars were tyrants, too. Their tyranny did not make war inevitable. With utter realism, let us face the full meaning of the communist threat to freedom, become fully conversant with the communist movement as it seeks to cover the earth. Let us face all the facts, and ask, 'Is there nothing more we can do than get ready for inevitable war?'"

"First, I believe because of our strength, in fact, as an evidence of our strength, we ought to invite Stalin to conference, to sit at the table and there seek to work out some understanding that will avert war. If he won't come here, let us go there. Strong men are unafraid of discourtesy. Let the President send a delegation of the best minds of this nation to that conference, tough minds, democratic minds, religious minds. Let him frankly say in his proposal to Stalin, 'Our countries are close to war; that we are unafraid; that we do not believe the common people of Russia want war any more than the people of the United States want war; that sensible men ought to find some way to live together.'"

"There are some who say this is appeasement, that it means another Munich. It is what we do at such a conference that determines whether or not it is appeasement. The weak men who bowed at Munich to the will of the totalitarian dictators were appeasers; but strong men who might attend a conference at Moscow might be able to discover a way to avert war without appeasement. Appeasement of dictators is futile. Discovering a way that conflicting ideologies can exist in the same world is good sense.

"There are those who say such a conference is doomed to failure. Suppose it does fail? What have we done

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The men's class in the Suffolk Sunday school is doing an excellent job. Today, I had the privilege of attending it, and found there were 145 men present. I made 146. They sang songs into which all could join, and there was something about the singing of 146 men that was inspiring. They were led in prayer by the Rev. L. L. Lassiter, a faithful attendant of the class and a most devout follower of the Christ. Announcements were made concerning attendance, and about the sick, with requests that visitations be made on all absentees. There was a bit of good natured banter. There was freedom with reverence, there was fellowship with worship, and there was something to bless the soul of a tired business man, or to inspire the heart of the young man, or to give welcome and the feeling of friendship to the visitor.

The class was taught by the principal of the Suffolk High School, W. R. Savage, Jr. This young fellow was prepared. And he came before his class with that confidence and poise which real preparation gives. You could see that his lesson was the thing. For it they waited, and with no fanfare, but in the calmest, easiest, friendliest fashion he led us into the lands and amongst the peoples described in the text of the lesson. We saw the discouraged, disheartened Jews of exile. We saw Ezekiel, their young prophet, arising from their ranks with the spirit of prophecy on him. We heard his warnings, shared his assurances, and felt he had something good for our present time of unrest and confusion. When Mr. Savage had finished I could see the men look at each other in genuine appreciation of the way in which he had taught them. It is easy enough for us to see why Suffolk is proud of the principal of its High School. He has understanding, training, and the spirit of consecration to his task.

Recently I had to be out of the city on Wednesday night and I asked another one of our prominent schoolmen to conduct my prayer meeting service. This gentleman, S. T. Godbey, is superintendent of the Sunday school in the Presbyterian Church, an A-1 teacher of the Sunday school lesson. He is superintendent of the city public schools of Suffolk. He had conducted a mid-week service for me before, and I knew he would do an excellent job. We are justly proud of the men and women who make up the teaching staff of our city schools. Attenuating circumstances may keep the Bible out of the schools, but just so long as such consecrated men and women teach its classes, we cannot keep the spirit of the Christ out of the pupils. I could make this letter

PASTORAL PRAYER.

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

"Spirit of God, descend upon our hearts. Stoop to our weakness mighty as Thou art, and make us love Thee as we ought to love. We ask no dream, no prophet ecstasies, no sudden rending of the veil of clay, no angel visitant, no opening skies—but take the dimness of our souls away."

We would worship Thee, O God; and we wish to serve Thee in the name and in the spirit of Jesus Christ.

We thank Thee for Thy matchless love and for Thy glorious majesty expressed in Thy willingness and Thy power to forgive the sins of all who repent and seek Thy forgiveness. We thank Thee for the joy experienced in human hearts in response to the experience of repentance.

Give us, we pray Thee, a true understanding of the meaning of repentance and of the imperative need of every person to repent.

Teach us the greatness of the privilege of repentance and the wondrous power that repentance opens to any life. Help us to realize that in our desire to live the good life, we do not have to find our way alone; but that Thou art ever near to inspire, to guide, and to uphold. We pray for a growing faith. We believe; help Thou our unbelief. We pray for understanding. When doubt assails our minds, let the light of Thy truth shine revealingly upon our way. Bind our feet to the upward path. And keep us true to the highest and best that we know, through Jesus Christ, our risen Lord. Amen.

much too long by telling just a little of the work in the churches and Sunday schools of Suffolk, which is being done by teachers in our public schools. God bless America's public school teacher today and ever.

EVANGELISM.

One may find it a very difficult task to single out any one method of evangelism as a clean cut and very definite method as the most successful and best. It is very likely that he may find that before he gets very far he will be dealing with and trying to stimulate interest in individuals who are so entirely different in this make-up that before he can take time to think much about his method, that he is using a combination of methods.

The writer believes that the efforts toward evangelism, so far as the local church is concerned, should not be spasmodic. He believes that back of every aim, and plan and effort which together go to make up the program of the church there should be the strong evangelistic urge and a definitely and deeply evangelistic emphasis.

A few, perhaps very few, decisions or conversions are similar to that of Saul of Tarsus in that very suddenly and shockingly there comes something into an individual's heart which changes his order of things and gives him a new outlook. But God, too, has given to men minds to think and eyes to see in developing a capacity for deeper consecration which will lead to the decision to more Christlike living. The most important achievement is realized by having the evangelistic motive to prompt throughout every effort. The series of special evangelistic services or revivals brings to a head this continuous effort on the part of the church and gives the individual the opportunity to give open expression to the decision he has made. In many instances the "visiting preacher" or evangelist (not to discount his importance) often leaves, after a week, with all the laurels of glory and credit for holding such a great revival, when the true fact is that the greatest work was done before his train even blew for the station.

This year-round plan of evangelism with a combination of methods which would include visitation and preaching, with an evangelistic emphasis has proved most gratifying. Every church needs to more fully realize the real mission of the church and the purpose of Jesus' coming to earth. "For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

R. E. BRITTLE.

A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work and done his best; what he has said or done otherwise shall give him no peace.—Emerson.

GIVE THE CHURCH PEOPLE A CHANCE.

Had it not been for the churches in the Southern Convention, Elon College would not be. Were it not for our churches today Elon College could not continue. Elon was founded by the Church and for the Church. The churches help to support the College but they also inspire it. For the College to realize that it has nearly two hundred churches back of it gives it a sense of security as well as a great opportunity for service.

There are three sources through which the church may support the College:

I. By informing high school students, particularly those belonging to our own church, of their college and urging those who are members of senior classes in high school to enter their own church college. A word from the pastor in such instances would help greatly. Let us make sure that our young people know about Elon College and that it is our church college. Give them information. Give them a chance.

II. Through conference apportionments. The Church has done a good job in supporting the College financially through the Sunday schools and local congregations. In 1931-32 the total contribution of the churches of the Southern Convention to the College was $1,000 paid in a lump sum. At that time the Convention operated on the budget plan. The total contribution last conference year from Sunday schools and churches for the College was $12,164.17. This is quite an increase and the College is grateful. It would have been much more if all of our Sunday schools and churches had co-operated.

There are four definite opportunities for the pastors of our churches and superintendents of our Sunday schools to tell their Sunday schools and church congregations about their college, about Elon College. By action of the Convention every fifth Sunday is Elon College Day. Tell your people about their college and give them a chance. They will support their college if they know.

III. The Convention has authorized the establishment of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education in Elon College. The goal of $100,000 was set as the amount needed for this purpose. The amount was apportioned to the local churches on a fair basis. Ninety of our churches have accepted and acknowledged their quotas and twenty-six of this number have paid their quotas in full and some have gone far beyond. One hundred and nine have not accepted their quotas. The pastors are in a position to render a good service in helping their share in this great and commendable undertaking.

Brother Pastor, have you informed your church about this, one of our greatest and most worthy undertakings? Have you urged your people to do their share?

Recently I visited one of our good, historic churches. After the sermon I spoke to the congregation briefly about the College, about the Staley-Atkinson-Memorial Foundation, and about the church's quota. Several of the leading members said, "We know nothing about this memorial foundation. We have never been asked to raise our quota. We can raise it if someone will guide us." Tell your people about this effort on the part of the Church to recognize the everlasting service rendered by these great souls. We should keep their names alive among us.

Tell your people. Give them a chance. They will give.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The Convention in adopting the apportionment plan sought to see that every institution and every board of the Church receive a proportionate share of the benevolent giving of the Church as a whole. It conceived the possibility of one cause having a stronger appeal than another. To guide the Church in its support the Convention in its plan of financing the entire program of the Church has apportioned a lump sum to each local conference and requested the conference in turn to apportion to each local church a definite amount to be raised for every interest that the Church is under obligation to support. The intent of this plan is that the amounts apportioned should be raised in full before any board or institution is supported beyond its apportionment by the Church and in the event that a local church raises more than its conference apportionments, should it desire to follow the spirit of the Convention, the amount raised beyond apportionments would be distributed on a percentage basis to all interests of the Church instead of giving it to one interest in particular. If our local churches would carry out not only the letter of the Convention's direction but the spirit, all the interests of the Church would be supported equally and the total program of the church would go much more smoothly and effectively.

Elon College is very happy to co-operate with the Convention in its plans and appreciates the support received from Sunday schools and churches.

A UNIQUE COINCIDENCE.

By WARREN H. DENISON.

The Rev. Horace Mann and I were in school at Starkey Seminary in 1891. He was pastor at Scarsburg, N. Y. I had just decided to preach. He invited me to preach for him at the first Sunday in December, 1891, fifty-six years ago. Later he was pastor at Piqua, Ohio; Olney, Illinois, and other places. Then for his wife's health he moved to Rifle, Colorado, where he organized two churches. Later he united with the Congregationalists and preached at various churches in Nebraska and Wyoming. He was a forerunner of the union between the Congregationalists and Christians and was in the Seattle meeting in 1931 when the union took place. Some time ago he passed on.

This fall on the first Sunday in December ('47) I was in Colorado, two thousand miles from Scarsburg, N. Y., on the fifty-sixth anniversary of my first sermon and had the honor of preaching with Mr. Mann's widow, and their daughters, Mrs. Roy Smith and Eleanor Mann, in my audience. Miss Eleanor played a violin solo. It seemed to me a unique coincidence.

SILENT NIGHT, CHINESE VERSION.

By WINFRED P. ELSON, Secretary,
Foreign Missions Conference.

During January the Foreign Missions Conference received from Dr. Arthur Rinden in Nanking a set of eighteen attractive kodachrome slides showing Alps scenery, European figures, and Chinese characters. Dr. Rinden, formerly a Congregational missionary in China, and later executive secretary of the Yale-in-China Association, Inc., returned to the field in December, 1946, on the second sailing of the Marine Lynx, a Foreign Missions Conference "Missionary Ship." Attached to the University of Nanking, Rinden heads up the Audio-Visual Committee of the National Christian Council of China, and is a correspondent member of the Audio-Visual Aids Overseas Committee of the FMC.

A letter from Dr. Rinden, received some weeks after the slides, enclosed a copy of a script which he had used, and an explanation that the slides were the story of the writing of the Christmas hymn, "Silent Night, Holy Night," pictured for the first time to Chinese audiences. A Chinese artist had painted the pictures which Dr. Rinden then photographed. It was a sample of the type of production of visual material which the China Committee of the Conference and the foreign missions boards working in China anticipated when they contributed funds to finance Rinden's new work.

In March a letter arrived from Dr. Rinden's wife, Gertrude J. Rinden, from which the following paragraphs are quoted:

"Christmas in China is Pageants. I defy you to name any kindergarten or church school class, or Christian college, that didn't have its traditional pageant telling the Christmas story. One, where no foreigner helped, had its shepherds running and leaping to the manger, and one was a comedian making us all roar with his antics. Like the early miracle plays!

"Christmas in China is pageants instead of presents. We were all so involved in helping with many programs that we almost forgot presents.

At three o'clock on Christmas Eve I rushed out to find something for Edaik. For a long time, I was held up by traffic on Sun Yat-sen Road, that great central three-lane highway, with its almost constant stream of army and UNRRA buses and jeeps, Embassy and Attache cars and the even shinier cars of the Chinese officials, rickety horse-carriages drawn by moth-eaten little white horses so small that you have to look twice to see whether they are horses or rabbits, rickshas, and squeaky wheelbarrows. Once across this great thoroughfare, I hurried one block away to a little parallel street that doesn't know it is in the capital. As far as I can see nothing has changed there since the Han Dynasty—all the little shop owners are wide open to the street. In one, a blind-folded donkey was running in a circle to turn the grinding stone to grind the wheat. Next door, some men and boys were hammering a piece of red hot iron into a hoe. In the next shop I asked a silversmith to 'weigh me up' a pair of silver bracelets with dragons on them. He weighed them in his pan scales, told me how many hundreds of thousands of our inflated currency they cost, then wrapped them deftly in a square of red paper, and I hurried home.

"Our tree had come a week before. Just at dusk our door bell had rung, and there in the gray drizzle stood a blue-coated coolie with a platform hanging from his shoulder pole, and on it a lovely little green tree set in a flared wooden pot. The tree was all decorated with snow and stars. The pot had been made and painted Chinese Red, the tree decorated, and even the tree itself made of branches,

"In two Christmas plays, our Edaik (twelve) found out how much she loves to act 'I look forward to rehearsals all day during school, especially during arithmetic,' she says. One bit of her off-the-boards acting caused great excitement here. One morning she took old clothes, and floor rags and dressed up like a beggar, and went to the neighbors—both Chinese and American. They all thought that she was real and locked their doors, and refused to answer her wails and knockings until one of them, peeking out of the window, saw an orange curl among the rags on the beggar's head. Then such a backyard gathering as took place! It pleased our Chinese friends no end to have this American child so human!

"The first Christmas program at the University was one at which Arthur told how 'Silent Night' was written, and showed the new set of kodachrome slides to illustrate. The slides were made by a Chinese artist. When we reached Sage Chapel, it was so full of children, women with babies, and beggars that there was scarcely room for the University students to sit. I began to mutter my disappointments that all these had heard about the pictures and had come. 'Why can't we here in a university in the capital, have a service according to our plans, beautiful and dignified?' I asked.

"The lights went out. On the screen came the village in the sparkling white Austrian mountains. There was a hush. The hush lasted to the end of the pictures and the story. Then on the screen came the words of 'Silent Night'—one verse at a time written in columns of large black Chinese characters—and at the side of the verse a colored picture illustrating it. With one great surge, the audience rose up and sang. The students with their good singing gathered us into a tremendous chorus. The children shouted. The singing was much too loud for 'Silent Night.' But we couldn't help it. It was the first Christmas singing. We couldn't stop. We sang it all through a second time. It was as though a dam had burst,

SHAOWU STUDENT TO ENTER DUKE UNIVERSITY.

Timothy Chang of Shaowu is to study at Duke Divinity School beginning this fall, and is to arrive in the United States sometime this summer. Dick Jackson says of Timothy: "With Timothy's fine background (home), his Christian consecration, his ready command of the language, he can do more than any foreigner could ever expect to do for Christ. I do want him to get a good theological education."

It is possible for Timothy to study at Duke because of the women of the Southern Convention. For these four years, beginning with 1947-48, we are giving our money for Life Memberships and Memorials to help educate a student from Shaowu in the United States, so that he may be better equipped to serve and help in our mission at Shaowu. We will have a keen interest in Timothy while he is at Duke, and when we give our Life Memberships and Memorials, we will know that we are investing in our own Southern Convention mission at Shaowu. We will know that we are helping the Jacksons in a way which they especially recommended. A letter from Rev. R. L. Jackson will help us to understand how he feels about our helping Timothy (this was written to Dr. W. T. Scott):

"Our greatest need is trained leadership (native). The four ministers now at work are all past fifty and the average Chinese life expectancy is under fifty, so new workers are imperative if the work is to go on. With their ready command of the language, with their natural understanding of the people and their problems, the consecrated native leader can accomplish ever so much more than a missionary could ever hope to do—and at far less cost to the Board.

"For those reasons, young men and women in all professions want to go to America to study. It has been a surprise to discover how many young men and women dream about the day when they can go to America to study. I've never seen anything like it. The government is sending students to study agriculture, engineering, medicine, economics, etc., and it seems to me that our religious leaders should be given an equal opportunity if it is possible. We certainly want our ministers to get as good training in their field as those in other professions are getting. All of this enters in my recommendation that some of our fine young men come to the U. S. to study in seminaries.

"For our ministerial students, I believe the experience of being in our American churches, witnessing present-day methods, actually taking part in a going program of a local church will be very helpful.

"I wish some of these young men to come to Duke School of Religion, because Duke is located within the bounds of the Southern Convention. I feel that these young men will make one more link with the churches of the Convention and would not only stimulate the interest of our people there in missions, but should make a real contribution in mutual understanding between our two great peoples.

"At the present time there are three young men whom the leaders of the Synod and I consider eligible to come. They have all been approved by the Synod as 'recommended to study Theology in America if the opportunity presents itself.'

"There is Timothy Chang (Chang Syan Gwang), whom I wish so much to go to America to study, and I would like to have him go to Duke. Timothy is without doubt one of the most attractive, and at the same time one of the finest Christian young men I have ever met. My plan for him is for him to go to Duke so he can be near the Southern Convention. He would be very much liked by you all, I am sure of that. He comes from one of the oldest Christian families in Shaowu. His mother for years was the principal (Chinese) of the Woman's School and a teacher in Lau De Girl's School.

"Timothy graduated from Fukien Christian University in Agricultural Economics in 1946 with an outstanding record. He won the highest scholarship award offered by the University. The dean says of him, 'Academically speaking, he was without question one of the best students in his class, maintaining an average of 83.495 throughout his college course. He is quiet, courteous and quite scientifically minded.' During the past five months Timothy has been my language teacher and we have become the best of friends. He has been of immeasurable help to me. Daily my admiration for him increases.

"His family is not very well off financially, so we would have to help Timothy. If Duke could give him a scholarship that would help some. I could pay his expenses over and back from a gift (to Dot and myself) which one of our parishoners at Waverly, Va., gave us. I would personally contribute $100 per year to help him. My dream is for Timothy to come in the fall of 1948."

Mr. Jackson's letter is such an inspiration that Life Memberships and Memorials should begin to come in rapidly if enough people read this article. The certificates may be given in honor of Rev. R. L. Jackson, Mrs. R. L. Jackson, or Lewis Byers Jackson, the most recent arrival in their home. While we can still give memberships or Memorials in honor or memory of our own members, it might give us joy to give them in honor of the Jacksons.

We shall be looking forward to Timothy Chang's arrival, and hope we can have him in our churches whenever possible.

DISTRICT RALLY MEETS.

The Spring Rally of the Guilford-Rockingham-Forsyth District and the Alamance District was held on Wednesday, March 31, at Union Ridge Church, near Burlington, N. C. The meeting was presided over in the morning by Mrs. W. W. Snyder, Superintendent of the Alamance District, and in the afternoon by Mrs. Wm. G. Davis, Superintendent of the Guilford-Rockingham-Forsyth District.

The meeting was well attended and a splendid program was presented throughout the day. The guest speaker, Rev. Ralph Shrader, was well received and made an interesting address to the group.

Study groups held in the afternoon were led by Mrs. Kenneth D. Register, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, and Mrs. W. T. Scott.

The following officers were elected for next year: In the Guilford-Rockingham-Forsyth District — Superintendent, Mrs. Wm. G. Davis, Assistant Superintendent, Mrs. W. F. Worsham; Alamance District — Superintendent, Mrs. W. W. Snyder, Assistant Superintendent, Mrs. Jesse Dollar. Secretary for the two groups is Mrs. Ed Chilton.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

Today I am going to give you a few sketches of the works of some of our ministers of the past. I have had a difficult time deciding which to use and have chosen these for their interesting names or deeds.

Jonathan Fuller. He was active in our church a hundred years ago and was well known for his leadership at conference meetings. When there were difficulties the Rev. Mr. Fuller seemed to help everyone feel better. He was on the first committee that planned for a church paper, but they didn't have enough money to begin. In 1840 Jonathan Fuller became president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. In 1847 he was at conference at Pope's Chapel. Today there is a church bearing his name—Fuller's Chapel in North Carolina.

Solomon Apple. This young minister was from North Carolina, too. Later he married a young lady from Virginia. Through the history of our church that has been happening! Mr. Apple served well in the capacity of helping revise "Principles and Government of the Christian Church." Just two years ago our Convention was again revising the "Principles . . ." In 1875 he opened the sessions of conference with devotionals. The conference was held at Pope's Chapel and he was the chairman of a special committee on Home Missions. Solomon Apple was a great believer in and a teacher of the principles of our church. There is an Apple's Chapel, too, but I do not know if it was named for him, as other men by the name of Apple have served in our churches.

William H. Boykin. Usually we think of ministers living to late life full of good works and free from harm, but not so with this minister. He was killed by someone or a group of people who felt angry toward him. A great deal of his ministry was spent in Eastern Virginia—Holy Neck, Cypress Chapel and Spring Hill Churches. He served in many ways on committees in the Conference and gave the sermon on two occasions. Then he became the pastor of Providence in Norfolk County. In 1862 the people of Norfolk left because of the Civil War, and Mr. Boykin's church was taken and used by unfriendly people. This was a great sorrow to him. He was no longer permitted to preach in his own church and the building was badly damaged—windows broken, pews chopped and the pulpit stolen away. Mr. Boykin fled to the country for a while and then he came to the unhappy end of his life.

Jubilee Smith. Isn't that a wonderful name? I enjoy saying it over and over. I do wonder why his family named him that? He was from Georgia and died there in his seventy-fifth year. He joined the Christian Church at Harris County when that was the only church of our faith in the state of Georgia. Then he began to organize and build churches. In later years he became president of his conference and it was decided by that body that he should visit the churches of Alabama twice during the year and that churches would pay the expenses of his travels. In one of his sermons he said, "We want strong men, good men, working men, and our cause will move." I think that sermon is good for us, today!

A CHILD'S FIRST IMPRESSIONS.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

As we were listening to "Poet and Peasant" being played on the phonograph not long ago, my daughter remarked, "The opening phrases of this composition always take me back to my childhood." Her words started a train of thought in the direction of early impressions. How important these first impressions are in the lives of everyone!

This same daughter, when she was eight or nine years old, said one Sunday, as on our way home from church we passed a house from which the glorious strains of The Messiah were ringing forth triumphantly, "You can tell a lot about people by the kind of music they play, can't you?"

I wonder how many of the young mothers who will read this article give their small children the opportunity to listen only to the best of music. Do they carefully select their radio programs, or do they accept any kind of music to which they happen to turn?

We have a guest in our house one evening lately. We put on some fine orchestral records, thinking he would enjoy them. He listened intently for a while, and then he said, "These records don't mean much to me, but what kind of needle do you use?" Then my mind went back to the jazz with which I knew he had been brought up, and I understood why the selections we had been playing had found no response in him.

There was a little boy of four who used to live next door to us and often came into our house. Quickly he would climb into the big chair, fold his hands, and wait. "Shall we have some music?" we would ask. "Yes, please," came the answer. Never, so long as the music continued, would he talk or climb down and run around. All through his life this early enjoyment of beautiful concord of sounds will have its influence. He always heard good music at our house!

Do any of my readers' children take music lessons? When my children were doing this I asked their teacher to allow a part of every lesson, and sometimes an entire period, to be devoted to listening. I asked her to play to them, so that they might form the habit of listening eagerly and really enjoying good music. It proved to be a very worthwhile plan.

All that I have said of early impressions regarding music is equally true in the world of pictures. First impressions are most important. If our boys and girls know almost nothing of color and representation apart from the pictures they see in the Sunday funny papers, those shown there will, most likely, be the level of their picture appreciation. Why not familiarize the children with the work of some of the great artists of the world, and so develop in them a taste for the best?

For example: fasten up some reproductions of Jean Francois Millet's pictures on a screen and talk them over with the children. Call the display the "Art Gallery." Change the pictures often, but be sure to bring out the familiar ones now and again. Almost any store carrying a full line of educational supplies will have inexpensive pictures to sell.

Scrapbooks, which the children will like to make with Mother's help, can be kept throughout the years. In them should be pasted copies of some of the world's finest pictures. Little picture-talks with the children, in which both Father and Mother have a part, will unite the pictures, the talks, and the family in a togetherness that will become a treasured memory for them.

My youngest daughter, when a child, was attracted to farm life, and when we were on our vacations she

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE RETURN FROM EXILE.

LESSON III—APRIL 18, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: No man who puts his hand to the plow and looks back is fit for the Kingdom of God.
Luke 9:26.

LESSON: Ezra 1-6; Haggai.

By Way of Historical Background.

The Jews had been in Exile for a long time. But in 538 B. C. Cyrus became absolute ruler, not only of Persia, but of practically all the then-known world, at least the better part of it. Moved by mixed motives, perhaps political as well as religious, selfish as well as social, he issued a decree not only that the Jews could return to their native land if they cared to, but calling upon the Jews who did not go, and his own countrymen, to help them with gifts of gold and silver and other precious gifts. Thus encouraged and undergirded a large number of the Jews made the long trek back to the Holy Land. They immediately set up an altar and offered burnt offerings and sacrifices. They did not immediately begin the reconstruction of the temple. Stirred and stung into action by Joshua and Zerubbabel the civil and religious leaders of the group, the people did set about to rebuild the temple. For the younger members of the group it was a joyous occasion, but for the old timers it was an occasion of sorrow—they remembered the “good old days,” and they were filled with sacred memories and blasted hopes.

As soon as work was begun on the temple, serious opposition arose on the part of the people of the community. A “war of nerves” was launched which disheartened the people. Then a letter was sent to Artaxerxes by these enemies of the Jews, insinuating that what the Jews really had in mind was to build walled city and to revolt against Persian rule, and to refuse to pay tribute. It was all cleverly and diabolically conceived and carried out, and it worked with disastrous consequences—“they went in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews, and made them cease by force and power.”

After Artaxerxes died, Darius came to the throne, the people began again to build the temple and the walls at Jerusalem. And again enemies interfered. Again they sent a letter to the king, preferring the same charges against the Jews. But this time the king had the old records searched and he found the original decree of Cyrus, which had authorized the return, allocated financial help, and called upon both Jews and Persians to make further contributions. Thereupon the Jews went to work with a will and finished the work, although it was not on anything like the scale of the original temple. They had a great celebration when the work was done and dedicated the temple with a great service, culminating with the passover feast. This in brief is the substance of the six chapters which form the background of today's lesson.

By Way of Practical Application.

1. God keeps his promises. “That the word of the Lord by the mouth of the prophet, Jeremiah, might be fulfilled”—thus reads the opening words of the book of Ezra. One is reminded of the recurring phrase in Matthew's gospel—“That the Scripture might be fulfilled.” God is not slack concerning His promises as some men count slackness. To be sure there are those who go to extremes in interpreting prophecy, and try to make the words of the prophets to walk on all fours, to make them literally true in every jot and tittle. But one does well to read the Bible with due regard to the basic predictions and prophecies. For instance there might be a great deal of light on the Palestinian question to be found in the ancient prophecies. The prophets, and not the politicians, or even the statesmen, might have the answer to the “sixty-four dollar question.”

2. God works in wondrous ways, and mysterious ways, his wonders to perform and his purpose to fulfill. “The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus the king of Persia.” Only the spirit of God would have prompted a Jew to write those words. On the surface, the thing was preposterous. The idea of God's spirit speaking to a pagan king, a worshipper of false gods, the idea of this foreigner being an instrument and a chosen vessel of the Almighty! But there it is that all who run may read. Even Samson, rough, crude, cruel, sensual Samson who had little more moral sense than a rat, is listed in the Hall of Fame of the Faithful in Hebrews eleven. God rules this world. He makes even the wrath of men to praise him. At times he makes his enemies his avengers and the chosen instruments of his purpose. He does move in mysterious ways his wonders to perform.

3. The importance of cooperation between Church and State. Joshua and Zerubbabel represented the Church and the State. They worked together. They furnished the moral leadership and the morale for the big undertaking. They were co-operators, not competitors. We must have a clear division between Church and State in our country, but there ought to be the closest cooperation and the finest harmony between the two.

4. The importance of “standing up and being counted.” The first thing the returned exiles did was to build an altar unto God and to offer sacrifices to the God of Israel. There was no doubt in the minds of a skeptical and hostile community as to where they stood and to whom they paid supreme homage and reverence. They nailed their flag to the mast. They stood up and were counted. They gave first place to the worship of God. All too many modern people fail at just this point. They will move to a new community and refuse to affiliate themselves with the local church. Or already living in a community, they do not take their stand for the Lord in any open and avowed way. They seldom if ever go to worship. They do not always realize it, but they are against our Lord because they are not for him.

5. The Kingdom has enemies. The enmity of groups is dramatized in the action of the forces opposing the new venture. By false and insidious propaganda, and by open and overt hostility, these people sought to prevent the building of the temple and the work of righteousness. Well, Christianity is facing a distinct and serious threat and determined and powerful enemy today, in many quarters, but nowhere in any more deadly and diabolical form than in Communism. Communism is diametrically opposed to the Christian philosophy and practice of life. This is no call to hate the Russian people. It is no red flag waved to bait people. But it is a call to the soldiers of Christ to awake, and to do everything in his or her power to make effective the ideals and the spirit and principles of Christ. It is by the spirit and not by the sword that the battle is to be fought and the victory won. There is no place for slackers or draft evaders in the ranks of Christ.

in terms of the public opinion of the world?—At the moment, our policies are not winning the common people. We are losing them. They are suspicious of us, and they are suspicious of the Russians. We ought to be in a position to win them. We are not. If we made such an effort and gave it proper publicity throughout the earth and the peoples of the world knew that the United States of America, facing the threat of war, had done all in its power to avert it, that result alone would justify the conference.

"But I believe greater results might follow. Is it an evidence of weakness when strong men, unafraid, seek to solve such a problem? I think the reverse is true. Accompanying this suggestion of the President should be a proposal that delegations representing religion, science, art, labor, education, business should go to Russia at once to confer with similar representatives there, solely for the purpose of coming to understand each other, and that similar delegations should come here. This is what a door is for.

"Why was there not early pressure back of the Marshall Plan similar to the present pressure for Universal Military Training? Why is it that these billions have not been made available earlier for the food and the materials essential to the reconstruction of Europe? There was genius in the proposal of the Secretary of State. This was the proposal that should have been backed, and the kind of measures that I have been suggesting today, rather than the flinging of the gauntlet. This does not mean we should have been asleep. This does not mean that we should not build up our strength. It does mean that the open door should be used until at last it is closed in our face.

"The church has a stake in all this. The churchman must speak; the churchman must act to the end that this nation takes every possible step to avert war, to build democracy, to maintain peace."

and the water was rushing on and on for joy of release. That's the way the Christmas singing was this year. It burst through pent-up feelings of discouragement and despair. (The University chorus sang the Messiah four nights.) At the end of the service, I was burning hot with shame for wishing that the beggars and children hadn't come, and saying to myself, 'What if they hadn't come?'

MAY FELLOWSHIP DAY.

Every Child is My Child—in the Fabric of Fellowship" is the theme chosen for consideration by the church women of America on the day set aside for the purpose and known as May Fellowship Day. The date is May 7, when we direct our fellowship to the needs of all our children. It may be a time of rededication to the work of helping build a Christian community in our city, town or rural area—and thus beginning to play our part in the building of Christian World Community.

Packets at 35c each, including February issue of The Church Woman, worship helps, a poster and other pieces of material are available from: The United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. Money must accompany the order and no orders will be filled after April 23, 1948.

It is hoped that women's groups of the Southern Convention will observe this day, either in the local society or that they will cooperate with women of other denominations of the community.

May we not have some interesting reports as to how your society observed May Fellowship Day?

LIBERTY.

A Good Friday service was held at Liberty Christian Church, Nathalie, Va. Two readers, Mrs. Y. A. Bray and Miss Nancy Tuck, reviewed in Jesus' life the succession of events which moved toward the crucifixion. The meaning and significance of these incidents was clarified by an appropriate hymn following the reading. The congregation shared in the singing of some of the hymns, the choir sang others, and special music was given by a duet from Liberty, and by a group from a local Baptist Church.

The subdued lighting effect in the church helped to create the proper atmosphere for those sharing in the service. The service was well attended.

LITTLE CREEK.

The Little Creek Missionary Society has had a very successful year. On November 2 we held an inspirational public Thank Offering service, and received a good offering for Shaowu. On November 7, World Community Day, we had a very impressive service and made up a large bundle and box of new and used clothing for a seven-year-old European boy. At Christmas we gave aid to a poor woman in our community and bought gifts for the oldest man and woman in our church who were past eighty.

For our Friendly Service, we sent money to Franklinton Institute.

The World Day of Prayer was observed, and the Young People's society joined in the service.

At each meeting we have a good devotional program. We especially enjoyed our December meeting, as we used the lovely program from the Packet, "The Great Shepherd of the Sheep," and had special music. Afterwards, we had a Christmas party and exchanged gifts.

We have only twelve active members, but we are striving to be a "Superior" society. And as our women believe in the "Great Commission" I feel that we can accomplish much in the name of our Savior.

LAY ACTIVITIES.

I. O. Royse, Clayton, Mo., chairman of the Lay Section, told the meeting that "the church began with lay workers: a commercial fisherman preached the first sermon, a preaching deacon was the first martyr, a tentmaker was the first missionary." He stated that tax collectors, magistrates, fishermen, doctors, lawyers, and business men were all active in the early years of the Christian era.

"The successful ongoing of the church in these times depends upon the arousing of laymen and lay women to their personal responsibility and to the need for better undergirding, guiding, and helping our ministers and other professional Christian workers," he maintained.

The layman's responsibility to stir the church to a great measure of community effort was stressed by Mrs. Rachel J. Rose, of the Michigan Council of Churches, Lansing.

"Reports show that the church too often has an attitude of friendly indifference, yet individual laymen of many churches serve on boards and committees of social welfare agencies and could help the church to make more adequate use of these services," said Mrs. Rose.

Challenging the laity to see the complete picture of the community and consider it in Protestant church planning, Mrs. Rose declared that only through cooperative community effort can the churches work together and develop a sense of unity in practical work and service.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

Easter Sunday was a beautiful clear day. The writer visited all three buildings after the children were dressed in the Easter clothes and their new Sunday shoes. All of the little fellows had to gather around me and let me see how beautiful they looked. New dresses and new shoes certainly did make them happy.

The good women had sent in many beautiful dresses, and the matrons in each building had taken lots of pains to see that each little girl had a pretty dress and one that they were happy to wear.

The little boys were not overlooked. They, too, had nice little suits and new Sunday shoes. All in all, they were very happy as they marched off to Sunday school. We really wish our church people could have seen them.

This April 2 is a beautiful day, clear and cool enough to be pleasant. It rained here all day the last day of March and all night. It seemed that March was trying to put us in a full month of rain and bade us a wet farewell, and also took in the first day of April for good measure.

We had six months of drought last year. It rained on September 24 and has rained every week since. The ground has kept so wet we have not been able to plant any gardens at all. We are hoping and praying we will have some clear weather now so we can get our garden planted. A good garden means so much to a large family like we have here. We got very little from our garden last year, as the dry hot weather burned it up.

We had twenty-eight acres of the finest alfalfa we have ever looked at at this season of the year, but the big frost and freeze on Easter Monday morning certainly did damage it to a great extent. It has made poor growth since.

Our farm is a big asset to the Orphanage and gives the boys an opportunity to learn agriculture. We make lots of stuff on the farm when we have good seasons. It is interesting to look at the growing crops when they get at their best.

For several years we have been building up a nice herd of Holstein cattle. We have quite a number registered now, and good milkers, too. In two or three years we will have a herd that we can point to with pride and then they will begin to pay off and bring us in some income besides furnishing milk for the children and the Orphanage family.

We now have one hundred hens in our poultry house, and we are getting right many eggs already.

ORIGIN AND PURPOSE OF ARBOR DAY.

By C. B. RIDDLE.

This year marks the seventy-sixth anniversary of the establishment of Arbor Day. From a humble start in Nebraska, April 10, 1872, the day's observance has become national in scope and interest, although the date of the event is not uniform in all States.

J. Sterling Morton, a member of Nebraska's State Board of Agriculture who later became United States Secretary of Agriculture, was originator of the idea of a tree-planting day. The plan for Arbor Day was approved in Nebraska by the State Board of Agriculture on January 4, 1872, and prizes were offered for the agricultural society and the individual who planted the most trees. The idea was given such wide publicity that in later years it spread to all parts of the United States.

Since that time the country has turned its thought more and more to forestation. Repeated campaigns have stressed the need to conserve trees, and to replace those consumed either through lumbering operations or through the devasation of forest fires.

The idea of planting trees gradually won greater recognition until now, with the aid of the Federal Government, all States are assisting in the work, offering trees at little or no cost to those who desire to plant them on farm land, unused acreage, or as memorials.

It was natural that the tree-planting idea originated in Nebraska, for early settlers in that region found that a deficiency of trees was a serious handicap to their progress. However, prior to 1872, tree-planting had been carried on by a few individuals. It was Mr. Morton who caused the undertaking to become a national institution.

In 1875 Kansas and Tennessee followed the lead of Nebraska, and the next year Minnesota fell in line. The idea was most acceptable to Kansas, for the same treeless conditions existed there that were in Nebraska. In Minnesota the white pine was being destroyed at a rapid rate and no provision made to replace it. Other States, where forests had been depleted, found in the movement an incentive to aid their barren hills to regain their former position as tree producers.

Like other movements, Arbor Day in the beginning had its years of slow growth. After 1876 the idea did not spread so rapidly for several years, and it was not until 1772 that two more States—North Dakota and Ohio—adopted the plan. Since then, all States have joined the movement and interest in Arbor Day has increased each year.

The purpose of Arbor Day goes beyond the mere planting of trees. It has been instrumental in creating more civic pride in communities, small towns, and cities. Moreover, since care of trees is as essential as planting, individuals and civic organizations have taken an added interest in tree protection.

At the close of World War I, thoughts of the nation turned to finding appropriate memorials for those who had sacrificed their lives for the cause of world freedom. Many communities planted trees or groves to serve as living monuments to fallen soldiers, and Arbor Day was often chosen for the occasion. Some cities have honored their war heroes by planting a tree for each.

If country churches were to adopt a plan of planting a tree for each of their members planted in "Life's eternal tramping ground," many places of worship in rural areas would not be the barren spots they are.

UNION (VA.)

The Poole family presented a Hammond electric organ to Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., in memory of Thomas A. Poole who was killed while overseas. The organ was dedicated Easter Sunday afternoon in the presence of a large group of people. Following the act of dedication, Mrs. Roy Caviness, organist at the United Church of Raleigh, N. C., gave the dedicatory recital. This generous gift by the Poole family is received by the church with a deep sense of gratitude.

The Easter program of Union included also a sunrise service and a Maundy Thursday service. At the early morning hour, an Easter drama, "The Way of Life," was presented. The play portrayed the life of a Roman family, which eventually came to be followers of the Way. It showed how the young son, a Roman soldier and a guard at the Cross of Jesus, came to believe in the Resurrection of Jesus because he had seen the Man die. The cast included ten local men and women, besides the choral group in the "Upper Room." Approximately 125 people attended this service.

The Maundy Thursday service was held by candlelight. Stories were read from the Scriptures depicting the incidents in the last few days of Jesus' life, and hymns were used to help interpret the Scriptural account.

The service was climaxed by the Sacrament of Holy Communion. All candles were extinguished except the one on the communion table. From this candle the two ministers present, Dr. C. E. Newman and M. W. Andes, received light for their candles and gave it to four candle-lighters who in turn shared their light with the congregation. As one person after the other received light and shared it with his neighbor, the whole church was illuminated by tiny Christian candles. With the lighted candles the group filed outside to face the darkness of the world. About eighty worshippers shared in this service.

liked to milk the cow. As a result she became very fond of pictures that had cows in them. Of course, we did not let the pictures of cows in advertisements or in the funny papers become her standard of art. Instead, we suggested that she save her pennies and buy reproduction of pictures in which cows appear, painted by famous artists. The pictures were very inexpensive. She made a cow scrapbook and soon became familiar with some of the very best paintings.

I deem it the duty of every man to devote a certain portion of his income for charitable purposes; and that it is his further duty to see it so applied as to do the most good of which it is capable. This I believe to be best insured by keeping within the circle of his own inquiry and information the subjects of distress to whose relief his contribution should be applied.

HAD YOU HEARD?

That there is an interdenominational plan for a comprehensive Protestant broadcasting system for Latin America? The Committee on Cooperation in Latin America is raising an initial fund of $100,000 to provide at least one station owned and controlled by the Protestant churches and four recording studios in strategic centers where records can be produced in Spanish and Portuguese.

That fourteen mission boards joined in a three million dollar purchase of surplus war supplies, including full equipment of twelve one-thousand bed hospitals, which had to be delivered to Shanghai? Four of the fourteen boards assumed the responsibility of handling the supplies in Shanghai.

That in a six-month period, sixty-five foreign mission boards cooperating through the Foreign Missions Conference sent 1,600 missionaries and members of missionary families to their posts in the Far East and India in groups of 225 to 450 per ship? For two of the mass sailings, huge public send-off meetings were held in San Francisco and Oakland, California.

That the airplane, "St. Paul," purchased by the Lutheran World Federation primarily for the transportation of Lutheran missionaries but made available on equal terms to other denominations, has made it possible for many missionaries to avoid long delays in Shanghai and reach their posts in North and interior China? The airplane is now flanked by an ex-army truck appropriately named "Barnabas."

That a large proportion of the delegates to the various units of the United Nations from non-European and non-American countries are graduates of Christian colleges and universities? This includes representatives from Moslem countries in the Near and Middle East.

That the International Missionary Council is participating in a joint study of African marriage customs? Questions centering in African marriage and the stability of the family are of great concern to both the governments and the missions in Africa. Merle Davis has represented the International Missionary Council in conference with the other groups participating in the study, the British Colonial Office and the International African Institute.

That the year 1947 constituted a landmark in the story of orphaned missions? Most of the Continental societies have resumed full responsibility for their work overseas. The Paris Evangelical Missionary Society still requires help and various missionary societies in the Netherlands find it necessary to accept advances of funds for the conduct of their overseas work or the specialized training of workers abroad. But the chief remaining task of the International Missionary Council is the completion of our responsibility for German missions, principally in Africa and China. North America must take the lead in saving German missions in the post-war as well as the war period. German missions are vital to wholesome spiritual life in the German churches, and sound German church life is essential to a democratic, cooperative Germany. Thus orphaned missions are an integral part of the ecumenical movement and of world order.

That in response to a plea from the 1,500 Christians on Okinawa, still living virtually in concentration camps, two mission boards are joining in a united program of rehabilitation and spiritual ministry for them?

The Rough Becomes Beautiful

By WALTER H. STARK

San Diego, California

Jesus was a worker in wood before he became a worker with men. With his eye to perfection and beauty, his products must have been exceedingly fine. His ploughs would be from selected lumber, with grain curvey to give strength and lightness. The handles would polish under the grip of human hands instead of raising splinters. The chairs he made would be designed for comfort and with strength to hold the heaviest person. His ox yokes did not chafe and every ounce of weight on them was applied to the burden. That is what we would expect to find if we had in our possession the articles made with his hands.

Yet twice in his life the roughest of timber entered his experience. He was born in a stable, a lean-to against the side of an inn. All the green lumber, warped boards and knotty sections cast out by the builder of the inn would be reserved for the stable structure. It was probably not a thing of beauty. At the end of his life he was hung on a cross made of wood. A crooked limb, knotty and rough, but unfit for other construction, would be good enough for a crucifixion. On such a timber Jesus ended his life. Rough wood welcomed him into life and rough wood was present at his death.

But see what his presence did to them. The rude stable with the oxen and the straw have become enshrined in human hearts. The rough cross has become the symbol of God's presence. On its many forms the hands and minds of the greatest artists have gone to work, and a cross made to be the center of worship is the most beautiful symbol we have.

That was what he did with men. He took the rough and made them over into saints. Men with vicious elements and unruly spirits became men of peace. The rough language of Peter was exchanged for unsurpassed beauties. The family circle as a center of love and sacrifice became established. The women of the races have been given devotion and freedom. Little children became the most important of all, as Jesus' spirit worked in transforming society.

All these things he accomplished and is still accomplishing by presenting a view of God as Father, with greatness of heart and mind, and with infinite compassion towards his children. He has surrounded us with the materials of a wonderful world and his spirit labors to lead men into the way of peace. What a wonderful Savior he is, and yet the greater portion of his blessings are unclaimed by all save the few whose hearts and lives have found him.

DR. FRED S. BUSCHMEYER A CONVENTION SPEAKER.

Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer of Washington, D. C., challenged the Eastern Virginia and North Carolina and Virginia Conferences with his message last fall. Because of numerous requests coming from ministers and laymen in the Convention, the program committee has secured Dr. Buschmeyer as a speaker at the coming session of the Southern Convention. Dr. Buschmeyer will speak Tuesday evening, April 27th.

Dr. Buschmeyer is Chairman of the Executive Committee of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches in America.

DR. FRED S. BUSCHMEYER.

Dr. Buschmeyer made an intensive visit to Europe and Great Britain in the summer of 1947 on behalf of the Congregational Christian Committee of War Victims and Reconstruction and the Service Committee of that fellowship. He returned with a vital message and burning conviction that a rebirth of personal Christian faith is imperative if the continent is ever to be rebuilt. What holds true of Europe is equally true of the other nations of the world in Dr. Buschmeyer's opinion.

Minister of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church in Washington, Dr. Buschmeyer came to his present pastorate in 1939 from a pulpit in Manchester, New Hampshire.

Although born in California and educated in the public schools of Los Angeles and the University of Southern California, Dr. Buschmeyer took his religious education and theological training at Boston University. He holds an honorary Litt. D. degree from the University of New Hampshire. Dr. Buschmeyer has served Congregational pastorates in Brookline, Massachusetts; Durham, New Hampshire; and Manchester, New Hampshire.

For three years Dr. Buschmeyer was Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Council For Social Action in Washington and has been a member of the General Council Executive Committee since 1942. Active in interdenominational church circles in Washington, he served for a time as President of the Washington, D. C., Ministerial Union and as Vice-President of the Washington Federation of Churches.

PICTURE OF THE MONTH: "THE SEARCH."

A profound sermon or a penetrating lecture can hardly be called an entertainment, yet, this is both. "The Search" is in a class by itself because it tells, with few words and very little plot, how a child came to lose himself and how his soul was rekindled and found again. This inspiring, documentary-like story of displaced children in Europe is that of many children in the world today. In presenting it so dramatically, yet withal entertainingly, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has performed a real service.

Fundamentally, this is the story of a Czech mother (played by Jaromila Novotna) and her persistent search for her son. Her nationality is immaterial; she is universal motherhood looking for and loving her child. The search takes her through children's centers all across Central Europe. Disheartened and heart-torn at the fruitlessness of her effort, but keeping her faith in eventual success intact, she loses herself in service to other mothers' children.

Among the nameless and hopeless children who have known suffering and despair such as we can hardly imagine, we see an empty little face, a young boy (Ivan Jandl), fearful, anonymous; as to his own identity, his mind is a total blank. Learning that he and other children are to be sent to rehabilitation centers, he escapes among the ruins of a German city with a French boy who had befriended him. Rescued eventually by a good-natured American soldier, he is gradually brought back to normalcy. His memory, however, still eludes him until he begins again to understand the meaning of the word "Mother." In a plausible and nat-

DR. CARL HEATH KOPF TO ADDRESS THE CONVENTION

"The passion of the Christian must be as strong as the passion of the Communist who will give everything to make his faith win. Two powers are in conflict today for world dominion. One is Secularism and the other is Christianity. The issue is whether we shall live for material things or for spiritual ideas," says Dr. Carl Heath Kopf of Washington, D. C., minister of the First Congregational Church, who will speak Wednesday evening, April 28th at the Southern Convention session to be held at Liberty (Vance) Church, near Henderson, N. C.

Dr. Kopf came to the First Congregational Church of Washington, D. C., in the fall of 1947 after a successful pastorate at the 104-year-old Mount Vernon Street Congregational Church of Boston, Massachusetts, where Sunday after Sunday, the sanctuary was taxed to capacity. While in New England, Dr. Kopf became widely known and loved through his regular Sunday radio broadcasts entitled "From My Window On Beacon Street."

A Vice-President of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Dr. Kopf made a visit to war-wasted Philippine Islands immediately following the end of the war to attend an important interdenominational post-war planning meeting and to survey the American Board work.

He flew from California to Manila and return. In the Philippines he covered Congregational fields on Mindanao, Luzon and Negros, travelling some 22,000 miles in three months, 16,000 by plane. He talked with Christians in cities, towns, and isolated villages, with pastors and officials and had a personal interview with President Roxas, head of the new Filipino republic. "Some 90 per cent of the churches of the Philippines," says Dr. Kopf, "Were either destroyed or badly damaged."

A speaker of simplicity, conviction and appeal, Dr. Kopf through his radio broadcasts in New England, beamed to every creed and race, had a large unseen audience.

His radio career began at the conclusion of a European tour in 1938 when he returned impressed by the need of finding some way to bring religion to more people in the world outside the church doors. Station WEEI featured him from that time until he left Boston. The description of his broadcasts by WEEI is also true of his sermons and addresses.

WEEI said: "The tremendous trifles of our lives inspire a fresh and plain spoken philosophy of strength, tolerance and progress. His is a spoken word every man can call his own."

Born in New York State, Dr. Kopf recalls that he first yearned to be a scientific farmer and spent most of his summer vacations on a farm. Called to the Christian ministry he followed graduation from Princeton University and Boston University School of Theology, with two pastorates in Massachusetts churches before becoming minister of Mt. Vernon Church, Boston in 1933.

SPIRITUAL TREASURE

The daily press carries an announcement of a "200,000 trust fund established under the will of Joseph Newton Brown and vested in the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. The fund originally was set up by Mr. Brown for the benefit of his daughter, with a provision that at her death it be vested in the Foreign Mission Board.

Every mission board needs to have its regular contributions, small and inadequate as they usually are, augmented by income from substantial trust funds. And what better disposition could people of reasonable or large means make of their residuary estates than to leave them in trust as did Mr. Brown? Endless and useless litigation could be prevented and the cause of Christ greatly strengthened by such procedure.

BASES OF BELIEF

"Believe me," said the Master, "that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake."

The inter-relationship of God the Father and God the Son should be a sure basis of faith. The simple, unsophisticated, record of Jesus' communion and communication with the Father is sublime and convincing. The way of faith for the unconvinced lies in a greater exposure of one's life to the record of this spiritual relationship. Faith is nurtured and strengthened in the atmosphere of such a divine partnership. "Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father in me."

To all those who are accustomed to think in terms of things rather than relationships, Jesus submits a more practical basis of faith: "Believe me for the very work's sake." Those who cannot comprehend the higher affinities of the spirit can see the lame walk, the demon-possessed clothed in his right mind, the prodigal returning to the father's house. And today, those who have never studied the theological implications of the Godhead can see the Church, the orphanage and the missionary.

"Believe me for the very work's sake;" namely, the work that is and the work that is to be. Let Mr. Faint Hart study the work of the Church in all its spiritual and humanitarian aspects; let him survey the far-flung, benevolent and philanthropic enterprises of the Church if he would experience a resurgence of Christian faith. The teaching, preaching, publishing, and healing ministry of the Church should be a faith-stimulant to all who have even a casual acquaintance with its program.

And what of the work that is to be? The work of every agency and institution of our Church should be strengthened and expanded. A virile faith will be realized only by those who see the magnitude of the work which needs to be done and gird themselves for its doing.

OUR INFINITUDES

"Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven." These terrestrial islands have a way of becoming celestial peninsulas. Time and eternity are bound by the immutable law of causation. The influence of our daily acts have a way of rippling out into eternity. We cannot dismiss Heaven to God and the angels. On the authority of Christ we have a part in shaping that celestial city.

A funeral procession carrying the body of an old settler to the family lot in a country graveyard paused in a Minnesota town to find a minister to officiate at the burial. A minister was found and placed in the procession beside a young man he had never seen and never saw again. Some twelve or fifteen years later the minister received from a distant state a letter from that young man reminding him of their brief ride together. The writer stated: "You awakened me on the subject of religion. I never got away from your argument for the Christian life. I gave my heart to Christ and prepared for the ministry. I think I have won hundreds of people to Christ. I have had a glorious time. For years I have wanted to tell you about it, but only recently learned where you were."

How much that letter implied concerning the continuity and spread of Christian influence! Only a little while do we talk and work, but there is no end or measure to the good we do. Ascensiontide should stretch our minds to distant and eternal horizons. Eternity impinges upon our daily tasks. Christians dare not forget that "the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are unseen are eternal."

THE PROBLEM OF LOYALTIES

The radical transformations through which our age is passing and of which the war was one expression have acutely brought to the mind of Christian believers the problem of loyalties. Nation, state, and race are today the powers to whom is overtly or covertly assigned god-like quality. Their interests determine the accepted standards of judgment and behavior. The war has demonstrated clearly how easily men—even Christians—are led astray by their nationalist outlook and how difficult it is to see clearly the consequences of the fact that to Christ is our primary loyalty. The Christian Church needs to grapple anew with this problem and exert itself to find an adequate expression of it, in order to direct the minds of its members and to interpret God's will to the world of today. Missions, being a living part and function of the Church, find themselves involved in the same problem—the more so because, by their world-wide nature, and race are virtually being defied. Missionaries, being representatives of various nations, not only live in the zones of danger but are themselves involved in the danger.—From records of Whitby Meeting of International Missionary Council.

Why I Go to Sunday School Regularly

By EMILY HARRELL LYNCH

Do you remember the first time you went to Sunday School? I do not and neither do most of you. My mother and father, like most of yours, took me to Sunday School when I was very young. They did not send me but went along with me. By going along with me they implanted the idea in my mind that the Sunday School was for all ages and not just for children. So often when parents just send the child, upon reaching maturity he wants to stop going to Sunday school because he does not remember his parents attending. We are greatly influenced by our parents. I can definitely realize some of the many benefits I have derived from attending Sunday school regularly. Therefore if I do not attend I feel that I have missed something.

Did you ever stop to think of the time spent in the actual study of the Bible or Sunday school lesson in a year's time if you attend every Sunday during the year. The average lesson lasts approximately thirty minutes. That makes only 26 hours of instruction a year—just two hours more than one day and night. Of course the worship service during the Sunday school period is very important in helping one commune with God through prayer, reading of the scripture, and songs. This does much to prepare one for the Worship Service of church.

As a church member I feel that it is my privilege and duty to attend Sunday school regularly. The Sunday school supports and carries out the ideas of the church. Some may even call it the backbone of the church. It prepares the child for church membership. Most of our Sunday schools now have classes for the various age groups—in this way the needs of each individual can be met. Christian ideals can be explained so the child can understand and become a better Christian.

Paul wrote to Timothy in 2 Timothy 2:15—"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." I feel that this applies to each of us today just as much as it did to Timothy. One of the main motives of the Sunday school is to study and learn the history of our church and the characters in the Bible—the most outstanding character being the Lord Jesus Christ. If I do not attend regularly I will not learn. Some might say I can study my Bible without going to Sunday school. That is true but how many will do it? By attending Sunday school I will be helped greatly in interpreting the Bible. A timely example is the study of Job. Not many of us could read the book of Job and interpret it without the help of others. But by studying it in Sunday school part of this quarter we will have a better understanding of its meaning.

In John 3:16-17 we read—"For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved." If God gave His Son it seems that the least we can do is to give some of our time and talents for the advancement of the Kingdom of God here on earth. Jesus said unto his disciples, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me." How can we expect to be able to follow Jesus if we do not go to Sunday school and learn what He expects His followers to do.

During World War II we saw the need for the expansion of our Sunday school so it could influence many that it had never reached previously. J. Edgar Hoover, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, U. S. Dept. of Justice said, "Fingerprint cards coming into our Identification Division from all over the nation during 1942 reflect the alarming fact that juvenile crime has increased.

"The relaxation of parental guidance in the excitement of war has been a compromise with indecency. Unguided youth with easily acquired money has added to the revolting breakdown in morals. Programs for the moral character development of youth through adolescence must therefore be extended to meet this vital problem.

"It was God fearing men and women who conceived and made this nation. It has been their children, guided spiritually through church and Sunday school attendance in the formative years of life, who have maintained this country. This spiritual guidance is vitally essential in preparing our youth for their responsibilities of tomorrow."

Mr. Hoover continues, "I feel that everyone should encourage and wholeheartedly support the teaching of God's words. Forfeited spiritually our youth will resist the temptation of crime and ably assume the task of citizenship tomorrow." Knowing our Sunday school has such a great responsibility, how could we have a desire but to attend regularly.

As a Sunday school teacher of boys and girls I feel that it is my responsibility to attend regularly and to be on time. If I am not punctual how can I expect the pupil to be? A teacher should try to set an example. We can go other places on time—why not Sunday school. We miss something if we do not attend the whole service. If I do not attend regularly and the pupil does not know he is to have a teacher he will have no desire to attend. Since I have been teaching in Sunday school I have never left my class without a teacher. If I plan to be away for a Sunday I am always sure I have someone else to teach the class. If the teacher does not attend regularly the child will lose interest. I do not want to feel that through my negligence I have caused someone to lose interest in Sunday school and in turn lose interest in the Kingdom of God.

For many years I went as a delegate from my Sunday school to the Summer Conference for the Young People of our Southern Convention. Attending those Conferences was a great help to me—more than I can ever express. Therefore, I feel that I want to share some of the things I learned and be of some benefit to the Sunday school for putting their trust in me. Here I want to urge each Sunday school to strive to send at least one delegate to the Junior Conference and one delegate to the Senior Conference for Young People and as many more as possible to Camp Hanes, near Winston-Salem, N. C. in August. This is a great opportunity for the Sunday school to invest in the development of young people for Christian Service. Upon their return let them show you some of the things they learned by participating in Sunday school activities.

By our presence at Sunday school we show that we are interested in the Advancement of the Kingdom of God. There is so much to do and such a short time to do it in we can not afford to attend irregularly.

A. A. Stagg, formerly Director of Physical Culture and Athletics of University of Chicago, who is football coach now, said "To me, personally, Sunday school meant more than I can ever express in words and more than I can ever repay in gratitude. It was there that I acquired the be-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Suffolk District Missionary Rally held Wednesday at Cypress Chapel was a good success. Some two hundred women were in attendance and there were ten ministers, besides several laymen. Mrs. W. T. Harrell presided in a most cordial and efficient manner, and opened the day's session with an address entitled "We Press On In a Fellowship World Wide." The morning devotions were led by Mrs. Rollie Gayle. The Rev. Ralph R. Shrader, secretary of the American Board, made a great address setting forth something of the eminent need of our day for renewed zeal in the promotion of the world wide missionary enterprise, and graphically picturing some of the work of several twentieth century winesses to the Gospel of Christ. The morning session was closed with a prayer led by Dr. Will B. O'Neill.

The ladies of Cypress Chapel served a delicious luncheon at noon. The food and fellowship were easily up to the standard. The afternoon session was opened with prayer by Mrs. B. D. Jones, of Holy Neck Church, which was followed by a presentation of the proposals adopted for the carrying out of the project on evangelism, namely, one new member every month for every 100 members in the church. This is a real goal—a worthy goal—and many societies will endeavor to reach it. Mrs. W. T. Harrell, district superintendent, made a plea that every society within her district be ready to report as near the attainment of that goal as possible on September 15. The writer of this letter sought to lay the matter of personal effort on the part of those present to see to it that many were won to the Christ as a result of the goal set, and the work done. It would mean that to reach this goal a society whose church has 100 members would have to get five new members by September 15. Let us see how many societies can reach that goal.

It was like old times to hear a male quartet, accompanied by Mrs. I. W. Johnson, and composed of Dr. I. W. Johnson, Rev. R. E. Brittle, Mills Luther and Paul Parker. A very interesting presentation of facts, fields and figures was done in conversational style by the Revs. Shrader and Scott. The nominating committee's report was adopted as follows: For Supt. of the District, Mrs. A. C. Moore; assistant Supt., Mrs. R. E. Brittle; and secretary, Mrs. R. O. Luther. It was voted that the rally should be held next year with the Berea (Nansemond) Church, at Driver, Va.

On the day before such a rally had been held in the Richmond, Va., church, and presided over by Mrs. W. C. Seeley; on the day following the Norfolk District rally was held in the Bayview Church, Norfolk, with Mrs. W. B. Williams, presiding. Each of these rallies shows forth really

SPRING FEVER.

(With apologies to Masefield.)

I must go out to the paths of Spring,
To a world afresh with showers,
And all I ask is a keen scent,
With an eye for trees and flowers,
With an ear for singing birds and brooks,
And the wild geese crying,
And in and over all the vibrant call
Of life undying.

I must go out to the paths of spring,
To the charm of white and gold,
Of red and violet and blue,
And fragrance manifold,
And all I ask is a heart attuned
To match the new creation,
Athrill with zest on the luring quest
Of vagrant exploration.

I must go out to the paths of spring,
To bursting buds and greening grass,
To the way of the robin and the thrush,
And the tuneless warbles as they pass,
And all I ask is to be alive,
When the floodgates open wide,
And gardens thrive, and woods revive.
In the stirring Eastertide.

I must go out to the paths of spring,
That transcend land and sea,
Out to my brothers and my God,
Like the Christ of Galilee,
And all I ask is to walk with Him,
Amid life's toil and stress,
Sharing the grace that lit his face
With the beauty of holiness.

POLISHING ONE'S HALO.

"I went to church Sunday. Now I'm looking for some silver polish for my halo."

So wrote a young man in the armed service of his country to his parents. He had served in the U. S. Navy during the whole of the late War II, and then decided to make that his career. For three years he was unable to come home on a furlough until the war was over. Of course, his family was glad to see him and there was much to talk about. But his parents, being Christians, did not forget to ask him about the condition of his soul.

"Son, are you loyal to the Lord Jesus Christ, and have you been attending divine services regularly?"—inquired his father with an earnest look.

And the son answered somewhat hesitatingly: "As far as my loyalty to Christ goes, that's all right. But to be honest with you, I haven't been attending church service regularly."

"Why not?"

"Well, Dad, it's like this. During the war we were so busy, and we didn't always have a chaplain on board. After the war, if we are at port we think of going to a church in town, but we put it off and off until we sort of get out of the habit of going to church," explained the son.

"But you should go, my boy"—said the mother sharing the conversation at the table after a splendid meal she had prepared. "Christianity and the Bible is what made this country great and gave us our democracy. Let's not be among the other half of Americans who forget the Church. That would be ungrateful. Besides it will do your soul good to worship God with other people. I thank God for bringing you safely through this dreadful war. He has been good to us."

"I agree with you, mother and dad. Soon as I get back to my post in California I will find a good church to unite with." He did, and wrote home the above quotation. His father answered he needs no other polish for his "halo" than hearing and doing the Word of God.

ANDREW SLABEY.

I would have you day by day fix your eyes upon the greatness of your country until you become filled with the love of her; and, when you are impressed by the spectacle of her glory, reflect that it has been acquired by men who knew their duty and had the courage to do it.—Pericles.

News of Elon College

THE CONVENTION

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches will meet in biennial session with our Liberty, Vance, Church April 27, 28 29. Liberty is one of our strong rural churches. It has a fine membership and will entertain the Convention in a very fine way. Rev. Fred Wright is the pastor. This church and pastor will constitute a good host to the Convention.

The Church, through elected delegates meets every two years for business, fellowship, and inspiration. The business transacted is two fold. Reports are received on achievements. These reports will show how well we have done our job during the past two years, how nearly we have completed the plans initiated by the Convention, and what our churches and conferences may have initiated themselves. Plans are laid for the future and directions are given for procedure.

This session of our Convention should be known as "A Convention of Progress." If so, constructive thinking and careful planning will be necessary. Fortunately, when the Church plans to move forward along any or all lines money is required. Our religion would mean but little to us if it didn't cost us. Today to move forward at all considerable sums of money will be necessary. As Christian people we should be willing to sacrifice, if necessary, not simply to build our Church but to build the Kingdom of God in the world. All of our institutions and boards will be meeting and asking for increased funds at the hands of our people. This is perfectly natural and as it should be. It is a sign of progress, but in all of our askings we should be aware of the fact that all of these askings are made of the same people; that is, one individual will be asked and expected to contribute to the support of all the enterprises of the Church, to the total program of the Church, including his local church. The local church must be considered in his giving. For this reason the Church itself should do the asking and not the various institutions and boards of the Church. One board might become enthusiastic, make its plans too large, make its askings in terms of its desires and not of its actual needs. Or in making its request it might not consider the needs of the other institutions of the Church; that is to say, Elon College should not be expected or permitted to go to the Convention with its program and say to the Church in Convention assembled: we need so much money for current funds, so much for buildings and improvements, and so much for endowments, and we request the Convention to authorize organizations necessary to secure these funds. But the Convention, in my judgment should constitute a business committee whose responsibility it would be to make a thorough study of the College to see what kind of an institution the Church needs, how much money would be required to provide for support of such a college, and make its askings of the Church for the College based on the findings of this study. This committee should make such a study of the entire program of the Church, including missions, publications, the Orphanage, and the Convention itself, and make its askings for the total program of the Church and lay plans for securing the same. We must come to realize that one department or interest of the Church can't move forward at the expense of another or without the other. It is forward together or not at all. One interest may seem to go without the others and may congratulate itself on its own wisdom and achievements, but eventually that interest will find its foundation pulled from beneath it by the crumbling walls of other interests in the total structure. The program of the Church is a total program. Every interest of the Church is an integral part of that program, and we must learn to think, to act, and to move together that our program may be supported.

In this session of our Convention may we look at our Church as a united body with a great task: the evangelization of the world, the redemption of mankind, and dedicate what we have and are to the accomplishing of this task.

Because of the nature of the Convention, the problems that confront it, and the plans that must be laid for the future, it is imperative that every delegate plan to attend every session of the Convention. Every church in the Convention should have its delegate present. In conference and in council we should express our opinions, our desires and resolve our souls in one united effort to bring in the Kingdom of God in its fullness that our people may be blessed and that His Kingdom may come in us and through us. We must learn to disagree on important issues as Christian people and in our disagreement find a common ground on which we may take our stand as a united body, and consecrate ourselves to the accomplishing of the will of God on earth.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is encouraging that the monthly contributions to the College from the Sunday schools and churches of the Convention are gradually increasing. Each year we go a little ahead of the previous year. At this writing we are a few hundred dollars ahead of last year at even date. It would be more encouraging if the number of supporting Sunday schools and churches was increasing. Increase in totals does not indicate that at the end of the conference year, there will be an increase in contributions for the College on the part of our churches but simply that our churches are paying more quickly so that the College may have the use of the money through the year. This fact is greatly appreciated and should encourage those Sunday schools and churches that have not complied with the Convention's request to join with the rest of us in the support of our college.

We are grateful for every word spoken and every dollar contributed for the support of our institution.

AN IMPORTANT MESSAGE CONCERNING THE SHAOWU MISSION.

Looking back on the Convention of 1946 at Waverly, one of the most outstanding events taking place there was the commissioning of those fine Christian young people—Rev. and Mrs. Richard Jackson and Miss Frances Whitaker—for missionary service in Shaowu, China. (Since then, you know, Dr. Edward Riggs, a Christian physician, has joined them at Shaowu.)

Do you remember what followed that commissioning service? Our offerings from Sunday schools, from churches, from other organizations, and from many individuals were laid upon the altar. We gave $10,000—the financial needs of the first year at Shaowu.

Again in 1947, we undergirded these consecrated servants of Jesus Christ. We gave more than $10,000.

We have come again to the year of the Southern Convention meeting—April 27-29, at Liberty (Vance) Church. Will we again lay our gifts upon the altar—again show our love and support of our Christian ambassadors to Shaowu?

We know that several of our churches, our Sunday schools, and other organizations and individuals within our fellowship have shown that they wish to make a gift to Shaowu, these gifts ranging from $5 to $100. We believe that you, too, or the organization which you represent, will wish to enter this giving. Those giving shares of from $25 to $100 or more will be given a certificate.

It is planned to have an ingathering of gifts and pledges at the coming session of the Convention. On Wednesday evening, April 28, a special service will be held for this purpose. At this time you will have an opportunity to lay your gifts upon the altar.

We have prepared and mailed the following pledge card to Pastor, Sunday school Superintendents, heads of other organizations, and certain individuals:

FOR THE SHAOWU MISSION IN CHINA.

To share the joy of helping carry the message of Jesus Christ and His healing through the Shaowu Mission in China, and to share in the fulfillment of our Church's commitment to our Congregational Christian Missionaries there: Rev. and Mrs. Richard L. Jackson, Miss Frances Whitaker, and Dr. Edward C. Riggs.

It is our/my purpose to give $.....
for this work on or before 19..
Signed

We are requesting Churches, Sunday schools, classes, other organizations and individuals to fill out these cards for the amount desired to be given, and at this special service during the Convention we are asking the people of the Convention to present their pledges, with check or cash for such amounts already collected up to April 28th. (Credit will be given for gifts already received during 1948 and will be reported at the Convention.) What a glorious experience will come to us in laying $10,000 on the altar at that service!

Note: A Sunday school class or organization by giving just $2 per week could in a year contribute a share of $100 to Shaowu.

Giving to Shaowu is more than supporting the Jacksons, Miss Whitaker, and Dr. Riggs. It is possessing a share in the service of the Kingdom of God.

MORNING STAR ARRIVES.

"The STAR! The STAR!" cried the Queen as she ran to meet Rev. Eleanor Wilson, Congregational Christian missionary from Boston who was on her way to church in Lelu, port of Kussaie, Caroline Islands. It was February 22nd, 1948.

"You are joking!" Miss Wilson chided the Queen, recalling the many false rumors during the long months of waiting for the arrival of the little white ship sent by the American Board of Foreign Missions from Boston Harbor last summer.

"No! No!" her Majesty insisted, "It IS the STAR! It has been sighted by Palik."

Now Palik is over 60 and his eyesight is none too good, thought Miss Wilson, but she took no chances. Hurrying out to the farthest point in the harbor she found that already others had gone there and were straining their eyes toward the horizon. Soon the white sails and masts of the Star were plainly visible . . . The people on the first of those "waiting isles" to greet the Morning Star, went wild with joy!

Here are two eye-witness reports by Miss Wilson and Mrs. Charles L. Heuser of Truk, recently of Fryeburg, Maine, which have just reached Boston headquarters.

At Kusaie, Miss Wilson and the Queen, with Caroline Island boys, jumped into a canoe and pulled out to meet the Star and guide her to a mooring.

No Time Wasted.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

After writing about some of the ministers in our Church who did good and noble things, I want to write about a very great man in our Church who was not a minister, but a layman. This man's name was William Allen Harper. Some of you may remember him, for he has only recently died. Dr. Harper was a specialist in Christian Education. He was a teacher, writer, and the president of Elon College.

I visited a family in Elon in 1922 and first met Dr. Harper and his wife. They had no family, their only baby having died when it was very little. I liked to go to the campus and look at the buildings and see the students. Later when my visit was almost forgotten I heard the unhappy news that a fire had burned the college and ruined the campus I loved. Soon after this I went to visit in Elon again and this time Dr. Harper was directing the building of a newer, more modern school. I enjoyed watching the workmen and playing about forbidden spots. Incidentally, I fell on a pile of old concrete and cut my knee and have the scar this very day. So I have decided it pays to listen to advice of mothers and fathers!

When Dr. Harper had the opportunity of rebuilding he planned with vision and courage for a greater Elon. A religious education building or modern Sunday school plant was included in his plans. It was the first of its kind in our nation. It is there today, the Sunday school used by the Elon Community Church. He built well and his work stands.

Every week he wrote for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. These weekly letters plus his book reviews made a contribution of importance to our reading people. As a college president he was so busy that it is hard to believe that he found time to read and write so much. He wrote several books, some of which were used as texts. He was always interested in the Church and served on many boards and committees and as president of his Conference. As an educator, Dr. Harper was often asked to speak or lecture in far away places and he went to do his part. Many people learned of our denomination because of his teachings.

For twenty years he served the Convention as president of Elon. He was the editor of Journal of Christian Education and associate editor of Christian Quarterly. Before he took the presidency of Elon, he was professor of Latin. His was a brilliant mind and it is said that his students knew their Latin well.

I could tell you many more of the things that he did, but I wanted primarily to pay tribute to a man who gave himself to the Church, although he was not a minister and it was not his main work. I want us to remember that it is a good thing when a man loves his Church, gives his life to it, and successfully combines religion and education. Dr. Harper died at Black Mountain, N. C. in 1942.

ANOTHER BOY

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

This is a true story.

"When our third boy was born, Mrs. Grayston, I stifled my disappointment, but when Tommy came I just broke down and cried," Confessed pretty Mrs. Grant, as she straightened the lace tablecloth in her unused dining room. The family always ate in the kitchen "because of the boys."

Mrs. Grayston looked apprehensively at Tommy, who was pasting paper on an airplane.

"Oh, he's often heard this; he doesn't mind," said Mrs. Grant.

"But Tommy does mind," thought Mrs. Graystone, as she crossed the vacant lot between the Grants' home and hers. "That's why he has grown shy, irresponsible—even resentful—and why he spends so much time each day outdoors, by himself, playing his little flute."

When Tommy started to go to school his behavior changed, but not for the better. Perhaps he felt still more lonely than before, more neglected; anyway, he commenced trying to attract attention to himself. He began telephoning people in the neighborhood repeatedly. He rang up Hugh Grayston three or four times within an hour one day, and he even went so far as to call up and invite a little girl to a slide party. She was eagerly excited until her mother telephoned about it and Mrs. Grant said, "Oh, there's no party; that was just Tommy's imagination."

Then Tommy refused to walk to school alone. Punishments were tried, but they had no effect. So his mother went with him—but grudgingly.

"That is the way Mrs. Grant does everything for her boys," Mrs. Grayston said to herself. "She provides the latest books, plenty of toys, good food and clothes—has even given up a favorite club to have more time at home; yet, nevertheless, she does it all grudgingly."

And Tommy soon devised more ways to keep family attention focused upon himself. Hugh Grayston must walk with him too, he insisted, or else he would not go to school. Later he would not go if his next older brother rode his bicycle to school—Tommy was too young to have one—so his brother, as well as his mother and Hugh, had to walk with him.

Being immature, Tommy could not keep up with Hugh in his schoolwork and was consequently placed in a lower section of the class. Then Tommy began to have stomach-aches and could not go to school. The teacher suggested coaching Tommy at home. Soon he was in the upper section again, and his stomach-aches disappeared.

One Saturday morning the boys were playing with a train at the Graystons' home. Mrs. Grant came over for Tommy, because it was time for his dancing class. He didn't want to go. Mrs. Grayston suggested that her younger boy go along to watch Tommy dance. Tommy was then eager to go, for this gave him a chance to show off.

Then, on a certain occasion his teacher noticed Tommy standing during a school program, unconsciously imitating the orchestra leader. Thinking this and other incidents over, she realized the boy was very musical and later remarked to Mrs. Grant that if he had a legitimate chance to show off it would counteract his feeling of being unwanted—the mother had confessed to her how grudgingly she had accepted this fourth son.

That very afternoon, when Tommy was leading a play band on the lawn, his mother suggested organizing a neighborhood orchestra to meet regularly at their house. The boy was delighted and was soon absorbed in this new enterprise.

A little while after this, remembering his desire for a party, Mrs. Grant said they might give one on Tommy's birthday.

"Oh Mother," he said, "let me invite the boys and girls—and could we—could we have the ice cream on the lace cloth in the dining room?" His eyes were shining.

"Yes—oh, yes!" His mother was conscious-stricken.

From this time on, Tommy's yearning for attention and the home privileges that go with gracious living were increasingly staisfied, and the little boy became adjusted and normal.

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.

uarl way, mother and son are reunited.

"The Search" is sublimely moving in its development, its ignoring of non-essential details in portraying what makes a life worth saving and worth living. Actually photographed in devastated European areas and displaced persons camps, the film has authenticity, is well directed, magnificently acted and well integrated as a story.

It is to be hoped that the work of UNRRA, so well depicted here, will be continued by other means until all the motherless and lost children of the world are again cared for. This becomes the task of all those who believe that the essence of everyday religion is sharing food and shelter with those in desperate need. What greater incentive can the Christian Church have, when observing Mother's Day and Family Week, than to make the love of God known to the motherless children and the childless mothers of the world through the avenues provided for such efforts?

This is a picture for the whole family. Our children should know what others have and are eduring and learn that, as long as children are suffering anywhere in the world, they have the privilege of helping them and sharing with them. — Protestant Motion Picture Council.

FILMS SUITABLE FOR CHURCH SHOWING (16mm).

Listed below are a number of subjects from different sources, all of which, except where otherwise stated, may be obtained through denominational book-stores, local film laboratories or visual aids dealers. It is suggested that you make your own reference catalog by clipping these reviews as they appear from time to time.

Queen Esther (50 minutes; sound). Recently we reviewed this new picture produced by Cathedral Films. Because of its great beauty and value as a teaching film with high entertainment qualities, we are calling it to your attention again. In these days of religious misunderstanding and prejudice, it is well to see this Bible Drama with its message that God never fails those who love and serve Him. A study guide and film strip are available to be used as teaching aids. Rental, $16.

Searchlight on the Nations (30 minutes; sound). One of the best of the films recently produced by the U. N. Department of Public Information, this film is a three-reel exposition of the part played by the great media of communication—press, radio, films—in promoting understanding and material progress in the world today. Available in French, Spanish or English. Rental, $4. Address: United Nations, Film Section, Lake Success, New York.

The World is Rich (43 minutes; sound). British-made film designed to rally support behind the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations. Slow-moving at first, but has definite emotional as well as informative values. Should be effective in showing how all arms of the United Nations must have the support of men everywhere. Rental, $6.

The Way of Peace (18 minutes; sound; color). Puppets and miniature sets are used to present this story. Narration, by Lew Ayers, tells of God's love for man and His efforts to overcome man's selfishness. Scenes depict Bethlehem, Jesus' teaching of love, and the Cross of Calvary. Recent events picture concentration camps and rocket-borne atomic warfare, with final scenes of the earth dissolving in space. The film should be followed by discussion or a message giving the positive side of ways to peace. $8.

There Were Three Men (10 minutes; sound, color). About cooperative methods, this film's story is cleverly told by animation. The action involves a farmer beset by failure and the weather and a laborer struggling with the high cost of living who pool their efforts successfully, and thereby convince a skeptic. Order from The Cooperative League, 167 West 12th Street, New York, N. Y. Rental, $3.

Book of Books (10 minutes; sound). Produced under the supervision of the American Bible Society, this film shows how we got the Bible, the history of Bible manufacture, how Bibles were illustrated, copied by hand, then printed one page at a time on crude presses, down to the present modes of production and distribution. There is also a worship service, with the pastor reading Isaiah 34:16. Rental, $1.50.

Two Thousand Years Ago. A series of five films showing the kind of life lived in Palestine in the time of Jesus. The following subjects are available: The Home, The School, The Day's Work, The Travellers, and The Synagogue. Produced by the Education Committee of Christian Cinema and the Religious Film Society, these religious-educational documentaries can be rented for $6 each. Write to the United World Films, Inc., 445 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Visitation Evangelism. Prepared on an undenominational basis, this black-and-white filmstrip with manual can be used to illustrate the procedures necessary in putting on a visitation evangelistic program in the church. Order from the United Christian Missionary Society, Indianapolis, Ind. $2.

Three Filmstrips (15 minutes each). The three filmstrips are: Widening Horizons, showing women of Ginling, Yenching and Cheoloo colleges and their role in the New China; The Woman's Christian College of Japan at Tokyo, demonstrating the place of educated Christian women in the new democratic life of Japan; and Vellore in the New India, portraying the famous institution founded by Dr. Ida S. Scudder where training is given for health work in a land of 388,000,000 people. Order from The United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. $1 rental for set with commentary.

Our American Heritage. A series of six teaching filmstrips prepared by The Reader's Digest Educational Department as their contribution to the interest of the tour of the Freedom Train. Historical drawing, photographs, pictographs, cartoons and texts are used for the following strips which make up the series: Birth of Our Freedom, Freedom's Foundation, Freedom's Progress, Freedom Today, Vocabulary of Freedom and Literature of Freedom. Order through your local distributor of the Reader's Digest Educational Department. The entire series including a 40-page illustrated teaching guide, may be obtained at $19.50. Courtesy of Christian Herald.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

ZECHARIAH PLEADS FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

LESSON IV—APRIL 25, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Execute true judgement, and show kindness and compassion every man to his neighbor. Zechariah 7:9.

LESSON: Zechariah 1:1-6, 4:7-8.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 24:1-6.

An Appeal to History.

"Jehovah was sore displeased with your fathers." It was an appeal to history. And there were the stubborn facts confronting them. In spite of the fact that they were the "chosen people" of Jehovah, in spite of the fact that they had the Temple in their midst, in spite of the fact that the other nations were nations which knew not the God of Israel, the nation had been destroyed and the nationals had been taken into captivity. Thus the prophet boldly made his appeal to history.

Well sometimes schoolboys and young people in college think that history is dull stuff and dry reading. And some history may be so far as the text is concerned. But history is very important reading. And history is a well equipped teacher. Individuals and nations can learn a great deal from history. For instance we think of our great nation, and it is a great nation with its wealth and its people and its institutions and its power and its history. And we glibly say "It can't happen to us." But Babylon and Nineveh and Tyre and Egypt and Greece and Rome, also said that. Nations and individuals that play fast and loose with great moral ideals and spiritual idealism will go the way of all nations.

Restoration Through Penitence and Repentance.

"Return unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts." Whatever else sin does, it breaks a personal relationship. And peace and joy can come only as the old relationship is restored. The way back for those who have turned away from God is to turn back in penitence and repentance. God has taken the initiative, but forgiveness awaits man's penitence.

Punishment Through Disobedience.

"Be not like your fathers . . . they did not hear, nor hearken unto me, saith Jehovah." There is an old saying, "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." It might be paraphrased to read, "Those who are destroyed, God first warns." Indeed there is no limit to which God will not go to restrain the wicked from his way, and to redeem the unrighteous from his sin. His spirit may not always strive with me, but it stops striving, if at all, only in the last resort. But today if ye hear his voice harden not your hearts.

Righteousness Above Ritual.

The words in Zechariah 7 were probably spoken in reply to a question on the part of certain peoples about fasts and religious ceremonies which had been held since Jerusalem fell in 586 B. C. The prophet's reply showed that he, like his predecessors, believed that righteousness took precedence above ritual. To be sure ritual has a place and a legitimate place in religion. All things should be done decently and in order. We are to worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness. But the thing that counts is the inner spirit. Thus it was that the prophet insisted upon righteousness, and more than that upon social righteousness. What a different world this would be if people practiced his precepts:

Execute true judgment—courts of justice would be just that; show kindness and compassion every man to his brother—a tender heart and a helping spirit; oppress not the widow or the fatherless, the sojourner and the poor—there are people who are like vultures in their attitude toward the type of people listed above; let none of you devise evil against his brother in your heart—avoid not only outward acts but purge your hearts from evil thoughts and unlawful desires. How many there are today who devise evil things against their fellowmen!

Ears That Hear Not.

"But they refused to hearken and pulled away their shoulder, stopped their ears, that they might not hear." Quite often folks do not hear because they do not want to hear. They know that if they listen to the voice of God they will have to stop doing something they have been doing, or they will have to start doing something that they have not been doing. And the tragedy is that the more we refuse to listen the less power we have to listen. Let every man take heed how he hears.

The Wages of Sin.

We are smarter in some ways than the man of that far off day. We think we are smart enough to get away with most anything. But now as then, eventually the wrath of God comes upon all those who do evil. This does not mean of course that God like a petulant child tries to "get even" or that God is "mad at us." It does mean that sin invokes the displeasure of God, and that the moral government of the universe brooks no disobedience in the long run to its principles. Now as then the wages of sin is death, and all the skill and science of man cannot change that. Only the grace of God in Jesus Christ can give us eternal life.

PASS IT ON.

When the Lord has given blessing by tract or little book
Do not leave it idly lying in some soon-forgotten nook;
There are others to be warded and hungry souls to feed,
So seek to spread the blessing that has reached you in your need.
With its freshness yet upon you ere the first glad glow has gone,
Let your heart look up for guidance that your hand may pass it on;
And the one from you receiving, blessing gaining just like you,
Can keep that blessing flowing and pass it on anew;
And when "the day declares it" and you hear the words, "Well done."
How sweet to know the Lord was pleased—you have read this, "Pass it on."

WHY I GO TO SUNDAY SCHOOL REGULARLY.

ginning of my knowledge of the Bible and my understanding of its great truths. It was there, also, that I received the urge that caused me to make my decision to live the Christian life. It fired my ambition to seek a high school and a college education. It determined my life purpose; the welfare of boys and young men. My athletic success at Yale led me to shape that service through athletic channels. The progress of the United States and the world depends on the Sunday school."

Certainly with such a great responsibility as individuals we cannot be content to stay at home and not attend Sunday school regularly!

In Matt. 9:37-38, Jesus said to his disciples, "The harvest truly is plentiful, but the laborers are few; Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into his harvest."

MORNING STAR ARRIVES.

hands with Captain Price Lewis. Then more canoes came up. The people streamed out of the church," Miss Wilson writes, adding that as soon as skipper Lewis had had time to take a salt dip and change clothes, he was escorted to church.

"He looked like the Pied Piper of Hamelin with a great crowd of children following him!" Miss Wilson writes. He spoke a few words and presented King John of Kusaie the Bible, specially marked, which had been sent him by the Massachusetts Bible Society.

"I would have given a great deal to have had a picture of the King as he saw his name in gold letters on the front of the book," Miss Wilson continues "but unfortunately it was too dark for a picture."

Tough Trip—Tough Beards.

The Morning Star had had a rather tough trip down from Honolulu. A five day tropical gale had damaged her, although not seriously. However, it gave the crew no time for such niceties as shaving. "They are a fine bunch of boys even if they do look terrible with their beards!" Miss Wilson declares.

In Which Eleanor Meets a Domestic Crisis.

Naturally the crew were eager for a fresh water bath. But alas, there was almost no water left in the mission tank due to a long drought. So some of the native lads took the crew over to a fresh water river to clean up. Next was a meal—a meal on shore—in a house! Miss Wilson did her best for her unexpected guests. They sat down to breadfruit, bananas and a cake some one had donated to her. Just as they were about to begin eating in walked Dr. Harold Hanlin, ex-Navy Chaplain of World War II, now back in the Pacific as an American Board missionary. Others had heard of the Star's arrival and had sent him over with a cooked chicken and a tapioca banana cake!

*"Jam Yesterday—Jam Tomorrow
—But Never Jam Today."*

"We had no butter or jam so I mashed up some apple bananas, put in a little lime juice and sugar, and called it 'jam,'" Miss Wilson writes, "It went over big. There was none left!"

The Skipper 'A Hunting Goes.'

Next day it rained but the skipper went wild pig hunting while the crew visited with Miss Wilson and enjoyed breadfruit soup, more bananas, and later some fresh bread and home-made doughnuts. "How they went for the doughnuts," Miss Wilson reports. "It did my soul good to see them enjoy the things."

The Star Goes On.

The second day the Star started for Yellu harbor to deliver some of its cargo. Then she went on to other islands with many of the tongue twisting names so familiar to many American GIs who served in the Pacific—Jaluit, Ebon, Ailinlaplap, Kwajalein, Mille, Wotje, Aliuk and Arno, as well as Majuro, where they planned to repaint the Star.

Like a Harvard and Yale Game.

It was at Truk that the Charles Heusers, new young missionaries from New England, greeted the Star. With their small son Charlie they left their Congregational pastorate in Fryeburg, Maine, last summer to go out to the South Seas. Amidst the uproar of welcome baby Charlie clung to his father's shoulders where he was perched.

"If you multiplied about ten-fold the shouts of the crowd at a Harvard and Yale game you might get a little idea of the bedlam let loose," Mrs. Heuser writes. "Men, women, children, and babies were laughing and shouting. Such exuberance you never heard. We let them shout themselves hoarse for the Star means so much to these people."

Luke 2:2930.

"I am sure there are some old folks here now who will die in peace knowing that God's word will be carried through these waters once again," Mrs. Heuser continued. They will probably turn the Star into a floating cathedral and have their baptisms and weddings aboard her.

"Truly it is not the same with the people here as it is in the USA. Out here these people have a sacred feeling toward the boat that is truly amazing!"

With Tears and With Laughter.

It is indeed hard to imagine what God's little white ship from the Congregational Christian Churches of America means to these island Christians. But Makhoelan and Kefwas are two good examples.

Makhoelan, now over 70, piloted the Morning Star VI into Yellu harbor. His face was beaming, for Makhoelan had served as second mate on Morning Star IV and V back in 1884 and 1901. And Kefwas, more than 103, wept when he learned he was to see again a Morning Star. He had been cook on Star V and he is the only person around who remembers when Rev. and Mrs. Benjamin C. Snow came out to the islands in 1852.

A Bit About the Crew.

Some of the college boys who sailed the Morning Star from Boston last summer (1947) had to return to college from Panama and their places were taken by substitutes. The original crew had men from Dartmouth, Oberlin and Amherst. From Panama to Honolulu the crew included an American, born in China; an American born in Montana; a Canadian born in Sweden; an American born in England, and an Ecuadorian born in Germany. This recalls the historical fact that the crew of Morning Star I sailed in 1856 had in its crew a Belgian; a Nova-Scotian; an Englishman, a Dane and a Scotsman!

In Hawaii, as previously planned, John F. Fairfield, a missionary-elect to China, gave up his post as radio officer and young Loren Miller, fresh out of the Navy, and son of Rear Admiral Thornton C. Miller, U. S. N. took over. The crew also included Daniel Akaka and Al and Joe Linessch, college men with an interest in native art,—all of Honolulu. From Boston to Honolulu went Rowland "Pappy" Pearson, genial cook from New Bedford, Mass., and from Panama to the South Seas went Henrietta, sea-going missionary kitten, who was the Star's mascot and moral builder. Out in the Marshalls and Carolines we understand that already more than 200 men want to work on the Star.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

It has been a long, hard pull, but most of the building at the Christian Orphanage has been completed except one that will be erected in the near future. Thirty-two years ago, when the writer took charge as superintendent, the Orphanage had only one building for children, one hundred thirty-two acres of land in a poor state of cultivation, but a splendid Board of Trustees who were interested and cooperated in all the undertakings. That was in 1916. Mr. W. K. Holt was elected President and chairman of the Board at the first meeting. The Orphanage was badly in debt at that time and it had no credit. To tell you the truth the people were not much interested in it. My first job as superintendent was to get our folks more interested and raise money to pay off the indebtedness, and re-establish the Orphanage credit.

At that time we had forty-two children, poorly fed and poorly clothed. We have always felt happy over the fact that our people have always come to our aid when a real need was to be met. We needed more land, and the Church people and friends made it possible from time to time to buy more land and pay for it.

We need more buildings for children, and the Church people and friends made it possible to build the "Baby Home" and "Johnston Hall" which gives us three nice brick buildings.

We needed a modern dairy barn and cow shed, which has been provided.

Through the years we have at all times been blessed with a splendid Board of Trustees who have administered the affairs of the Orphanage in a very fine way. Their motto has always been to pay as you go.

Today, we have three nice brick buildings, all of them recently painted on the inside and outside, repairs made where needed, and all in a first class condition.

We now have a farm of two hundred seventy-five acres, land that is in a high state of cultivation. We have all the farm houses we need for grain, hay, etc.

During the years the Orphanage has developed a fine herd of mostly Holstein cattle consisting of fifty head, which produces all the milk the children use and we sell the surplus.

Then through the years the Orphanage has trained and set out many fine boys and girls who are now filling their places as good citizens of our great country. The Orphanage gave them a home when they needed a home. It gave them a chance and they have made good.

The Orphanage now has nearly one hundred as fine little children as you will find in any Orphanage or children's home. In other words, the Congregational Christian Church has an Orphanage with its beautiful plant out of debt, with its bill all paid to date, and an institution that the Church may well feel proud of. It is certainly worthy of your thoughts, your prayers, and your support.

NORTH CAROLINA TOPS THE LIST AGAIN.

Once again the church people of North Carolina lead in relief giving through their churches and Church World Service. Last week's report from the Church World Service Center at New Winsor, Md., showed that 400,000 pounds of clothing, shoes, bedding and other needed items had been received there from the state since January 1, 1948. The nearest contender for top place was 100,000 pounds behind. Center officials specially commended the quality of materials that had come from North Carolina in the past few months, as well as the careful packing that has been typical of most donations. Such care on the part of donors hastens the processing of materials at the Center and sends them quickly on their way to the needy.

Counting the gifts that have reached the Center in the last eleven months, North Carolinians have contributed over one million pounds. This figure, of course, does not include the supplies which have gone to the Church World Service Center at New Orleans or through other relief organizations.

FOR SALE.

One cross. Nearly new. I cannot carry it and keep up with the world and its crowd.

One pound. New, except slightly shelf-worn. It has been laid away for years in a napkin.

One five-piece set of armor. All pieces are in good shape; only needs polishing.

One bundle of Christian opportunities. Contained in this bundle is one of the greatest opportunities in the world, and that is of going to church every Sunday. Another one is the opportunity of being a soul winner. I seldom use these opportunities, so have decided to let them go for sale.

One badly-used Christian influence. Buyer may be able to repair this influence if carefully handled.

The above-mentioned articles are stored in the basement of my home, located on the corner of Careless Avenue and Neglect Street.

TRAFFIC FATALITIES.

Traffic accidents took the lives of 32,500 Americans in 1947, according to figures released recently by The Travelers Insurance Companies.

While last year's highway death toll was less than the 33,900 fatalities recorded in 1946, the 1947 total of persons injured was substantially greater. More than 1,365,000 were injured by automobiles last year, while in 1946, 1,300,000 injuries were counted.

The accident figures are contained in a booklet entitled "The Fifth Commandment," fourteenth in an annual series of traffic safety publications issued by the companies.

More pedestrians were killed last year than in 1946, reversing the downward trend in the overall death total. Calling this "perhaps the most significant single fact in the 1947 traffic record," the booklet points out that 10,940 pedestrian deaths last year even exceeds the 1941 total in that category. In 1941, an all-time high of 40,000 persons—pedestrians, passengers and drivers—were killed.

The report, based on official records from every state, contains tables comparing accident figures for last year with the 1946 summaries. In a foreword, Jesse W. Randall, president of The Travelers, explains the booklet's title as the outgrowth of talks with prominent churchmen.

"All agreed," Mr. Randall reports, "that the fifth of the fundamental commandments, 'Thou shalt not kill,' applies to death on the highways. The Fifth Commandment means that nothing on earth can be so important that a man's life should be risked for it, unless in the very risking of life the man becomes better equipped for eternity."

Other highlights from "The Fifth Commandment":

Two out of every three auto accidents in 1946 involved mistakes by drivers.

Exceeding the speed limit headed the list of accident causes. Speeding killed 9,400 and injured 260,000.

Crossing between intersections killed 3,200 pedestrians and injured 51,000.

Four thousand children under fifteen years of age were killed by automobiles. More than 80 per cent of 1947 crashes occurred in clear weather. One-third of the 32,500 deaths occurred on the open highway. Defective brakes killed 990 and injured 22,000.

Forty per cent of the traffic deaths occurred on week-ends.

An Epic of Hands

By C. B. RIDDLE

The history of the United States could well be classed as an epic of hands.

It was skilled hands of men now forgotten who made the Mayflower—hands that unwittingly shaped a sign and symbol for a new era in the world.

It was patient hands that made flintlock muskets, constructed log houses, and were frostbitten and bleeding at Valley Forge, that fashioned the destiny of a free and independent nation.

It was sinewy hands that built schools, churches, constructed boats, and built roads that the new nation might make progress in spiritual and material ways.

It was thorny hands of Irish, Polish and other comers to the shores of a free land that laid crossties, rails, and drove spikes from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

It was hands bathed in sweat that cleared the wilderness and cultivated farms that have increased in number and size to make this the greatest food-producing country in the world. And it is hands behind plow, tractor, and reaper that make it possible for this nation to help feed the world.

With hands the people of the United States have produced weapons to defend their great country and its institutions. With their hands they buried their war dead, but they hold out no hands to seek material recompense.

The people of the United States figuratively stretch their hands across the seas, beckoning to other nations for peace and petitioning them for fairness to all races.

We are a people of uplifted hands, not as a sign of surrender, but as a symbol that we are free because hands of our forebears made us so.

No man can feel himself alone
The while he bravely stands
Between the best friends ever known—
His two good, honest hands.

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1948.

NUMBER 17.

Host Church to the Convention

LIBERTY CHURCH

Liberty Church in historic Vance County will be host to the Convention next week. Those who have enjoyed the hospitality of this church will welcome the opportunity to return. Those who go for the first time will enjoy the rural setting, the spacious grounds and delectable meals. This substantial church will dramatize the possibilities of rural church development, remind us all of its basic contributions to the growth of the city church, and focus attention upon the importance of maintaining and strengthening the rural bases of our Convention enterprise. Many excellent pastors have served this church and nurtured it through the years. Rev. T. Fred Wright is now pastor of the host church. In this sacred place, hallowed by countless memories, surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses, the Convention will gird itself to run the race that is set, looking unto Jesus.

NEWS AND VIEWS

The Suffolk Christian Church is having its organ rebuilt.

James Woodrow Madren and Marjorie Norfleet Moore were married at Suffolk, Virginia, on Saturday, March 27. Mr. and Mrs. Madren are living at Elon College.

The Pilgrim Fellowship at Pfafftown Church, near Winston-Salem, pledged $25 for the Shaowu work and will hope to present the cash with the pledge at the Southern Convention.

Baxter Twiddy, president of Pilgrim Fellowship of the Southern Convention, and Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, have been recent guest preachers at Salem Chapel.

The Winston-Salem Church has sent THE CHRISTIAN SUN to all new members of the church. The church pays the subscription price the first year and hopes that the member will continue the subscription price after that.

Rev. T. Fred Wright, pastor of Bethlehem Church in Warren County reports growing interest and attendance in the work of the church there. Mr. Wright is serving this church in addition to Liberty (Vance) and Mt. Gilead Churches.

Elk Spur reopened its Sunday school the first Sunday in April after having been closed during the winter. Rocky Ford began on full schedule also this month, after having only part-time Sunday school and preaching services during the winter.

June 7-11 will be the Rural Pastors' School, the Christian Convocation at Duke University. All of our pastors should reserve this date. Dr. Thomas Tripp will be one of the faculty and will be especially helpful to all of the Congregational Christian ministers.

Mt. Auburn Church, Rev. E. M. Carter, pastor, received eight new members on Sunday, April 11. The church is also putting on a drive for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and through the generosity of one of the laymen and of the Sunday school eleven new subscriptions have been received during the past week at Mt. Auburn Church.

Rev. M. A. Pollard, pastor of Pleasant Hill and Liberty Churches of the Western Conference reports that during the Evangelistic Crusade 18 new members were received at Pleasant Hill on confession of faith, and a total of 22 members received at Liberty, 17 coming on confession of faith.

Rev. Bland A. Leebrick, pastor of Carolina Church, near Burlington, N. C., announces that Rev. W. W. Hall will deliver the dedication address in the cemetery of the church on Home

THOS. L. MOOSE.

President, Southern Synodical Federation of the Churchmen's Brotherhood of the Evangelical and Reformed Church.

Coming Day, May 23, 1948. As previously announced, Rev. Roy D. Coulter of the Virginia Valley Conference will deliver the Memorial Day Address on this occasion. All former pastors are invited to attend, and members and friends are urged to be present.

AN APPRECIATION.

We wish to express to our friends who made so generous an offering to us at the mid-year conference our heartfelt thanks. We have been kindly remembered with cards, letters and gifts, which we are sure were sent with prayers for our recovery from our sickness of several months. For all we are very grateful, and pray that God may bless and reward.

EASTER AT SALEM CHAPEL.

Easter at Salem Chapel, near Walnut Cove, N. C., was made very real this year by a joint service with the Fulp Moravian Church, located very near Salem Chapel.

Beginning at 3:30 p. m. on Easter Sunday a joint Communion service was held at Salem Chapel. The service was conducted by Rev. W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem, with Rev. John Capp, pastor of Fulp Moravian Church, speaking. Soloists for the Communion service were Mrs. James Fulp of the Salem Chapel Church and Mrs. Lester Reich of the Winston-Salem Congregational Christian Church.

At 4:00 p. m. the people went at once to the Fulp Moravian Church where we stood in a semi-circle at the cemetery—God's Acre as the Moravians call it—and joined in the old responsive reading and singing of the old hymns of the Moravian Church. These hymns, supremely beautiful and appropriate, are always accompanied by the band. It always seems as if we might hear the invisible choir joining us in the singing. There is a feeling of great spiritual exaltation expressed in the music:

What are these in bright array,
This innumerable throng,
Round the altar night and day,
Hymning one triumphant song:
'Worthy is the Lamb once slain,
Blessing, honor, glory, power,
Wisdom, riches, to obtain,
New dominion every hour?'

These through fiery trials trod,
These from great affliction came;
Now, before the throne of God,
Sealed with his almighty name,
Clad in raiment pure and white,
Victor palms in every hand,
Through their dear Redeemer's might,
More than conquerors they stand.

At the close of the printed service, Mr. Andes spoke briefly on the meaning of the Resurrection and the joy of interdenominational fellowship. Mr. Andes also gave the benediction following the closing hymn of the traditional Moravian service:

I give thee thanks unfeigned,
O Jesus, friend in need,
For what thy soul sustained,
When thou for me didst bleed:
Grant me to lean unshaken
Upon thy faithfulness,
Until I hence am taken
To see thee face to face.

A VACATION WORTH WHILE.

"As I told you the other day, Mary and I have been invited to make a trip to California with good and generous friends, and we have decided to go. We will leave here Saturday morning, May 1, to be gone for at least four weeks. The church has generously voted to give me the month of May instead of the month of August, and fortunately there is a very capable minister here available for the supply work in May. Needless to say we are looking forward to the trip, on which we will visit many places of historic interest and scenic beauty."

The above is from a letter written by Dr. H. S. Hardecastle to the managing editor of THE SUN.

Needless to say that before leaving for this trip "Hardy" has seen to it that the Sunday School Notes will be well written during his absence. If all departments of the paper were run with the minimum of effort on our part required for this, then being a managing editor could really be a joy. The guest editors for the ensuing weeks will be:

May 16—Rev. Robert Kimball, Franklin, Va.

May 23—Rev. William Wood of the Damascus Pastorate.

May 30—Dr. William E. Wisseman, Greensboro, N. C.

June 6—Rev. Stanley Carne, First Church, Portsmouth, Va.

June 13—Rev. John Gwin, First Church, Norfolk, Va.

June 20—Rev. Ellis Clarke, Berea, Norfolk, Va.

We know that the Sunday School Lesson page will be well taken care of while you are away, "Hardy." We are just a little envious of you since we can't go along. However, we know readers of THE SUN will join us in wishing for you and "Mary" just the most wonderful vacation of a lifetime and a safe return to resume the post where you have served so well.

SPRING RALLY HELD AT RANDLEMAN.

The Randolph-Lee-Chatham-Moore Rally was held April 2 at the Randleman Church at Randleman, N. C.

The meeting convened at 10:30 a. m., opening with a hymn, "Father of Lights," followed by prayer and recognition of visitors by the host minister, Rev. Lowdermilk. The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. F. C. Lester, and in the absence of the District Superintendent of the Lee - Chatham - Moore District, Mrs. Harry Stewart of the Randolph District presided and appointed the following Committees:

Mrs. Lester then introduced Rev. He stated that scientists with all their knowledge of

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

Don't miss it, "You'll be sorry!" Anything can happen. Some things must. From the first rap of the gavel by President Wisseman to the election of the next president and the benediction, the law of relativity will be in operation. Read the program, study the advanced reports, get all the inside information, then expect the unexpected. Verbal tilts, inspired utterances, spontaneous resolutions, light and dark horses, these are some of the extra-programmed features which may be expected to enliven if not enrich the sessions of the Convention.

An excellent program has been prepared. The various phases of our Convention work will be considered in prompt succession. Voices within and beyond the Convention will be heard. Delegates will face stubborn problems, glimpse distant horizons, and await the collective will.

These are momentous days. A deep humility and earnestness should pervade our deliberations. Let no one approach this Convention without a deep searching of heart and a prayer for divine guidance. The Holy Spirit is not on the program but must be in the program. Attend the Convention. Go with an open mind, a contrite heart and an expectant spirit.

THE ANNUAL.

The proceedings of the Conference and auxiliary bodies within the Southern Convention for 1947 are now available in published form. The Annual reflects a vast amount of work: the work done by churches, conferences and auxiliary bodies together with the statistical compilations, the printing, binding and distribution of the Annuals.

Having spent approximately one thousand dollars for the publication of these proceedings, it now becomes our duty to see that the money and effort were not wasted. The first requirement is to see that they are distributed judiciously in every church and not consigned to a permanent berth in back of the pulpit. One or more mid-week services, or a quarterly conference could be spent profitably in a study of the Annual. Here may be found data and illustrative material for sermons and discussions. Church officers who claim to be familiar with our polity cannot ignore the Annual.

A perusal of these pages leaves one with mingled emotions. On the one hand there are superficial reports to conferences, churches with woefully inadequate budgets and no accessions to membership. On the other hand, there are factual and even scholarly reports to conferences, ministers who give full time to closely yoked or single parishes, and churches with enviable financial and membership gains. Every report, every church and conference is an example, good, bad or indifferent.

Here, then, is our record for the world, for time and eternity. Statistical information from the Annual will be recorded in the Year Book which is published by the General Council. As we read some of it, we blush with shame, but what of 1948? There is time yet to make it different and better. By God's grace we can and must.

We are indebted to those who have helped make this important publication possible. We shall be even more greatly indebted to anyone who can devise and execute a plan to get the conference minutes into the hands of the people before half of the Conference year has expired.

WHITHER EVANGELISM?

Since the report on our Evangelistic Crusade following Easter a number of supplemental reports have been received. These indicate that evangelistic efforts continue to bear fruit. Our church year is half over. If the evangelistic opportunities inherent in Pentecost and revivals during the summer are fully explored, we should easily double our mid-year score. This will give us a total of approximately 1,200 for the year within the Convention.

It is gratifying to realize that the majority of our ministers took the Evangelistic Crusade seriously. The lay forces cooperated with varying degrees of spontaneity. Some ministers had to carry the weight of the movement almost single-handed. Valuable training and rich experience were gained by those who had the grace and courage to accept evangelistic assignments.

By way of comparison it is noted that the 41 Methodist charges in the Richmond, Virginia, district have received 1,249 new members since October, according to a report of the current district conference. The charges, some of which include more than one church, reported a net gain of 969 in Sunday School membership. Our gains, we must admit, are modest. They are indicative only of what may be done if we are unswervingly faithful to the Master's command to evangelize. The Convention should accentuate the Crusade and send us back to our churches with new vision and power.

When the great finals come, each one will be asked five questions:

First: What did you accomplish in the world with the power that God gave you?

Second: How did you help your neighbor and what did you do for those in need?

Third: What did you do to serve God?

Fourth: What did you leave in the world that was worth while when you came from it?

Last: What did you bring into this new world which will be of use here?

SUGGESTIONS FOR A VACATION.

Selecting the kind of vacation to take is a recurring problem for most of us. A New Jersey minister solved this quandary when he decided to combine a vacation with the opportunity to get up-to-date information on what was going on in the world. He attended the annual Silver Bay missionary conference at Lake George in New York, and arrived home so completely rested and full of sermon material that he has been returning to the same spot each year.

If you face the same problem as the New Jersey minister, you should register for one of two early summer conferences on the Christian world mission being planned by four leading interdenominational agencies.

These conferences will be held in first-rate resort areas combining beautiful surroundings with excellent recreational facilities. They will convene, respectively, at East Northfield, Mass., June 25-July 3, and Silver Bay, N. Y., July 14-21.

The bodies sponsoring the conferences are the Home Missions Council of North America; the Foreign Missions Conference of North America; the United Council of Church Women, and the Missionary Education Movement.

Laymen as well as ministers stand to benefit from attending the conference. Seminars, workshops, and meetings are being arranged to challenge the interest of church officers, missionary group leaders, church-school teachers, and others engaged in religious work. Practical instruction in specialized fields as well as inspiration will be provided in these sessions.

Although conference schedules are not yet complete, these are some of the subjects which are slated for discussion: "Visual Aids in the Local Church," "America's Geographical Frontiers," "China in the Asia of Today," "Christianity and Other World Views," "Missionary Education in the Local Church," and many other vital subjects related to foreign and home mission work.

Here is additional information about each conference:

East Northfield, Mass.—This is a conference primarily for church women, and girls (aged 16-24) designed to provide a clear understanding of the Christian world missions, combined with specific training. Founded 15 years ago when delegates to the Women's Interdenominational Home Missionary Conference and the Conference of Women Foreign Missionary Societies voted to unite, it has achieved an international reputation, China having established a "Little Northfield" of its own.

Held at the Northfield School for Girls, established by Dwight L. Moody, the conference will feature twenty-four outstanding church leaders from Europe, Asia, Canada, and the United States. They will conduct classes covering a wide range of subjects, together with workshops, seminars, discussions, and formal meetings. Special activities for youth are also planned.

Among well known leaders present will be the Rev. Henry S. Leiper, as

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In January 170 church people under the direction of their pastors and the Rev. John Halko, secretary of the Federation of Churches, Washington, D. C., made a survey of the religious status of the city of Suffolk. The Negro churches are completing their religious census this week. The statistics given here are of the white churches.

There were many excellent results from this survey. For one thing it was beneficial to have the twelve white churches work together in perfect harmony, plans made together, a supper together, and then to go out on a mission for the church together. It was the right spirit. And it was a blessing to the city. Also it helped each of these churches to bring their church rolls up to date as to street addresses, and revealed other helpful information about every home in the church as well as those outside the church. Again it gave to each pastor and his workers a rather complete list of prospective members. These were thirty-four pages on legal size paper of names telling what church they were members of, if any; whether they were members of Sunday school, and where; how often they attended each; their approximate age; what church they preferred, etc. The workers had been carefully trained at the supper meeting by Mr. Halko as to the best technique in securing this information. A special card for the city of Suffolk had been planned and printed in order that the information requested should be most adaptable to our situation. For instance, if a person preferred the Methodist Church the card was so arranged as to secure the answer as to whether he meant the Main Street Methodist, or the Oxford Methodist—the First Baptist, or the West End Baptist.

The canvassers secured information on six thousand, eight hundred and forty-three persons (6,843). Of them 1,579 gave no church as their church, thus, as we say, they belonged to the "big church," for the reason that there were more of that number than any other. The remainder of the names followed in the following order: First Baptist, 1,493; Christian, 1,283; Main Street Methodist, 741; West End Baptist, 485; Oxford Methodist, 382; St. Paul's Episcopal, 320; Presbyterian, 203; Hebrews, 124;

Catholics, 113; Salvation Army, 54; Pentecostal Holiness, 37; Church of God, 13. There were more women than men in Suffolk—men, 3,191; women, 3,652. It was interesting to see that more than one-fourth of those attending church were of the ages of from 20 to 34. The largest group of those attending are from the ages of 35 to 59. It was discovered that on a given Sunday as many as 66 per cent of Suffolk people do not attend church, or that for all who are at our combined churches there are twice that many at home or elsewhere. And that is not a comparatively low figure so we are told by those who follow such statistics.

At any rate church and Sunday school attendance has picked up slightly since the survey, many members have been received in the churches and Sunday schools, and they are still coming.

FROM AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

I have been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for more than forty years. That means that more than 2,000 copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN have come to my address at different offices in the Southland, where I received my mail.

During the ten years that I spent in South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Alabama, my brother would roll my CHRISTIAN SUNS—three to the roll—and send them to me at whatever office I might be for only a few months at the time. Since the discouraging loss that came to me because of failing banks and failing business concern together with real estate slumps in 1931 and 1932 which took almost all of my life-savings, I have been in Eastern North Carolina and in South Carolina, but I still take THE CHRISTIAN SUN. As soon as I read it I pass it on to somebody else, usually one who does not know much about the Congregational Christian Church and less about Elon College. In this way I hope to acquaint the people of Eastern North Carolina with the Brotherhood and with Elon.

Now I live a busy life for a man of my age and because I have always endeavored to be an unselfish Christian worker, I find more than I can do.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION LAYMEN.

I saw in the Laymens Fellowship Newsletter where George Colclough—if you don't know him, I'll tell you that he's the fellow at Elon College who's doing a bang-up job as Chairman of the Southern Convention Laymen's Fellowship. Well, let's see, I was going to tell you that George is inviting you laymen to go to Liberty (Vance) Church, Henderson, North Carolina, on Wednesday, April 28. The laymen—and that means you and you and you—are going to have a big rally. Yep! that's where the Southern Convention session is going to be held. George would like for you to be there for the entire time—April 27 through April 29—but if you can't do that, try to be there for Wednesday afternoon and evening. Surely, you will not want to miss that banquet on Wednesday evening. Now, don't forget George's invitation; he will be expecting you.

George also gave a pretty good resume of past events. There are some recommendations by the Convention Committee on Laymen's Work. Also, I saw a list of suggested projects. They were in THE SUN a few weeks ago, but I suppose they are included in the Newsletter so all the laymen chairmen in the churches of the Convention will have a handy guide.

At this point I would say that I am afraid too many laymen in the Convention will not see this Newsletter. They most likely will miss the future Newsletters and other information unless some of the gaps, in the list of church laymen chairmen and secretaries, are filled up. That list should be 100 per cent filled.

So we know George is doing a swell job of getting the Fellowship organized, but we can't let George do it all. Every one of us should feel that a share of this Fellowship is his. There is plenty to do; we can start working on those suggested projects.

Surely, some of the men's groups in the Convention are now working on some good projects. Let's hear from some local groups.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

A QUESTION TO BE SETTLED BY THE CONVENTION.

Elon College faces a crisis. The Convention faces the crisis with the College. The College and the Convention must face this crisis together or together both fail. The Convention built the College or it never would have been built. The Convention must support the College or it will not be supported. The College was built for the purpose of training leadership for the Church. The Church needed a trained leadership then, but it needs it more badly today. The Church has many boards, organizations, and committees, but the functions of these organizations are dependent upon leaders and to function properly these leaders must be trained. Elon College is our institution for the training of leaders.

To function as it should our college must be adequately supported. It must have increased financial support for its current demands, for buildings, for improvements, and for endowment.

To be partially in line with the support given colleges in Elon's class by their supporting denominations, conference apportionments for our College should not be less than $20,000 annually, instead of $12,500. To help meet the demands for buildings and improvements and to increase our endowment, the Convention in session in 1946 authorized a campaign for $1,000,000 for the College. It is evident that this amount when secured will not meet the pressing and immediate needs of the College. Of the proposed million dollars, $550,000 was allotted for buildings and improvements. To complete the organization as outlined and adopted, $1,200,000 will be required, leaving nothing to be added to the College's small endowment, which would be tragic.

If we are to provide for the minimum requirements for the College, at least $2,000,000 will be needed, $1,200,000 for buildings and improvements, and $800,000 for endowment. These figures are not padded, nor are they suggested just for the sake of keeping up with other institutions, but they represent the barest needs of our college, if it is to serve the Church and society as it should.

Will our Convention in session April 27-29 be willing to face these facts, appraise the true position of the College in our Church's total program, ascertain the ability of our people as accurately as possible, and dedicate its organizations and resources in an effort to save the College for the Church and society? In our Church's life and programs are we willing to put first things first? Are we willing to recognize the fact that Elon College, our institution of Christian higher education, is both the foundation and the capstone for the preparation of the leadership of our Church in these critical times? These questions are before us. They are on our hearts. We cannot ignore them. Will we have the courage to face them squarely and answer them fearlessly? Herein lies the success or the failure of our undertaking.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The wisdom of apportionment giving for the support of Elon College has been proved year in and year out. For the last fourteen years our Sunday schools and churches have complied with the Convention's request and sent definite amounts annually to the College for its support. The plan is excellent. Regular contributions for the support of the College by the local churches keeps the Church in constant touch with the College and enables it to watch the College's growth and development. The only criticism that could be offered is the failure of the Convention to apportion a sufficient amount to meet the needs of the College. In these days of high prices and high salaries, contributions for the support of the College must either be increased or multiplied. When churches and Sunday schools of the local organization pool their contributions for the support of the College, if such contributions are made monthly, a considerable amount is realized rather quickly.

The College has always appreciated the cooperation and support of our churches and is glad to receive any contribution that may be sent.

LESSONS FROM NUMBERS.

They say there is safety in numbers.

A recent morning mail brought us a collection of numbers which, paradoxically, teach by describing danger. The numbers are the statistical story of U. S. street and highway accidents in 1947.

Here are some of the numbers:

32,500 (traffic deaths)
1,365,000 (traffic injuries)
10,940 (pedestrians killed)
9,410 (deaths resulting from excessive speed)
4,000 (children killed in auto accidents)

There is certainly safety for all of us in numbers like these—numbers to which this country made its tragic contribution.

The numbers are lessons for life itself. Learn them—and live!

A LETTER FROM DOROTHY JACKSON.

Shaowu, China.

April 16, 1948.

Dear Ladies of the Southern Convention:

Through the window before me is the fine building of Union Hospital and behind it on the horizon rises the graceful Black Pagoda. Dimly visible in the distance are the beautiful mountains for which Fukien Province is famous. How different this port city of Foochow seems after a year of life in Shaowu! There are many old Chinese buildings, dingy wooden shops crowded together just as in Shaowu and some finer homes and temples with curving roofs. There are also some modern looking buildings: banks, schools, medical centers, not all of which are foreign. There are several "wide" streets, too; that is, wide in comparison to the usual alley or lane winding darkly between homes, shops and walls.

Mixed with the noise of bicycle and bikeshaw bells, the mournful call of vendors and the shouts of carriers or rickshaw pullers, is the startling sound of auto horns. Because most of the pedestrian and vehicular traffic is in the narrow streets, the confusion is great. Each vehicle must clear its own path. Those dragging and pulling heavily laden carts grunt now and then as someone brushed dangerously by them. The carriers give a shout that is more like a heavy sigh as they use their precious breath to clear a way. The rickshaw pullers make a similar sound with a little more authority in it, as they are going faster. The bikeshaw men effortlessly make their noise, the constant ringing of the bike bell, while the occasional motor car outdoes them all with its commanding, demanding, never silent horn. The main function of the policeman standing on his little round island in the midst of a "big" intersection seems to be to stand straight and important at the sound of an auto horn and wave the car through.

I had forgotten what a feeling of luxury there is in riding a car. The streets are so bumpy and full of holes that I have had to give up the jolty rickshaw. So what a treat it was when Mrs. Brewster (wife of the Methodist doctor, Harold Brewster) brought us home from the Sunday night service at the Anglican church. In fact everything about this visit to the city of Foochow is a treat. From a town with one wheeled vehicle (a two-wheeled cart owned by the Catholics and borrowed by everyone) except for the wheelbarrows of carriers from the country we have come to this town of all vehicles. From a mission with four American Board greenhorns, we have come to a mission with many American Boarders, young and old, who cooperate with folks of many other denominations, in their work and in their play.

One of the union projects here is the Union Kindergarten Training School where young women are trained to teach children up to the fourth grade. This school must now compete with the government schools which give free tuition, board, and everything. But the girls who graduate from the Christian school are the ones who are wanted for teaching positions even by the government nursery school here. What a wonderful surprise it was to see that clean attractive place with its happy children and resourceful methods. "And this," I thought, "is Chinese government run—not foreign." But who is the head of the school? A lovely Christian woman, product of mission schools, whom the government is more than pleased to have in charge of its nursery school.

One of our friends in Shaowu was remarking one day about the position of women there. No girl in Shaowu received any education till the missionaries came and met the problem squarely with nothing less than a school for girls. Now many women who graduated from Lo Te in years past are still hoping for a reopening of that mission school. Some of the Shaowu people feel that the Han Mei Primary School which has managed to keep going in all these hard times might help fulfill this dream by being improved and enlarged to include the junior high years. This is one of the tasks set for us in coming years.

It is among the women graduates of mission schools that we look for leadership in the Sunday schools, vacation schools, youth groups and women's groups. We look among our young adults who have good meetings every Sunday evening. The girls take an active part; but there are only a few. The large majority are young men. Where are the prospective women leaders? As we question our friend, we learn that this young woman has married and has too much family to allow for outside activities, that one is no longer in Shaowu. Yes, and we have some who are just indifferent, too. Doesn't that sound familiar to you folks of the Southern Convention? There are certain problems universal to the Christian Church; and the mission field is not free of them. Of course there are some taking an active part; but an-

Respectfully submitted,
WM. T. SCOTT,

other task for us is to draw into service those women who have received some education or training.

How often do most of your women's groups meet—once a month, isn't it—with circle or committee meetings in between? There is a small group of women in Shaowu who meet in a little room across from East Gate Church every Thursday for prayer and Bible study. These women seem to be a nucleus of those who were close to the former missionaries and their work. They, being the older generation, use the Shaowu dialect for the most part; so, often I do not understand a word of the whole meeting. When the younger ones take part, or older ones with education, they sometimes use the national language for my benefit. And, of course, the few things I've said have been in that language. In recent meetings we've enjoyed the presence and contribution of Mrs. Yao, charming and capable mother of that big family of men and women now so prominent in several lines of work. You may have heard Walter Judd refer to this family; many of them are now working in our hospital. Another is Li Wang Ou, whose children are far enough along now to leave her free to work for the Synod. Typically Chinese, she looks much younger than her years; and her enthusiastic way adds to the interest she may arouse in meetings.

I must tell you about Mrs. Li (pronounced Lee), too. When we first came last year with Leona Burr to introduce us around, Mrs. Li invited us to her house for a meal. Two things about that visit I especially remember: Mrs. Li laughingly presented me with a double banana, a sign that I would have twins; how pleased she is now at our prospects (not twins, however!), and the fact that her only son is also expecting his first-born. The second thing I remember is her showing us some baby rabbits that were born that day. During the past year, she has given us several of the rabbits she raises, as well as various other gifts. Mrs. Li is not a young woman; but she keeps her mind and body both active. She still works on her English and is able to correspond with the Storrs, Miss Walker, and those Shaowuites now in America. She always has something to contribute to the Thursday women's meetings, too. Though that group is small, the majority take an active part in the prayers and talk about the Bible. They always remember you women in America as well as their fellow Chinese in parts of their country where life is now so hard.

Our's is the task of nurturing this spirit that thinks of others till the person actually feels for others and assumes an active responsibility for their welfare. Mrs. Chandler has just been telling me about a young Chinese woman here who investigates needy cases for the Foochow Union Hospital. Such a sensitive Christian is she that she takes upon herself the difficulties of those cases she contacts. She has already given this month's salary in loans to people who are in desperate need. They may never be able to repay her; and if eventually they could, the money received then wouldn't have a small fraction of its present value, so fast is inflation now going. And what is the salary of this woman who is able to help so many? She gets her meals at the hospital and has no family; so everyone feels she is well able to help. But her salary? It is between $10 and $20 (U. S.) per month. Her February money was worth $20 (U. S.); this month's $3,000,000 in Chinese currency may not even be worth $10 (U. S.). When she sees so many in such dire need and the problems of her country getting worse each day, can you blame her that sometimes she wonders if God really loves China?

The news from North China and from America and Russia just makes the situation here seem darker. How are we who have so much security to bring hope to these who have no economic security? That is the task which almost frightens us. What can be our message to them? You in America share this burden with us. For in this world of economic distress Americans have abundance. In this world of ideological conflict and despair, Christian have the only hope. Women of the Southern Convention are a large part of the Christians of America. How great is our responsibility. May this Easter season bring to each of us renewed hope and strength to meet it.

Your fellow worker in China,
DOROTHY JACKSON.

QUARTERLY REPORT.

The following is the Quarterly Report of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board of the Eastern

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

Graham Wisseman at Greensboro sent this report:

"For six weeks the Primary boys and girls of Greensboro studied about Jesus when he was a little boy. On the Sunday they completed their study, they shared all the things they had learned and made with their mothers. There was a Palestinian house, made of a carton and painted white; a family, made of clothes pins and dressed in Oriental clothes; jars, dishes, and fruits, made of clay; a mezuzah and a scroll. All of these were shown and explained to the parents. Bible verses which Jesus probably learned as a boy were recited; songs were sung; and a little play with the clothespin family acted out. The special offering which was taken was used to buy a book about Jesus when he was a boy and sent to Shanti, a little eight-year-old girl in India. Dates, like Jesus might have eaten long, long ago were served by a committee of girls."

Our Richmond Primary boys and girls studied about these things, too. They made mezuzahs or the little wooden boxes in which the scroll was kept. These were fastened to the doors of their houses and the family touched them reverently on entering. Some of the smaller ones were made of leather and worn on the arm. On the scroll was the Shema. You will find these words in Deuteronomy 6:4—"Hear, O Israel: Jehovah our God is one God and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, and with all thy might." Even the smallest Jewish child learned these words. Shema means Hear.

Mrs. Wisseman has sent a copy of the gospel of Luke written in Spanish. Last Sunday many of you studied about the Bible traveling around our globe. Mrs. Wisseman writes: "The gospel costs one and one-half cents, and our missionaries in Mexico, Mr. and Mrs. Larry Stanton, say that little booklets like this are helpful to them in their work. Mr. and Mrs. Stanton grew up in our churches. They were commissioned by our Pilgrim Fellowship and sent as missionaries to Mexico. The work they are doing is excellent. If you want to help them by sending a Spanish Bible or some of the gospels the address is: Apartado 150, Mazatlan, Sinaloa, Mexico. (Order the gospels from American Bible Society, 85 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga.)"

Teachers and ministers will be interested in knowing that two books of prayers for blind children, one for younger, and one for older children have been published in Braille by the John Milton Society for the Blind. These are the first books made available for Protestant churches and Sunday schools.

"Prayers for Younger Children" is small in size and just right for little fingers, "Prayers for Older Children" is naturally larger. Both have suitable prayers for the different times of the day, grace, birthdays, holidays and special events in a child's life.

If the ministers and teachers will send the name and address of any blind child in their church or community to the John Milton Society, 156 Fifth Avenue, N. Y., they will send free copies to these children.

DISCOURAGE FOOD PREJUDICES IN YOUR CHILD.

By RUTH PECK MCLEOD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Please don't order lamb for Tommy. He's just as I am about lamb—he never has been able to eat it. My mother and sister were the same way, and my son has inherited this distaste," said Tommy's mother to her hostess as the three were about to enter the hotel dining room.

She was mistaken, however. We are not born with either a liking or a disliking for any particular kind of food, but it is all too easy for a father or mother to prejudice a child against a very tasty and nourishing dish simply because that parent does not like it. For this reason a special effort should be made to talk little about one's own dislikes and to convince children that it is not hard to acquire a taste for almost any food. It will help if you tell them short stories to show how valuable this ability can be.

Most of us know that in good nursery schools the little tots are not given their much desired dessert until they have finished the main course. In this way they form the habit of eating a variety of well-prepared vegetables and other wholesome foods.

Parents are mainly responsible for children's food tastes, for boys and girls generally learn to like best those things that are served to them regularly. We have evidence of this in the dietary habits of the various nations. The Italians "love" spaghetti, because they have been brought up on it; the Chinese prefer rice, because that cereal has always predominated in their daily diet; and, for the same reason, the Brazilians delight in their black beans.

Children should be encouraged—never forced—to eat whatever is set before them, but it should be remembered that small, daintily served helpings make a meal inviting; and should the child come back for another serving, the second one should be even smaller than the first. It is well, too, for the mother to experiment with various new culinary ideas. We should never give our children the impression that our methods of preparing foods are the only proper ways of cooking, for this lays the foundation for food prejudices.

It is interesting, as well as educational, to have the boys and girls know something about the foods of foreign lands. A number of magazines now occasionally have recipes from Mexico, Italy, Spain, and some other countries. Even very young children will take real delight in helping to follow one of these recipes and later—at the table—in entering into a discussion of the dietary customs of the particular country represented.

The child should have explained to him that the first time a person partakes of a new food it sometimes seems peculiar in flavor but that gradually a taste for it can usually be acquired. Recall and relate how you disliked a certain fruit, vegetable, or cooked delicacy the first time it was given to you and how you later learned to like it very much.

Good manners, too, the child should be taught, really demand that one should eat whatever is put before him. It is quite embarrassing for a hostess, after having prepared what she considers a delicious meal, to have her guests unable to experience any enjoyment. She does not know that it is because they have been accustomed only to a very limited variety of foods or seasonings. One may often listen to a group of women and hear such statements as: "My husband will not touch baked fish; it has to be broiled," or, "I can't induce John to eat any kind of green salad; he says he is neither a cow nor a horse." Such remarks indicate food prejudices carried over from childhood.

Some mothers may like to lessen the difficulty of having their children accept unquestioningly a variety of

SPRING RALLY OF EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

The annual Spring Rally of the Eastern Virginia Conference of Pilgrim Fellowship will meet on Sunday afternoon, April 25, at 4:00 p. m., in the Suffolk Christian Church. Following the afternoon business session, a supper will be served in the fellowship hall by the ladies of the church. After supper, we shall have a short devotional service, Dr. H. S. Hardcastle of Newport News will be guest speaker for the service.

Let's have a large delegation from your church. Let's make this the best yet!

INTERNATIONAL ESSAY COMPETITION.

The fifth international essay competition for youth is sponsored during 1948 by the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches and the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches. Under the general heading of "Christ and World Fellowship," competitors in the two age groupings will deal with the following subjects: Juniors—"What Does the Bible Say About World Friendship?" Seniors—"As a Young Christian What Concrete Action Should You Take for World Peace Today?" Sixteen cash prizes and fifty medals are offered for each group. For further particulars write to World Council of Churches, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York, or Church Peace Union, 170 E. 64th Street, New York 21, N. Y.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AND THE PROPOSED NEW EVANGELICAL PROTESTANT YOUTH ORGANIZATION.

For many months representatives of denominational youth fellowships, the United Christian Youth Movement, and the International Society of Christian Endeavor have been considering the possibility of the establishment of a united strategy for Christian youth which would be more inclusive than any now existing. Unofficial consultations in Pittsburgh and Chicago in May and June, 1947, resulted in the drafting of recommendations which might serve for more official consideration. These proposals are now being studied by the groups concerned.

The following is an abstract of an address by Dr. Daniel A. Poling, President of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, to a meeting of the Christian Endeavor Executives' Conference at Columbus, Ohio, on December 8, 1947, regarding these proposals:

The International Society of Christian Endeavor stands firmly when it says: First, there has been no action taken that commits Christian Endeavor to an organization. There has been unanimous action as of the vote of the Board of Trustees at the San Francisco International Convention to accept in principle the proposals that came out of the Chicago conference but without prejudice as to future action. Second, that action was conditioned upon a similar vote being taken by other groups. We wait on the report that may suggest to us details and plans that must eventually be presented if we are to more formally consider a new youth agency. We are considering, not an amalgamation but a new Protestant evangelical youth organization, a greater unity of Protestant youth.

We have not only not surrendered anything—and that includes the name—not a thing of the tradition, of the evangelical faith and purpose, of the missionary passion—but we have lifted up anew what Christian Endeavor is! (And if we believe in the authority of the Holy Spirit and the power of the Holy Spirit at last to dominate the situation, then we may with confidence survey the future.)

Essentially what we said at San Francisco was, "We will be Christian Endeavor." We will be Christian Endeavor in a proposed larger youth unity; we will extend the hand of fellowship to those who may wish presently to reach a hand to us. If they do not finally decide to further consider the matter then we will go forward as we are! We will march!

Christian Endeavor is today, as of her great tradition, loyal to Christ. Thus we have followed in the tradition of Christian Endeavor, in our loyalty to the church and in our recognition of our place within the church.

If this unity is achieved, we still can carry on with our overseas commitments through a Christian Endeavor foundation. Our mobilization strengthens Christian Endeavor at home and abroad. We must see this through!

Whatever eventually comes forth, in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, the future is with God, and trusting we promise Him that we will try to do whatever He would have us do!

"THOU SHALT NOT KILL."

Most of us who have embraced the Ten Commandments as our standard of life regard the Fifth as the easiest to keep. Our prayerful inventory is taken with only passing interest in the divine law, "Thou shalt not kill," because we are sure we could never be guilty of this unthinkable crime.

We are wrong. In their 1948 book of street and highway accident data, The Travelers Insurance Companies make it sickeningly clear that the Fifth Commandment is a precept for every driver. In the book's foreword, Jesse W. Randall, the companies' president, suggests a definition that moves our annual traffic tragedy squarely within the orbit of the Decalogue: "'Thou shalt not kill' means that nothing on earth can be so important that a man's life should be risked for it, unless in the very risking of life the man becomes better equipped for eternity."

In 1947, 32,500 Americans were killed in traffic accidents. In each case, the vehicle involved was a weapon. In each case, it killed with the same cold finality of a gun or a knife.

Yes, safety is a sermon. If the appeals of self-protection or common consideration are not enough to stay the dangerous driver, perhaps the Fifth Commandment is.

When Morales, the painter, was invited by Philip II to court, he came in such a magnificent costume, that the King, in anger, ordered a sum of money to be paid him, and so dismissed him. The next time they met he appeared in a very different dress, poor, old, and hungry, which so touched the heart of the King, that he immediately provided him with a revenue which kept him in comfort for all the future. So when men come to the throne of grace it is not their magnificence but their very want which touches the heart of God.—W. Baxendale.

NEHEMIAH REBUILDS JERUSALEM.

LESSON V—MAY 2, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: So we built the wall . . . for the people had a mind to work.—Nehemiah 4:6.

LESSON: Nehemiah 1-7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 122:1-9.

Days of Rebuilding.

Nehemiah faced a day of rebuilding. He learned of the ruins of Jerusalem from travelers in the land where he was a cup-bearer to the king. And he felt that he ought to do something about it. It seems as if something or somebody is always tearing things down. It is so much easier to tear down than to build up. Eternal vigilance is the price it seems in every sphere of life. Weeds will soon take a garden unless it is attended to. A house will soon fall into disrepair unless it is given some attention. And the forces of evil will destroy good things unless vigilance is practiced.

These are days of rebuilding, rebuilding on a vast scale. There is of course the problem of rebuilding the material structures in the war-devastated areas of the world. We have no conception, it seems of the widespread devastation and destruction of property in Europe and Japan and other areas of the world. But there is also the problem of rebuilding the moral and spiritual structures of these and other areas. In a real sense the old order is breaking up, there seems to be a world revolution. It is a day of rebuilding.

Lessons from the Past.

The story of Nehemiah and his band of faithful followers has some practical applications for us in a day of rebuilding. There are principles here that transcend mere time and place. They are timeless and universal. They come out of a sketchy reading of today's lesson.

1. It was done by a man who cared. Nehemiah had a heavy heart when he heard about the plight of his beloved city and his fellow countrymen. He was so heavy of heart that the king noticed it and asked him about it. And pressed for an answer he told in moving language the cause of his heaviness of heart and his desire to do something about it. He belonged to the "fellowship of those who care" and those who care enough to do something about it. This is no time for complacency and love of comfort and ease. With a world in hunger and pain and sickness and poverty, rebuilding can come only as folks are moved to do something about it. We need people today who care. Some of us have got to take it upon ourselves to do something toward helping to rebuild our stricken and suffering world.

2. It was done by people who had a mind to work. "For the people had a mind to work" reads the record. They were willing to pitch in and help with the task of rebuilding. We have all too many people who want to sit on the sidelines instead of working in the ranks. We have too much "spectatoritis." For instance there are all too many church members today who are not doing much in this matter of rebuilding. And there are all too many people outside the church, criticizing or doing nothing who ought to be harnessing their energies to the task.

3. It was done by people who scorned opposition. The story makes interesting reading. The enemies of the project tried first one way after another of stopping the rebuilding process. Ridicule, deceit, threats, even force, were tried one after another. Like every good work, there was opposition. But the people were not easily turned aside from their goal. There was a time when one might have been charitable toward Russia in the matter of her attitude toward the rebuilding process in our war-stricken world. But the evidence now makes it quite clear that not only does Russia not want to help rebuild the world in the pattern of peace, but she is actually trying to thwart the process at every turn. By direct and indirect action, she resists the rebuilding process. But the forces of good will and righteousness must not be turned aside or discouraged in the good and necessary work of rebuilding.

4. It was done by people who relied upon spiritual resources. To be sure these people saw to it that they were prepared for armed aggression. As they worked with one hand they held their swords in the other hand. And while some watched others worked. But they did not place their reliance on material might. They made their prayer unto their God. Their faith and their hope was in Him. They knew that only spiritual power could give them the victory. It was thus then, is now, and evermore shall be. One can hardly see how we could have refused to take up arms against the aggressor nations. It was a case of doing this or else . . . ! But even at its best war is no solution to the problem. And at its worst it is a problem in itself. It is only as the life of the world is redeemed and undergirded by the spirit of Christ that there can be any durable and desirable peace. Anything else will be only an armistice. Here is the challenge to the church in its work at home and abroad. As a former President once said, "Civilization must be redeemed spiritually or it will perish materially." Those of us who belong to the Congregational Christian Church, or to any other church, ought to give ourselves with renewed devotion and energy to the Church as the body of Christ in these days of rebuilding.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

foods by having their plates served in the kitchen. If this is done, however, in no case should the servings be too bountiful; and should there be a helping of anything for which a child is known to have little liking, that should be very small indeed. Each child should be allowed a second helping of anything desired only when his plate is empty. By this plan the boys and girls become accustomed to eating any wholesome food that is served to them.

Helping children to avoid food prejudices, and thus among other benefits making them more desirable guests, does not at all conflict with the responsibility for teaching them when and how to say, "No, thank you."

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supl

Dear Friends:

It seems that when you have one misfortune two more will follow. It is like automobile tire punctures; if you have one, you will likely have two to follow. At least, that has been my experience from time to time.

Some weeks ago one of the furnaces cracked which caused the water to leak out, and it burned up before it was discovered.

On the night of April 15, the building known as the "Pritchett House," which the Orphanage purchased two years ago, caught on fire and burned to the ground. The pathetic part is that three couples without children and one family with children lived in this house, and they lost everything. In fact, two of the men came near to being trapped in the building. The Good Lord surely was with them, as it caught on fire before nine o'clock P. M. Had it been late at night it probably would have burned them all. Mr. Hilliard, the Orphanage dairyman, had a very nice apartment in this house, and he lost everything and carried no insurance. I feel awfully sorry for him and his wife and two little children. They will have to start life over from nothing to start with. The pity of it all is that the fire threw all four families out of a home with no place to go—too pathetic to think about. The building carried some insurance.

We are still blessed with rain in this section. The ground has kept so wet that the Orphanage has very little garden planted; not even Irish potatoes which ought to have been planted a month ago.

The Orphanage children are enjoying apples these days. The Government gave us a lot this week, and we put up in gallon cans one hundred and fifty cans.

Since the Orphanage built a new poultry house and put in it one hundred and twenty-five hens, the children are enjoying eggs to eat every day. It takes a lot of planning to feed nearly one hundred children and give them a balanced meal.

AN OPEN LETTER.

The Honorable Warren R. Austin, Delegate of the United States to the United Nations, Lake Success, New York.

My Dear Senator Austin:

Christian people are profoundly disturbed at the prospect of an increase of violent warfare in Palestine upon the withdrawal of British troops on May 15th. Our concern for the lives of all those involved—Christians, Moslems, and Jews—and our conviction that adjustment of differences should be sought by peaceful methods lead us to urge with all our strength that the present effort of the United Nations to arrange a truce be supported by the responsible leaders on both sides.

We have an especially deep concern for the Holy City of Jerusalem, sacred around the world to those of all three faiths, and containing places whose destruction we cannot accept as permissible. Under the partition proposal of last fall Jerusalem was to be a trust territory. It is obviously a part of the trust territory under the recent trusteeship proposal. Surely it should have a trust status under any arrangement, and it should be given now the character of an "open city."

We, therefore, urge that the United Nations through the Trusteeship Council be assigned immediate authority over the city of Jerusalem, with a corridor of free access from the outside to insure its inhabitants their life blood. We pray earnestly that a sound solution of the entire problem of Palestine may be speedily found in the negotiations now beginning. If, however, failure to reach agreement should provoke further conflict between Jews and Arabs, both sides should scrupulously avoid the use of the city or the corridor as a base for their operations. The government of Jerusalem should be provided with such police forces as may be needed through the United Nations.

The steps which we have suggested provide reasonable safeguards against danger or destruction for the places associated with the historic begin-

THE PALESTINE PROBLEM.

The conflict in Palestine between Arabs and Jews is causing both physical and spiritual damage to the work missionary societies have performed during the past hundred years, say Dr. Wynn C. Fairfield, secretary of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and the Rev. Charles W. Ranson, general secretary of the International Missionary Council.

These two church leaders head organizations which include sixty different Protestant denominations in this country, and twenty-six interdenominational missionary councils around the globe.

In support of their joint statement, Dr. Fairfield and Rev. Mr. Ranson made reference to a recent letter from the chairman of the United Missionary Council in Palestine and Syria, describing the destruction of Christian property by both Arabs and Jews, and the taking over of the Syrian Orphanage in Jerusalem by the Hagannah, after its evacuation by British troops.

"The letter especially deplores the need for closing of schools, YMCA's and YWCA's, which formerly, had been 'the meeting ground for people of different communities, and a place where Christians, Moslems, and Jews learned to work and to play together,'" the Rev. Ranson stated.

He said the letter also stated that mission hospitals are being forced to close for lack of work. "If a hospital is in a Jewish area, Arabs cannot come to it. And the Jews are suspected by their own people if they come to Christian hospitals," he said.

"Christians in Palestine feel that in the tense and bitter conflict between Arab and Jew, their presence has been largely forgotten and their problems ignored," the Rev. Ranson continued.

"It is important that Christians in this country should be reminded of the fact that the churches in Palestine look to them for understanding and support."

The two church leaders both supported the appeal made recently by the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York, for the preservation of neutrality of Jerusalem, but added: "Pious desires to preserve the sacred shrines of Jerusalem will not avail to save them from destruction, unless some impartial agency, such as a United Nations police force, can replace the present anarchy by rule of law."

RALLY AT RANDLEMAN.

the Atomic energy and radio activity cannot prevent war and that we all must turn to God and leave it in His hands. One very interesting thing that he told us of was his visit to the Leper Colony in the Hawaiian Islands, attending a church service with them and was so amazed to see them, in all stages of the dread disease, stand up and sing, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." In closing he stated that the world church can continue to function only as we help it with our work and our prayers.

Following Mr. Sharder's speech, a question and answer period was held at which time he told of the need of an adding machine and musical instruments to go to the mission workers and asked if anyone had any of these items to donate, to get in touch with the Mission Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Wissemann conducted a very short and impressive worship service including the song, "Holy Ghost with Light Divine." An offering of $12.80 was received at this time.

Our President, Mrs. Lester, did not make a speech, she only said that she wanted to stress upon our minds one fact and that was, that the important thing in our lives today, is opening our hearts to others with our prayers, gifts and other things. Sometimes "just things" mean more to those on the foreign fields than money.

We then adjourned for lunch which was served picnic style from a well-filled table on the lawn. Also plenty of hot coffee, iced tea and water was served.

At 1:30 p. m. we reassembled for the afternoon session at which time a skit was presented, the highlight of which was the explanation of the use of the money raised from Life Memberships and Memorials which is being spent at the present time to educate a young Chinese student, Timothy Shong, to go back to China to work among his people.

The rest of the afternoon session was taken up with reports from the different committees:

Courtesy: Mrs. Robert Buchanan thanked the host church for their hospitality and the speaker and guests for their contributions to the program.

Place: Pleasant Grove Church at Bennett, N. C., asked that the Rally be held with them in 1949.

Nominating: Lee-Chatham-Moore report incomplete with no one for Superintendent at the present time.

Mrs. W. E. Cox, Jonesboro, N. C., was appointed secretary.

Randolph: Mrs. E. P. Burroughs, Superintendent; Mrs. S. H. Bell, Assistant, Pleasant Ridge, N. C.

All business completed, we adjourned to meet at Bennett, N. C., with Pleasant Grove group in 1949.

nings of our religious faith. At the same time, we in no wise admit the inevitability of failure in the Palestine negotiations. All men and women of Christian good will strongly urge that the peoples of Palestine heed the call of the United Nations and that each of them cooperate with the other, in accordance with the basic principles of its faith, peacefully to resolve the problems which confront them both.

Very sincerely yours,

As We Go to the Convention

Thirty-seven biennial sessions of the Southern Convention have been held. At each of them important decisions have been made. Many consecrated and talented men and women of the past are no longer with us, but their good works do follow them. They have given us a rich heritage. They have passed on to the men, women, young people and ministers of our day tasks which only we can perform. Let us examine ourselves as we go to the Convention at Liberty (Vance) Church, April 27-29.

As we go to the Convention let us go in grateful recognition of past achievements, but let us go with the full knowledge that it is our privilege and responsibility to give our best thought and planning to the job facing us and our day.

As we go to Convention let us go as the disciples of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is His Church that we are commissioned to build. It is His work that we are to do. Let us, therefore, try to re-discover what Jesus' plan for the world really is and then joyfully to re-dedicate our time, talent and treasure to the fulfillment of His plan.

As we go to the Convention let us go with clear and teachable minds, with kindled spiritual emotions, ready to be reconsecrated and rededicated to a courageous program of advance equal to our strength in Christ.

As we go to the Convention let us go determined not to be engulfed, confused and irritated with problems but rather to wait to be endued with Power from above.

As we go to the Convention let us go with the faith that we may there find a power and a program which we can carry back to our churches and through them to carry that Power and Program to all men everywhere.

Wm. T. SCOTT, Superintendent.

A PRAYER

O God, our Father, Who hast called us through Christ into Thy Church, teach us to bear one another's burdens. Give us a vision of our land and of our world as Thou wouldst have them to be. Enable us to attain a worthy understanding of things seen and unseen, temporal and eternal. Forbid that through dullness of feeling, or hardness of heart, through sloth or through personal unworthiness, we should hinder the approach of Thy Kingdom or cause one of Thy children to stumble.

Grant unto us, we beseech Thee, such conviction of Thy power and love, such knowledge of Thy eternal purpose, and such determination to bear our witness to Thy saving grace, through Christ, that we shall in no way fail our generation.

Most gracious Father, grant us, we pray, that in these days of heart-searching and planning, the power of Thy spirit, coming anew upon us, may cause us more fully to realize our fellowship in Jesus Christ.

Take us, then, we beseech Thee, to be Thy servants. Grant us no rest nor discharge until Thou hast wrought Thy work in us, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1948.

NUMBER 18.

Ten Commandments for Modern Parents

1. Give your children the support of love and confidence, with appreciation of the individuality of each. This will provide for them a firm foundation of faith in you, in themselves and in life.

2. Plan for good times with your children and try always to realize how things seem to a child. This will create a pleasant home atmosphere and a pattern for happy family life.

3. Give your children a share in the tasks, plans and creative activities of the home. Through taking responsibilities in accordance with their strength they will grow in character and increase in resourcefulness.

4. Look for good which you can praise more than for faults which you must condemn. Children generously encouraged try to improve still more, but those too much condemned lose heart and expect little good of themselves.

5. Value curiosity in your children and stimulate in them the love of all things true and beautiful. By rewarding their inquiries and developing their appreciations you inspire them to a larger growth.

6. Teach your children to convert obstacles into opportunities. Strength develops by firm purpose and by creative conquest of difficulty.

7. Develop in yourself such qualities as you want your children to have. Honestly, considerateness, courage—such virtues come mainly by example and contagion. You want vital growth not mere conformity.

8. Make your home a center of friendship and good neighborliness. Its ties of comradeship will prepare members for good citizenship in the community, the nation and the world.

9. Share with your children in the fellowship of the church. This will give them the sustaining strength of a community of faith and love which extends across the ages and embraces all peoples.

10. Lead your children into faith in God through discipleship to Jesus Christ that they may be workers with God in overcoming evil and promoting the good. This will be aided by thought-sharing, religious interpretations and worship in the home, and by living in the great purposes of the Kingdom of God.—The Commission on Marriage and the Home of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

NEWS AND VIEWS

MEMORIAL SERVICES AND DEDICATION.

The Memorial Service will be at Pleasant Grove Christian Church on Sunday, May 2nd. Rev. L. M. Presnell, pastor, will preach the annual Memorial Sermon at 11 o'clock.

The Dedication Service will be in the afternoon. Rev. Carl Brady and Dr. Wm. T. Scott will be the speakers for this service.

All former pastor of the church and everyone are invited to attend these services.

REVIVAL AT ALBEMARLE.

Rev. Thurman F. Bowers will be the Evangelist during the Spring revival services to be held in the Albemarle Congregational Christian Church, May 9-16. Rev. Bowers is pastor of the Happy Home Church and also of Calvary Christian (Ind.) in Greensboro.

W. WALTER HALL, Pastor.

Wanted: Used benches or pews for use in Sunday School assembly room. Anyone interested in disposing of used pews should write to Rev. W. Walter Hall, 338 Concord Road, Albemarle, N. C., stating the number on hand, type, length, and price wanted.

SHENROCK PASTORATE.

We rejoice with Rev. and Mrs. Clyde Koon in their most recent achievement. A board of trustees, one from each of their six churches have purchased a parsonage for their minister and his family at a cost of nearly seven thousand dollars. Mr. Koon reports that upward of $3,000 has already been raised to apply on the purchase price and it is expected that the whole amount will be raised in the immediate future. We congratulate this group in providing a home for their pastor. The house is of the bungalow type and located on the outskirts of New Market on the Washington highway. Churches in the Shenrock group include Mayland, Bethlehem, Concord, Wissler's Chapel, Wood's Chapel and Palmyra.

Since Pastor Koon took over five churches in January of this year two Sunday schools have been reorganized, the latter at Wissler's Chapel. A Woman's Missionary Society has been organized by Mrs. Koon in three of the churches. Two new Ladies Aid Societies have also been organized in the group.

Work is being completed on a renovation and paint job at Bethlehem at a cost of around $300.00. A similar job is being done at Wissler's at a cost of around $500.00. Work will soon begin on replastering, painting and other improvements which will involve an expenditure of over $200.00. For the first time in its history, Wood's Chapel is installing electric lights into the Church at the present time.

Pastor Koon reports overflow congregations in all the churches in the Shenrock pastorate at the Easter Season. Revival-services will begin in one of the churches in the group early in May and will doubtless continue until each church is reached. Mr. Koon states that he is greatly encouraged in the process of the work and the large possibilities for Kingdom building through these fine churches.

ROBERT A WHITTEN.

SHALLOW FORD CHURCH.

A few days ago the Shallow Ford Church, less than two miles from Elon College, dedicated its beautiful new parsonage. For 115 years this church has had no parsonage and therefore no resident pastor.

This new building erected across the road from the church is modern in every detail with spacious living room, well-lighted study, dining room, kitchen, two bedrooms and bath on the first floor, and has two bedrooms and bath "roughed in" on the second floor. The beautiful living room fireplace, oak floors, steel cabinets in the kitchen, electric water heater, and hot air oil furnace with clock thermostat control are indicative of the determination of the Shallow Ford people to have a parsonage of which it can always be proud.

The basement under the entire building contains a large recreation room heated both by the furnace and by a circulating air fireplace. This room is already being used by the growing young people's groups of the church.

Not satisfied with erecting this unusually good parsonage the Shallow Ford Church has purchased a forced air furnace for the church building. The work of installing this furnace, which will heat the basement as well as all rooms on the main floor, is now under way.

However, the progress of the Shallow Ford Church is more evident in its weekly program than in its physical development. The church school has been completely and accurately graded with nursery, kindergarten, primary, junior, junior high school, high school and adult departments in all of which Congregational Christian lesson materials are being used—the Pilgrim Series has been adopted by all but the adult department.

During the "preaching hour" each Sunday two other groups are in session, the junior church for grade school children under seventh grade, and the kindergarten for pre-school children. Each of these groups has a definite religious education program suited to its own needs.

Sunday evening finds the church well filled, for again three groups are meeting. After a joint worship service those present divided into adult, young people's, and children's programs with a wide variety of activities. The young people's group is a part of the Pilgrim Fellowship. The adult group is carrying on the equivalent of a college course in the life and teachings of Jesus and following this study by a choir practice in which it is joined by some of the young people who are able to break away from their own social program.

The Shallow Ford Church, which has been supplied for many years by students from Elon College, is now under the pastoral guidance of Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Sloan of the Elon College faculty, who in the six months they have been helping the church have developed a program which they are convinced can be carried on by any rural church group willing to follow Jesus' emphases of giving its best intelligence and most sincere activity to the work of the church. For a number of years in addition to being full time college teachers Dr. and Mrs. Sloan have served rural churches "to keep their feet on the ground" and to prove that their principles of religious education are practical in the small church as well as the large one. Dr. F. E. Reynolds, Dean D. J. Bowden and Dr. Sloan of the college department of religion are organizing a deputation team of students to aid other churches in analyzing their needs and developing efficient religious educational programs.

Where is the spirit and ardent courage of the early Christians who preferred torture, crucifixion, and death to forsaking their religion?

An After Easter Letter

By ALBERT W. PALMER, Moderator, The General Council

I am beginning this letter on Easter Day and hope to finish it still in the after-glow of Easter. We need that after-glow in this dark and desperate time.

Not About the Merger.

This is not a letter about the Merger! My views about that were clearly set forth in Advance for March. The Moderator has no authority—but he does have free speech! He should try to use it, of course, only as a healing influence and to promote clarity of thought and unity of spirit. I hope to speak futher about the Merger in my opening address at the Oberlin General Council. Meantime, I would simply plead, in this single sentence, that we all cherish the utmost patience and forbearance "speaking truth in love," saying no harsh or hasty word, and seeking in humility and prayer the guidance of the Holy Spirit that we may all work together for understanding, unity and progress. We must not hold back the dawn of forward-looking faith, courage, forgiveness or perspective.

On Shooting Terms Next?

What do I want to write about just now is the peace of the world. Never, in that interval between wars which men call peace, was the outlook for real peace so dark as it is today. The church will not be truly serving men in their deepest need unless it can help them bear this burden of anxiety which presses down on every human heart today. As a friend of mine puts it: "We are no longer on speaking terms with Russia—just on shouting terms. And tomorrow it may be just on shooting terms."

Do Ethics Apply in War?

Never since the days of Nero and Caligula have Christiansethics been so challenged as they would be by another war. An outstanding Scientist who was in charge of protetive measures at the Bikini atom bomb test is reported in the Pasadena "Star-News" of March 19 as saying to 1,000 high school student:

"There are no ethics in war and there should be no discussion of ethics in the use of the atomic bomb. A surgical operation for the removal of two cities was far better in the last war than the destruction of many cities by slow and painful process with the killing of far greater numbers of soldiers and civilians. War is murder whether it is conducted by rules of courtesy, as in the days of chivalry, or by mass bombing.

"The next war will be for keeps. We can't attack first because we would lose our place in history. We've got to get kicked in the face before we can fight. But once we've been kicked in the face we should make the price so high that we'll never be kicked in the face again by any nation."

As to the probable way in which war will start, the speaker said: "Planes will be reported overhead in various parts of the country, there will be a radio warning from Russia that war has been declared, and seconds later bombs will be dropped on our key cities. There is no defense against atomic bombing except no war, and that is unrealistic."

Military Tactics Tomorrow.

This eminent scientist went on to explain that the tactical procedure in atomic bombing would be to use ten atomic bombs to each large city, dropping half of them five miles apart, powdering most of the buildings, killing most of the people and with secondary fires destroying what remains of the community. The other five bombs would be dropped in nearby waters, the ocean, a lake, or rivers, and columns of vapor would rise into the stratosphere carrying atomic particles with the destructive radiation equivalent to tons of radium which would float over the land and make it uninhabitable for long periods. So reported my evening paper, quite casually, as though it were a common-place news item.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN ENDORSES NATIONAL FAMILY WEEK.

President Truman said in a letter endorsing National Family Week that the place of God in family life needs to be emphasized more than ever. Scheduled for May 2-9, National Family Week will be observed for the sixth consecutive year by Protestants, Catholics, and Jews.

The Chief Executive referred to the National Conference on Family Life that will be held in the White House during Family Week (May 6-8). He observed that although the churches can use much of the material that will then be developed, their real contribution to the home will come in keeping its spiritual forces vital and vigorous.

The President concluded: "It is my reasoned conviction that, in view of present disturbed and even turbulent conditions, there is greater need today than ever in our history for emphatic emphasis on the place of God in our family life. National Family Week would therefore seem providential. It can contribute much towards that highly important end."

OBSERVE FAMILY WEEK.

Every church should endeavor to realize some of the inherent values of the Christian Family Week observance. Protestants especially need to focus more attention on the family. A week of study along the various phases of successful Christian family relations would be helpful indeed. So many of our parents' magazines and meetings are secular in their point of view. The spiritual undergirding of the family should not be neglected. The church is under everlasting obligation to bring the finest spiritual resources available to its families. Every family should be acquainted with basic literature, and the sources from which needed materials may be secured.

How can family life be made more dynamic, interesting, rewarding? What are some of the dangers which should be avoided? What is the modern equivalent of the old family altar? How can parents help children prepare for wise choices in marriage? These and a host of related questions might engage the attention of speakers and study groups during Family Week. Incidentally, a study of the series of articles issued by the National Kindergarten Association which are published regularly on page ten provide rich and ample source material.

No church can rise above the level of its family life. We may build out of but not upon a spiritually bankrupt family. A minister of wide experience gave this testimony. "One of the interesting experiences in calling from home to home is to note the reaction of the children to the minister and the church. Unerringly, they reflect the attitudes of their parents. Within five minutes it is possible to tell whether the parents are indifferent toward the church, or whether their's is a solid and joyous loyalty for the church. The children tell the tale every time! All of which raises a truth of profound significance. It means that the parents pretty much are the ultimate and determining factor which will indicate whether children are going to have zeal for the Church; or whether such response to Christian Faith is going to be respectable and perfunctory."

We are in the post-Easter season. Every family should be sustained by a serene faith in immortality. This faith will help to stand the shock of sudden or unexpected death. The belief in reunion through Christ will strengthen and perpetuate the family pattern and tradition. The interplay of human and divine influences will sustain the family on a plane of high and victorious living. Dr. Theodore Adams returned from a trip to Europe and told of an inscription over a modest English home: "Lord make my house thine until thy house shall be mine." How beautiful, significant, and prophetic!

EMPHASIS ON HOME IS HOPEFUL SIGN.

Emphasis of Protestantism on the centrality of the family and home is the most hopeful sign on a dark horizon today.

This opinion was expressed by Professor Harold F. Pflug of Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Grove, Mo., speaking on "Evangelism Through the Home," at the annual meetings of the International Council of Religious Education.

"A home or family group has to live twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, fifty-two weeks a year, on some philosophy of life—either deep or shallow; on some meaning of existence, on activities and associations growing out of and shaping this meaning of life," he declared.

"If the Christian faith in its depth and outreach can get hold of family life, the effects can be far-reaching," Professor Pflug believes.

Three aspects of evangelism through the Christian home were pointed out: (1) The constant evangelism of the family itself; (2) evangelizing through those whom the family brings into its fellowship from outside the family; (3) the outreach of the Christian home into other homes in the community and throughout the world.

The home itself needs constantly to be evangelized, and evangelism can happen most significantly through the home, it was pointed out.

This is difficult many times because there is often a deep cleavage between husband and wife which affects evangelism. The wife spends most of her waking hour in efforts to make the family a little cooperative unit in society. The husband spends his time in furthering the competitive struggle. On two such differing philosophies they find it difficult to share life on its deepest levels.

Excerpts From a Statement Before Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce

By BISHOP WILBUR E. HAMMAKER

The advertisers are trying every day in the week, and twice on Sunday, to entice all of us to buy more and more liquor. In beautiful artistic creations and in words of bewitching challenge and charm the constant appeal is to buy and drink this marvelous brand and that amazing mixture. Each is better than the other. All of them can make the life of any individual to be bliss and joy, forever and forever. It is almost unimaginable—the lengths to which the pictures and the legends thereof have the temerity to go.

If you think this is the cloistered and somewhat unworldly judgment of an unrealistic clergyman, let me bring you the words of a sophisticated and worldly-wise newspaper commentator. They were printed in the Chicago Daily News in the column written by Mr. Sydney J. Harris. He says: I quote—"I used to think of whiskey making as a simple affair. But the inspired boys who write the whiskey ads know better. Every whiskey on the market is made by a separate, special and secret blend guaranteed to afford the most exquisite delight to the man of distinction. I have learned much from reading whiskey ads." "For instance," continues Mr. Harris, "nobody can get really stinking drunk drinking the stuff. No, it merely heightens your enjoyment of life, or strengthens the bond of good fellowship. Some distillers insinuate that their whiskey is practically all the nourishment you need, and any day I am expecting their researchers to discover some new vitamin in whiskey that will make it essential for infants. And isn't it funny that the man with the whiskey glass has the stamp of success upon him? Nobody ever gets 'potted' or beats up bartenders or fellow-drinkers, or falls down elevator shafts, or makes passes at other men's wives, or runs over kids in the streets."

I might add to the observations of Mr. Harris, that the copy writers never even give a philosophy of why people drink. They never even attempt to set forth the psychological frustrations and complexes involved in the consumption of alcoholic beverages. It is too sunshiny to be overcast by any such clouds. No shadows—no cloudiness, nothing but sunshine, sunshine—joy, joy, joy!

How long will Americans stand for such deception? How long will fathers and mothers acquiesce in the digging of such pits in the pathway of the unwary? How long will this country tolerate the unwarranted and untruthful claims of liquor advertisements? . . . How far off all this diabolical seductiveness, from the promises of the repealists in the late twenties and early thirties! "Bring back liquor—legal liquor, for the people who want it," was the shouted slogan then. "No return of the saloon as it was before prohibition or anything similar to it," was the shibboleth. "The power of government to be used to educate and warn as to the dangers and hazards of drinking." "Protective barriers to be erected for the defense of citizens from the possible temptations to imbibe." Do you remember the promises made? Fair, fine, forthright. Where, oh where have they gone? Those promises made are still debts unpaid. Decent people, wets as well as dries, will join in a mighty movement, to pay these promises, in part, by demanding the cessation of the "ads." . . .

Have you ever noticed this, gentlemen, that no pictured man or woman drinker is ever disheveled or silly in appearance? There is never a sign of boisterous gaiety. No stagger—no, not even any swagger. Poised, masterful men, beautifully gowned, well behaved women. No unseemly coarseness in the relations of men and women in high priced lounges or low priced taverns. No fights, no brawls, no murders. No such pictures. The men who create the ads seem to know nothing about such awkward scenes. Yet, in magazines, newspapers, and on the air our youth, our young people, even our children are being beguiled with such fragmentary and befuddling allurements to become drinkers as a means and method of social success.

In these misleading advertisements, there is not even a hint that drinking may be dangerous. And remember, your sons, your daughters, the sons and daughters of your constituents cannot barricade themselves against these ads. They invade every home, no matter howsoever defended. They come in as irresistibly as the light comes in with the rising of the sun. But make no mistake. They are like light in only that one respect.

And nobody can know whether he is allergic to alcohol or not. Worse, nobody can know whether his son, his daughter is allergic. No individual is wise enough to know himself in this matter; no doctor can tell him; no scientist has dug deep enough to find the answer. Persons—loved persons all of them—only learn for themselves—the hard way.

Reasonable estimates, made by scientific observers, place the figure of alcoholics at "750 to 800 thousand people in this country." These victims learn too late their allergy to alcohol. But there are ten times that many habitual heavy drinkers who are sliding down into the abyss to take the places, year by year, of those who die frightful deaths. In the case of tuberculosis, we take every precaution against that dread disease. Right now, we are being aroused as a nation in a mighty new assault on cancer. Is it not time that we bestirred ourselves on behalf of the innocent multitude of children, youth, and young people who cannot learn to handle their liquor as "a social accomplishment?"

I know that the argument is made that you cannot do anything about elimination of these pernicious ads, because the traffic is legalized. Many declarations are being made concerning the fact that the liquor business has a firm foundation in the statutes of the land. Why does it have such a position? How come? Is it because of its dangerous nature? Is that why it is hedged about by "licenses," "permits," "high taxes," and all kinds of limitations and restrictions? I suspect so. The courts of the land have so held in innumerable decisions. Our judges all the way up through the Supreme Court have decided again and again that the liquor business is hurtful to life, is an enemy of the well-being of society, and lives only by sufferance. Because of what it does, so the judges have ruled, it has no inherent or inalienable rights.

Yes, it does have "legal standing," but that very fact is its shame and its "Achilles heel." For a hundred years our legislators have proceeded on the basis that its curtailment is a sound procedure and in the interest of the welfare of the people. . . .

Tragedy stalks and has stalked the liquor business. Needing law—laws that guarantee its continuing presence in our midst. Its record is a black one. Its history is sordid, shameful, slimy, scrofulous, rather than glad, noble, and fine as the ads try to tell us. And in countless instances their trying is not in vain. Perfidy prevails. Evil seems to be good. Too late a great company finds out that

SUFFOLK LETTER.

I would write today of friendly things. The little greetings that give such joy. The little good-byes that shine for a moment, and then shine again and again when perhaps the one who spoke them has long since forgotten. The little friendly words spoken on some visit, that were only kindly words, but came to be treasured by the one to whom they were spoken with increasing joy. Some times you are feeling low, and a member of the family senses it, and pretends not, but gives out just the casual little remark that saves the day. Years later the little remark shines forth like a jewel in a proper setting.

The world is so beaten in upon by so much that confuses it is good to pause to think of friendly things—the little three-year-old who shrilly calls your name as that of a well-loved neighbor, or the old familiar door that has been hastily pushed open by your hands so many times as you rush in home, or the sunlight that falls upon the glistening shrubs just outside your window. We have so much to make us comfortable and happy, and take so little time to be thankful.

Often one is led to do some simple kindness, or perhaps he does it without thinking, simply following the impulse of goodwill, and it becomes a treasured memory. I have a few such letters as that. They are carefully tucked away. But why should I bother for I can never lose them. They are written indelibly upon my heart. They were written by men who have suffered and could themselves write a healing, helpful word. Maybe some few people have had such letters from me. I hope so. How empty one's life would be if one had never sown a few kindly seed which had been long since forgotten—and which are, for all that, still bearing fruit somewhere.

Have you never had the joy of somebody telling you of some helpful thing you had done years ago for a mutual friend? You had forgotten, but the one who had been shown the simple kindness had not forgotten. How it behooves all of us to take more time for friendship, for kindness, for encouraging words to friend and stranger, and casual acquaintance. One day I put it in verse:

My little song must be of things
That reach the heart and gladness bring;

Of friendly paths and gardens sweet,
Where children play and neighbors meet.

I cannot talk in language great,
Of cosmic forces, or man's estate;
Or what's beyond the stars at night,
Or secrets of the sun's great light.

I'll stick to friendly cups of tea,
Goodwill to all on land and sea;
A helping hand and a song of mirth,
For brothers all around God's earth.

ANECDOTES ON GIVING.

Maybe you collect anecdotes even as I do. If so, here are a few that have been gathered from here and there on the subject of giving. They should serve to awaken us to our duty and to show us that when we do not give as we should we become the subject of many a joke.

Have you heard the one about the congregation that was trying to raise money for a new roof for the meeting-house? The men of the church were meeting to see if the amount could be raised. One man said: "I'll give two dollars." Another said: "I'll give three." Then all eyes turned upon Brother T. Wad, who was very wealthy. "I'll give a dollar," he said. About that time a piece of plaster overhead, loosened by the leaking water, fell and hit the old brother on the head. He straightened up and said: "I'll give ten dollars." Then an elder raised his eyes toward heaven and said: "Lord, hit him again."

Another anecdote, from where I do not know, concerns a little boy who asked his daddy if the heathens wear clothes. "Surely," answered the daddy; "whatever makes you ask such a question?"

"I only wondered why you put a button in the collection plate today," replied the youngster.

In the Sword Unsheathed, by A. O. Rainy, one reads the following dialogue:

"I have nothing but praise for our new minister, nothing but praise," said the pompous Brother Brown one fine Sunday morning.

"So I noticed!" replied the deacon who had passed the collection plate.

I think Brother G. was the first I ever heard tell the one about a little girl coming to the preacher for help when she had swallowed a nickel. The preacher said: "You don't need me; you need a doctor."

"No," answered the little girl, "mamma said that you could get money out of a man when all others fail."

A Christian had persuaded his Jewish friend to attend church with him. The sermon was upon Paul's efforts to persuade King Agrippa to become a Christian. After the sermon, the collection plate was passed, and the Jew put in a tenth of his weekly income, as Jewish custom dictates, while the Christian put in a dime. After church the Jew whispered to his friend: "Almost thou persuadest me to become a Christian."

I once heard the story about a Negro minister addressing his new flock for the first time. He said: "Now, brethren and sistren, I'm goin' to make this church run." And an elder sitting in the amen corner said: "Praise the Lord!" The minister continued: "Brethren, I'm goin' to make this church get up and fly." Again the old brother said: "Praise the Lord, Amen!" Finally the minister reached his real point: "Brethren, it's goin' to take money, lots of money, to make this church fly." The old brother got up and said: "Let's let her walk, brother; let's let her walk!"

I do not know from where this one came, but it is a good one. The family was just home from church, and daddy said he thought the sermon was too long; mother said she thought the preacher's messages were dryer than the dust out of her vacuum cleaner; big sister joined in by saying that the songs were pitched so high that a bull couldn't yodel the bass; and finally little sister piped up and said: "Well, for a nickel I thought it was a pretty good show."

Speaking of a nickel, here's a nickel's soliloquy: "I am a nickel. I am not on speaking terms with the candy man. I am too small to get in the movies. I am not large enough to buy a necktie. I am of small consideration in the purchase of gasoline. I am not fit for a tip. But, believe me, when I go to church I am some money."

With this anecdote I close the subject and promise not to mention it again, even though there are many more good anecdotes circulating on the subject of giving. A little boy, who had been taught the necessity of giving, noticed that a rather stout lady sitting by him had no money in her hand to put in the collection plate that was being passed. He gently pressed his money into her hand and whispered: "It will be easier for me to crawl under the seat than for you to." That should make some of us feel like crawling under our seats.—James W. Gordon (Adapted).

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH.

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The fifty-eighth annual commencement of Elon College will be observed May 22, 23, 24.

Saturday, May 22, will be Alumni Day. The College and Alumni Association are very anxious to have every alumnus return to the campus for the exercises on that day. There will be class reunions and a business session of the Association. The annual alumni banquet will be held at 7:00 in the evening. The alumni address will be given by Mrs. John G. Truitt of Suffolk, Virginia, of the class of 1926. The morning program has not been fully determined. There will be a picnic lunch served on the campus to which all alumni, their families, and friends are invited. If it is not done before, we hope to start excavating for the new gymnasium on that day. You certainly will not want to miss these events. They will be important and history making. Plans for the new gymnasium have been drawn and the Building Committees of the Alumni Association and the Board of Trustees are called to meet Monday, April 26, to go over the plans and make suggestions or changes.

Sunday will be Baccalaureate Day. The sermon will be preached by a layman and politician, Congressman Walter H. Judd—a fine, Christian layman. For years he served as medical missionary in China under the American Board. The public will remember perhaps that Dr. Judd preached the baccalaureate sermon for us last year. We are exceedingly fortunate to have him return for the same service this commencement. He is a dynamic and convincing speaker. The Department of Music will present advanced music students (piano and voice) in a vespers program Sunday afternoon at 4:00. This is always an enjoyable occasion particularly on the part of those who are interested in such programs. At 8:30 in the evening the Elon Singers will present "Stabat Mater" by Rossini for their annual commencement program. The Elon Singers have won quite a reputation in chorus, quartet, and solo singing. They have made a number of tours during the spring and are singing each Sunday evening in one of our churches near the College. They present a very acceptable program and if you have not heard them, this will be an excellent opportunity.

Monday will be Graduation Day. There will be eighty in the graduating class this year. In addition, a large number of diplomas and certificates earned in different departments of the College will be awarded. The Honorable William M. Tuck, governor of Virginia, will be the speaker. Governor Tuck is making Virginia an excellent governor. His name and influence have gone to the borders of our country. Virginia is our sister state, our next-door neighbor, and we are happy to have her chief executive on our campus to bring a message to our graduating class, families, and friends assembled. The Board of Trustees will meet Monday, May 24, at 9:30 a. m. The Board will adjourn for graduation exercises at 10:30 and reassemble in the afternoon for the transaction of business. The Expansion Program for the College will be re-submitted to the Board for enlargement, approval, and plans for a program that will make the proposed expansion for the College a reality.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend these exercises.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Before these lines are read by the public the Convention will have met and had the opportunity of voting increased apportionment for the College. Years ago the Convention changed from the budget system for the support of its institutions, boards, and enterprises to the apportionment system. The exact date of the change is not at hand. Suffice to say, however, that for the past twenty years the apportionment for the support of the College has not changed. It would seem that with the greatly increased cost of everything that has to do with the conduct of the College and the greatly increased income of our church constituency and the greatly increased funds for the support of practically every other cause of the Church, it would certainly be in line for the Convention to increase its support of the College. The College is not complaining, but it would point with emphasis to its great need of additional support on the part of the Church, the alumni, and friends of the College. If we expect the College to continue and maintain its present standing in the field of higher education, it is imperative that its support be materially increased from the Church, other supporting organizations and individuals. The College would rest its appeal for added support on the fruits of its labors reflected in the leadership of the Church, ministers and laymen.

The College is most appreciative of every gesture of interest and expression of support.

THE TRAILS OF AN EXPECTANT FATHER.

Of course no one knew exactly when the baby would come, but Dr. Dyer said, "If you want to be sure to be on hand, you'd better get here not later than March 15." That early was impossible, as I had already told Pastor Fan and the Tsianglo Christians that I would arrive on the 12th and be there for the Sunday morning worship service on the 14th.

Those two days in Tsianglo were certainly full ones. One day was spent calling on the Christian families. We visited one family with about seventy members, all of whom were Christians. We had three showings of slides. The first night, Saturday, when we showed the Elsianna Wood slides, the church was soon filled and several hundred people were unable to get in. So the second evening we went to the big open air school yard for the showing of slides reproduced from "Christ and the Fine Arts."

Sunday morning the church was filled for the Communion service at which the synod secretary, Liao Ho, delivered the sermon. I wish you could have seen the baptism of twelve babies. They were dressed in bright red or blue and possessed that appeal common to babies of all races. Not one of them cried.

On Monday morning, March 15, I went down to the boat at daylight, eager to get to Foochow. A sampan had been arranged for and it was possible to make Foochow in three days. I would arrive on the 17th, I thought, but I didn't know Chinese transportation.

Just as we pulled out and said good-bye, a sudden shower sent the boat scurrying back into the harbor. Although it lasted only about five minutes, at the end of a half hour we were still there. "What's the matter?" I asked.

"Why, the water is too shallow for these heavily laden boats. We can't go today," the head boatsman replied.

"But I've got to get to Yangkow today," I told him. "Let's try it."

After about another thirty minutes of discussion, all in the local dialect (which I cannot understand at all), they decided to go. It was still possible to make the forty miles to Yangkow by dark. We had gone about one-half a mile when it became apparent that the boats were too heavily loaded for the shallow stream. We scraped bottom twice, and pulled up into a small cove. "We can't go on," the boat owner said. "It's too shallow."

"What will I do?" I asked him.

"Perhaps another boat will come along less heavily loaded," he comforted me.

"Listen," I told him, "this is important. My wife is in the Foochow hospital ready to have a baby any minute and I've got to get there. We might wait here for a week before it rains."

They all laughed. "Maybe a boat will come along," they said.

As we sat there in the boat, I have never felt so helpless. A young man started to engage me in a conversation. "What do the Americans think of us Chinese?" he asked, and then without waiting for an answer replied to his own question, "I know the answer. They think we are crazy to be fighting each other—and we are. All of us young people oppose this war violently, but what can we do? Our present government is pouring every cent it can squeeze from the people into the war. Our soldiers are sent to the front without training and they run when they see the enemy coming. If you Americans want to help China, please don't give arms and ammunition to continue this useless struggle. We need most of all money for roads, medicine, and foods for hungry people. We hope you will help with these. Our common people's lot is very bitter. Please help them if you can. But don't give it to our government for the war. One other thing I want to say to you. I'm not a Christian but I surely admire you foreigners who come over here to help China. We need you very much. You have to give up a lot of things to come here, but we really appreciate it. I hope in the future many more of you will come to help us."

Just then (eleven o'clock, a boat was seen coming down the river and a cry went up. The boat headed toward us and the head boatsman said, "We aren't going either. It's too shallow." My heart sank within me.

Finally our head boatsmen said to the other, "This American is anxious to get to Foochow and I have a plan. You give me some of your cargo as you're too heavy, too. Then you can go on." The other boat owner agreed; so the freight was transferred. I found myself with about twenty-five other passengers crowded into the small boat. But at least we were headed in the right direction.

Our boat quite often hit rocks and the four oarsmen had to get out in the water to lift it off the rocks several times. "We can't make Yangkow tonight, but perhaps we can make Hsunchang," said one of the other passengers. It seemed that everything bad had to happen. The oar peg broke and they had to stop to make one, using the only knife on board, my dull Scout knife. It soon began to drizzle—not enough to be a hard rain but just enough to slow us up. About 4:30 the head boatsman said, "We can't make Hsunchang—it's still ten miles and there are some bad rapids. We will stop at the next small village and spend the night."

A cry went up from everyone. Where would we sleep? What would we eat? Finally, after fussing a bit, the head boatsman said, "If the nine mushroom farmers will get off and walk the next seven miles, I'll try it. The boat is too heavy now to make the rapids." The farmers readily agreed, so we went on. We went around an "S" curve that is one of the most dangerous on the river and it was as big a thrill as any roller coaster in an American park. Just at dark we pulled into Hsunchang harbor for the night.

Since the women and children were to sleep on the boat, the rest of us went to look for a place in the town. With my sleeping bag and suitcase I started the hunt. This was the first time I had been all by myself in a strange city. Previously there had been a minister or Christian to help me, but we have no church in Hsunchang. I had heard that there was a Spanish Catholic priest in the Catholic compound, so I went there first, but he had gone to Foochow and it was locked up. Then I went to the town magistrate's office to see if they could help me. The magistrate had gone, but a minor official (in America we would call him a ward boss) helped me find a good inn. "I fought with the United States soldiers against Japan," he told me. "We are brothers and I am glad to be able to help you."

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Bethlehem Congregational Christian Church of Nansemond County, Va., had a very delightful family night on March 16 under the supervision of Mrs. R. E. Brittle, Superintendent of Family Life for the church. This was a very outstanding event in the minds of all who attended—and very successful, too. It was held in the beautiful and spacious reception hall of the Coca-Cola bottling plant in Suffolk. Every family was asked to bring or send a dish of some specified food. All this was arranged on a large table and served cafeteria style. Such a variety of good-looking food was a sight to behold—chicken in many styles, pork, beef loaf, potato salad, candied yams, kale, butter beans, deviled eggs, chicken and noodles, celery, carrots, pickles and a variety of home-made cakes, rolls and coffee. The tables were attractively decorated with spring flowers and green candles and Shamrock decorations.

After everyone had enjoyed the delicious supper, a short devotional period was led by Mrs. R. O. Luter, Spiritual Life Superintendent, using as her theme, "Love." The hymns, "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning" and "Home, Sweet Home" were sung by all, after which Mrs. Robert M. Kimball of Franklin, Va., Superintendent of Family Life for the Convention, was introduced and with the assistance of her husband, Rev. Robert M. Kimball and Rev. R. E. Brittle, a movie film entitled, "Is Your Home Fun?" was shown. Everyone was impressed with the delightful way of showing how the home life of our families affects our daily contact with the rest of the world. After the movie was over, Mrs. Kimball was presented a gift of appreciation from our President, Mrs. T. H. Dilday.

While the dishes were all being cleared away, group singing was enjoyed, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Harry Schadel.

It was truly an enjoyable affair—and we are looking forward to the time that we will have another "Family Night," and it will be held in our own new addition to the church that is being planned now.

MRS. MARY F. SCHADEL,

Secretary.

Friendly service has not been forgotten in the Bethel Woman's Missionary Society this year.

Last month each member took a gift to be sent to Franklinton Center and also an Easter gift to be sent to the little girl the society has adopted at Elon Orphanage.

At Christmas we sent gifts to three shut-ins in the community. Also, at Thanksgiving, a fruit basket was sent to another shut-in.

A gift of money was sent to a needy and deserving person who is attending a Bible Institute. All during the year cards and flowers have been sent to the sick and shut-ins.

MOTHER'S DAY.

Mother's Day fittingly comes as the climax of National Family Week. During that period, when we honor the mothers of the land and seek to strengthen the ties that bind families together, how many stop to think how closely all the families of the world are bound together in these days?

Do we ask what it means to us that families in many parts of the world are torn apart by forces beyond their control. Do we remember that even the end of the war plus three years, has not brought together countless family groups, or resettled the uprooted, or found homes for the dispossessed?

The insecurity and sorrow and suffering which families in one place must undergo reflects into the lives of happier and more fortunate groups. Children without parents and without care will leave the mark of their misfortune on our children. Families without homes will touch ours. It is not only a matter of Christian giving that we are asked at this time to share our material possessions. For unless we grow together in peace and understanding, neither we, nor the children in our homes, nor our parents will find peace and joy.

This year, let Family Week and Mother's Day in America include the families and mothers of the world. With gifts of clothing, shoes and other necessities, let us remember those whose need we cannot even picture. With gifts of money, let us send food, medicines and friendly care to the hungry, sick and lonely. Material aid gifts should go to the nearest Church World Service Center, New Windsor, Maryland. Cash gifts should be marked "for overseas relief" and sent through the individual's church.

THE WORLD FOR CHRIST.

The little inn was the best Hsunchang had to offer, but it still wasn't much. The proprietor confidentially told me, "We don't have any good inns here." But it was dry and a place to sleep. The bed was, as usual, some boards on two horses with a little straw on top. I DDT'd it good, spread out my raincoat (just in case the DDT didn't kill them all), and put my sleeping bag on top. After a dish of noodles, I settled down for the night.

"Will you call me at daylight?" I asked him.

"Yes, I'll call you. It gets light at four a. m." That sounded awfully early but I was too tired to discuss the question. As I was climbing into bed, I heard his clock strike six times. I looked at my watch—it was eight o'clock. No wonder it got light here at four!

The next day I didn't need any calling at six. When the first streak of light came in the single pane of glass in the roof, I got up, dressed, and went down to the boat. The trip to Yangkow (ten miles) was made in two hours. It was too late to get a boat for Nanping that day, so I had to sit around Yangkow and wait; and I'm waiting as I write this. Time surely passes slowly.

Foochow, March 18.

I arrived. We are waiting.

Foochow, March 29.

Lewis Byers arrived at 2:30 a. m. He weighed six pounds, four ounces. Although he had a lusty voice, he made no apology for his late arrival. We were so happy to see him and so thankful Dorothy got along so well, we didn't even scold him. We suspect you will hear more of this young man in the days to come, for he, too, is a member of the Shaowu Mission.

DICK JACKSON.

Mr. Adams could have added that those who make speeches for war, vote for war, buy government war bonds, or otherwise profiteer on war, scarcely ever see a battlefield until it is turned into a memorial cemetery for those who made the "supreme sacrifice."—James E. Chessor.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

The lovely month of April with its showers and flowers will soon be over. May Day will be arriving. Do you keep the tradition of the May Basket in your community? It is lots of fun and a charming custom, too. Plain, woven or wire baskets may be filled with flowers from the garden or wild ones and hung on the door knob. You ring the bell and run—leaving a fragrant gift.

In olden times in England May Day was observed by the whole village. They were up early, went to the woods to gather flowers, vines and greens. They decorated their village and concluded with dancing around the May Pole. Today many of our schools have a May Day or Health Day with dancing around a pole or rhythmic exercises and games.

Those of you who have a birthday this time of the year are very fortunate for it is such a lovely time and part of your celebration can be out of doors.

Here are some suggestions for a birthday party. If yours is a May birthday make your invitations of colored paper shaped like a basket. Write on it: "Come to a Birthday Party. Date . . . Time . . . At . . ."

Your first game might be a basket hunt. Give each guest a small basket and let him hunt for marbles that you have hidden. Don't give a prize but let each child keep the marbles he has found.

A May Basket grab surprise is fun, too. Fill a basket with little gifts wrapped in colored tissue paper. Cover the basket with a big sheet of paper and let each guest stick in his hand to grab a gift.

Now for one to play outside. It is an Italian game. One player is picked to be captain. Two lines are formed. All the players except the Captain keep their hands behind them, holding the palms open and up. The Captain walks up and down the line with two green leaves in his hand. As he walks he places one leaf in a child's hand, then places the other leaf in the hand of a child on the other said. The Captain then calls out, "Stop thief! Lucky leaf!" The players with the leaves run as fast as they can to slip the leaves into other players hands before the Captain catches them. The player with the leaf tries to pass it on quickly.

The first one caught with the leaf in hand must be the next Captain.

For your table decoration you might want to use just the birthday cake or what about a May tree: Cut a small branch or several branches and strip. Paint it white. Decorate it with colored ribbon bows and lollipops. It will look very festive on the table. Serve cream cheese and nuts spread on raisin bread, a molded gelatine salad and your cake. A happy, happy birthday party!

If you are wondering why I happened to be thinking about birthdays on this particular day . . . I'll you a little secret, it's my own!

REFLECTIONS.

By JANET T. VAN OSDEL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Susan was helping to choose a dress—a present for her sixth birthday. She was enchanted with each one of the dozen dresses displayed but knew definitely which she wanted when told that she might select one for herself. Instantly she pointed to a red-dotted-swiss creation that seemed to have been designed to bring out the lights in her lustrous brown curls and dark eyes.

"We'll slip it on and then you can see in the mirror how it looks on you," said the salesgirl.

At these words the sparkle faded from Susan's eyes and her rosy face suddenly looked worried.

The mirror was several yards away, separated from us by a jade-green rug which had a deep pile into which Susan delighted to sink her small feet. Halfway across it, however, Susan pulled away from the girl, sobbing, "No! No! I don't want to look in the mirror!"

"Mirror shy!" ejaculated the girl. "Funny! Most of my little customers can hardly be coaxed away from the glass."

After that, I watched Susan when she was at home where there were several full-length mirrors. She always hurried past, never glancing into one of them.

Another of Susan's birthday gifts was a red knitted cap from a neighbor, Mrs. Rainer. Susan pulled it on but did not adjust it properly. So her mother said, "Susan, if you want Mrs. Rainer to think her gift looks well on you, go to the mirror and put it on as you think it looks best."

"I can fix it all right," replied Susan; she pushed a few stray curls under the edge of the cap, but she did not go near the looking glass.

An hour later Terry, Susan's two-year-old brother, stood before the mirror, cooing to his reflection and kissing it. Susan, wistful-eyed, stood a short distance away watching him. She turned to me and said, "Terry's nice looking, isn't he?"

"Most people are nice looking if they are clean and not ragged," I answered.

"I'm not!" exclaimed Susan. "Look!" From a discarded black handbag of her mother's she pulled a worn billfold and from it extracted a snapshot. "That's my picture!" she said. "Am I nice looking?" Her brown eyes were filled with tears.

Susan was the object of the snapshot—but what a picture! Facing the sun on a windy day, her features were distorted almost beyond recognition. There was merely a blur of a dark twisted face behind wisps of hair.

"Wherever did you get this?" I asked.

"Out of the wastebasket; but Mother said I could carry it in this billfold for my identification."

"But this isn't you as you truly are, Susan! Shut your eyes! I want to show you something lovely." I led her to the long mirror and said, "Open your eyes, Susan! Now you can see how you really do look."

Susan's expressive eyes widened in amazement; then she shrank back from the mirror. "That isn't me!" she protested. "That little girl is pretty."

"So are you, Susan. That little girl is you!"

A few days later Susan's mother remarked, "I can't understand what's happened to Susan. She eats and sleeps better than she has for weeks, and she looks so happy that it puzzles me. I even caught her smiling at herself and Terry in the mirror—and she used to act afraid of it!"

"Perhaps she's discovered that the mirror shows her something she likes to look at," I suggested. "All children want to be attractive. They can have that satisfaction without being made vain, if appearance is not over-emphasized. Don't you think so?"

"I hope that's true," said Susan's mother thoughtfully.

Probably there is not another case in the entire country just like Susan's; but there are many, many children who are needlessly unhappy because of what they believe regarding realism, I now ask you to place the following sentences from the remarkable but ominously forgotten and neglected report on "Atomic Warfare and The Christian Faith" by the Commission of Theologians appointed by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ. And remember, as you read, that this report was signed two years ago, not only by pacifists like Georgia Harkness, Douglas Steere and Robert Calhoun, but also by non-pacifists like Reinold Niebuhr, John C. Bennett, Henry P. Van Dusen, Bishop Dun and by fifteen others.

What the Theologians Said.

"The atomic bomb . . . has opened before us all the prospect of swift ruin for civilization and even the possibility of a speedy end to man's life on earth." . . . "Atomic weapons clearly belong with the tools for obliteration, not precision attack." . . . "Practices most revolting to ordinary human beings may well become accepted tactics of the new warfare, and conscientious statesmen may feel called upon to adopt them to forestall such action by a possible enemy." . . . "In an atmosphere of general suspicion, atomic war would have, more than any previous form of combat, the characteristics of universal madness." . . . "Hence, all men and Christians in particular are required to search their hearts and minds, to re-examine their principles and practices, and to seek with the greatest diligence for effective ways to abolish this diabolical horror." . . .

"We, therefore, call upon the churches to urge, first, that all manufacture of atomic bombs be stopped, pending the development of effective international controls. We urge, secondly, that the churches call upon the government of the United States to affirm publicly, with suitable guaranties, that it will under no circumstances be the first to use atomic weapons in any possible future war. Such measures are to be thought of not as adequate means of control but as aids to the development of a better state of international confidence, in which effective measures for the prevention of war may the more readily be worked out." . . . "Progress toward this end may best follow two lines: the adoption of such political measures as may strengthen and improve the existing United Nations Organization, and unceasing effort to further the growth of spiritual world community."

A Habit of Self-Criticism.

"There must be established, in the midst of hostility and suspicion, a basis for mutual confidence. There must be evoked in every people a deep humility before God and men, a genuine readiness to acknowledge present faults and to learn better ways, a habit of self-criticism and of self-restraint toward others." . . . "The moral and social role of the Church in world affairs clearly is to help this spirit grow. This is not a political task. In essence it is a work of reconciliation among men, carried on in the spirit of Jesus Christ, in dependence on the power of God." . . . "Its first word in our present situation must be a call to active penitence, addressed to friends and former enemies alike." . . . "Within the setting of Christian resistance to unjust public policies, there is need also for continual urging of more active provision for relief and rebuilding of devastated lands." . . . "This is not optional generosity but plain justice." . . . "Even a small effort to right injustice, if the effort be sincere, can have reconciling value far beyond its intrinsic weight." . . .

The Saving Power of God.

"The saving power of God is such that from otherwise desperate situations in the past—the crucifixion of Jesus Christ and the scattering of his disciples, the persecution of the early Church, the submergence of the Roman Empire in a flood of barbarism—new life has been called forth. It is essential to remember that the new peril we confront today is not the impersonal closing down of an Age of Ice but a possible man-made disaster that will come, if at all, because of specific human decisions. These fateful decisions in turn will be made, if at all, because of underlying attitudes of fear, vengefulness, pride, or rashness."

A Four-Fold Program for Action.

I hope that these two quotations will stir us to prayerful and determined action along several parallel lines:

1. Let us stop all private wars! If in our intimate personal relations, our family affairs, our church activities, our community life, our politics, our social contacts, our international outlook—if in any of these areas we are driven by motives of hostility, personal animosity or selfish exploitation, if in any of them we are resorting to coercion, political sharp practice, corrosive recriminations, any kind of dishonesty or lack of sportsmanship, now is the time to stop! If we expect God to use us to prevent public wars, we must stand penitently before him and forsake all our private feuds and vendettas. Differences of opinion will arise; but, so far as we are concerned, they must be settled non-violently, by right reason, patience, love and sacrifice.

2. Let us arouse the church to its responsibilities. With the judgment of its theologians before it, with the world ready to slip over into the hell of World War III, how can the Church allow herself to be absorbed in secondary things?

An official observer at the United Nations, Miss Mabel Head, representing the United Council of Church Women, said recently: "Talk of war does not mean that war is near, but it does create an atmosphere not conducive to cooperation. The people of this country have been played upon, from within and from without, to create fear. Most of this is political, and would be less in a non-election year. Fear will perhaps get E.R.P. through the House quickly. Fear might surely get U. M. T. and a great expansion of military power adopted. Fear might get control of Atomic Energy out of the hands of civilians and into the Military."

Miss Head goes on to say, and I would make her words my own: "What has the Christian to say to all this? Are the followers of Christ so shaken by the events of these past months as to fail in a bold declaration that war is not the answer to the world's problems, and that the ways of cooperation must be made to succeed?"

3. Let us organize a new extension of Foreign Missions and send out the best skill and wisdom we can summon to break through the iron curtain in Europe and say to the Russian people: "The Christians of America desire earnestly your peace and welfare. We want to know you better. We would join heart and mind with you to build a decent world. As a token of this friendship, we pledged never to use atomic energy except for human benefit."

We might well take our charter for this new extension of the foreign missionary task from these words in the charter of U.N.E.S.C.O.: "Since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed. . . . A peace based exclusively upon the political and economic arrangements of governments would not be a peace which could secure the unanimous, lasting and sincere support of the peoples of the world. Peace must, therefore, be founded, if it is not to fail, upon the intellectual and moral solidarity of mankind." The church has a great missionary task to preach peace to the nations and to carry on an educational campaign for under-

Sunday School Lesson

EZRA LEADS A RELIGIOUS REVIVAL.

LESSON VI—MAY 9, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only.—James 1:22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 119:9-16.

LESSON: Ezra 7:6-10; Neh. 8-10, 13.

Enter Ezra.

"This Ezra went up from Babylon, and he was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the Lord God of Israel had given." We know nothing about the background of this man who steps so suddenly upon the stage of Israel's history—this is the first reference to him. But he evidently had been in Babylon with the Exiles, for he comes back with a band of them to Jerusalem. He led a party of "displaced persons" back to their homeland. Those words "displaced persons" make the story sound up-to-date, do they not? There is no problem of modern man which has not been dealt with in the Scriptures. The wise man looks to them for light and help.

Ezra was a scribe, a professional student and teacher of the Scripture. "He had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments." There are various ways of approaching the Word of God. One may come to it critically and cynically, some men do that. One may come perfunctorily and formally, seeking simply to know the content and to add to one's knowledge. One may come reverently and expectantly, with prepared heart, looking at the Word not simply with the eyes of the head but with the eyes of the heart. Ezra came in this spirit—"he had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord." But more—he came prepared to do it. He wanted to know in order that he might know how to do. That is critically important. He had the finest possible preparation for understanding the word for he was willing to do. Jesus later said, "If any man will do His will, he shall know." And Ezra wanted to share his new found truth with others. He had prepared his heart not only to know and to do, but to teach others. How important it is that the teachers or preachers of God's Word be prepared in heart to teach God's Word! No lesson or sermon is properly prepared which has not been steeped in prayer.

The Public Reading of God's Word.

"And all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the broad place . . . and Ezra read (from the law of Moses) from early morning until mid-day . . . and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law." More attention ought to be given to the public reading of God's Word. People do not read it much themselves. And unlike these men of an earlier day, alas, they do not give much attention to it when it is read publicly. Look around you while the minister is reading the Scripture Lesson in the service of worship and mark the inattentiveness of so many of the people. Some of the trouble lies with the minister himself—he reads in a slovenly manner, and as if it did not make much difference one way or another.

This man read distinctly. And he gave the sense of what he read. It was expository preaching, a type of preaching that is often sadly neglected in this day when ministers are looking for catchy texts, and when many sermons are not much more than lectures or addresses. The teacher and preacher ought to speak in such a way that people understand.

Lest We Forget.

The prayer of the Levites as recorded in Nehemiah 9 makes good reading. It is in a sense a prayer of the Levites in connection with the reading of the book of the law. It is a summary of the history of God's dealings with their nation. It recounts His varied and continued mercies and His unwearied patience with His people. It confesses the sins of the people and prays for divine forgiveness. It proclaims a new covenant, based on the divine mercy and the penitence of the people. As a people we should be reminded from time to time of God's hand in American history. It is so easy to forget. And it is so disastrous ultimately to forget. This prayer of the Levites ought to find expression in our personal devotions and in our public worship.

A Reminder.

When Ezra read the law the people discovered that they had forgotten to observe an important religious festival, the Feast of Booths, or the Feast of Tabernacles. It was designed to remind them of the time they dwelt in booths, and of God's goodness in providing them permanent dwelling places. Religious festivals have a legitimate place in our national life. How important it is that Sunday be preserved as a holy-day instead of becoming a mere holiday. To be sure Jesus sought to deliver the Sabbath from the bondage of legalism. But it is difficult to believe that He would sanction many, many things that are done on the Lord's Day in our modern world. Sunday is a weekly reminder of God's love and God's law. Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget the high purposes and the spiritual possibilities of this Thy Day.

A Revival.

The results of Ezra's efforts was a genuine revival of religion in the life of the nation. Aided by Nehemiah the Sabbath day was again made a religious festival, and all unnecessary work was prohibited. Intermarriage with heathen peoples was prohibited. The precincts of the temple area were set apart for purely religious activities and cleansed of secular activities that enriched the religious brass hats. And unqualified strangers were banned from the priesthood. The total effect was far-reaching, even if it did not become permanent.

As one reads of this sweeping revival, he thinks of the power of a genuine revival of religion. No less a man than a sober and serious historian said unqualifiedly that Wesley's revival actually saved England as a nation. This little man swept all England, and under God lighted fires that have not even yet gone out. Perhaps it is too much to say that a revival of religion would solve all of our modern problems. But it is quite certain that its problems will not be solved apart from a revival of religion.

LIQUOR ADVERTISING AND THE SENATE.

Beginning April 21, the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, once again began holding hearings to determine what is to be done about the advertising of alcoholic beverages.

Hearings were held on the Capper Bill to Prohibit the Interstate Transmission of Liquor Advertising (S-265), on May 12-13, 1947, and a voluminous record resulted. The Dry presentation was in the name of the National Temperance and Prohibition Council which is an annual conference of twenty-four temperance organizations. Bishop Wilbur E. Hammaker of the Methodist Church, led the presentation and did so again on April 21. Witnesses were introduced who officially, and by authorization, represented a constituency of 50 million people. At the conclusion of the Hearing, Senator Clyde Reed presiding, said that the liquor industry had brought Prohibition on itself once before by its excesses and that "it has not learned a thing." It may be said very frankly, that not only those people who are ordinarily called "Drys" find the present character of alcoholic beverage advertising offensive, mischievous and intolerable. Millions of Christian homes are daily affronted by the invasion of radio advertising of beer and wine, whiskey advertising of the "man of distinction" character, and beer advertising of the "home life in America" type. Frankly, they have "taken" just about all of it they intend to take and they are not without means of recourse.

Even more important, however, is the feeling of strong disapproval which has risen among that large group of "men and women in the middle," people who, themselves, occasionally drink because of the pressure of social custom, but who, nevertheless, recognize the fact that the use of liquor is attended by physical, psychological and moral dangers and that the traffic in these beverages constitutes a perplexing and insistent problem. The majority of these people are extremely critical of the present promotional effort of the liquor people.

The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will consider three bills: the original Capper Bill (S-265), which would effectively prohibit interstate transmission of all kinds of liquor advertising; (2) the Reed-Johnson Bill (S-2352), which is offered as a possible substitute and which enjoins the Federal Trade Commission to suppress as "false and misleading," liquor advertisements which by any device represent their product as beneficial to health, physical welfare, social, business standing or prestige, or as traditional in American family life; (3) the Johnson-Reed Bill (S-2365), also offered as a possible substitute for the Capper Bill, which specifically restricts the illustrative and verbal descriptive matter which may be used in such advertising to illustrations showing the label on the bottle. Any one of these bills will have value if it becomes law, and some such measure will eventually become law. The two substitute bills could be stripped of their effectiveness by clever by-passing and trickery, but the undoubtful result would be greatly increased support for still more drastic measures.

The National Temperance and Prohibition Council has taken no action since its formal support of the Capper Bill, the two substitute Bills having been recently offered. Representation of the Committee, therefore, will reaffirm support of that measure and probably will direct attention to the comprehensive report of the former Hearings.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

their personal appearance. Thoughtless relatives and acquaintances often take pleasure in joking about the color or the nature of a child's hair or about the shape of a child's nose. Often the feature held up to ridicule is or has the promise of becoming quite beautiful. A physically unattractive child should not be made overconscious of this handicap but, instead, should be helped to express so much happiness that the term unattractive could no longer honestly be applied.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

once again Satan has decked himself in the radiant raiment of angels. . . .

We have allowed Old King Alcohol too much liberty to lure our people into conditions, where danger impends. Their tongues have been loosed from the restraints of good breeding and decency, their self-disciplines, attained at great cost, have been undermined, their judgments have been blurred and twisted out of balance, their baser appetites and instincts have been aroused and unleashed. Old King Alcohol has no compunctions of conscience, when he deals with men and women, with boys and girls. He knows not the quality of mercy. He is cruel and ruthless. Besides him, Herod, of an ancient time, who slew a few hundred Judean babes, was a gentle man. . . .

I have spent time and possibly presumed upon your patience, in presenting a final plea for the unamended Capper Bill. I cannot but cherish the hope that your ultimate judgment at long last, after full and complete consideration, shall be that the best of all, in the light of all the factors of the total equation, is the original Capper Bill. To me, it shines like a star—a new bright, morning star, heralding the dawn of a better day. My plea is, that you shall see it thus. In closing this formal statement, I want to repeat my words of thanks and appreciation for your kindly consideration of which I have thought and said, and for your patient forbearance in listening to my convictions.

standing and good-will the world around. We must evangelize the world with this gospel—and do it in this generation!

4. Let us ask our government to set up a real peace table to stop war. Since professional diplomacy has broken down, and the "cold war" of fear and military bluster has failed, let us give the people a chance to get together and build a people's peace. Let Congress and the President appoint a commission consisting of a college president, a psychiatrist, a business man, a labor leader, a representative woman, a soldier, a farmer, a college student, a judge, an artist, a senator, a diplomat, a journalist, a locomotive engineer, a sea captain, a doctor, a nurse, a Catholic priest, a Protestant minister and Jewish rabbi. Have this commission given plenary powers of negotiation. With a Russian commission made up of corresponding number in their social order, if possible, let them sit around a table, with two vacant chairs, one bearing a placard: "Reserved for future generations;" and the other, "Reserved for Jesus Christ!" I think such a meeting would find a way to peace. This is not idle fancy. I am completely serious. It is the best way I know to prevent what David Lawrence has so aptly named "The War Nobody Wants!" How wonderful if an aroused Christian conscience could make it live in history as "The War That Never Came!"

Whatever be the motive of insult, it is always best to overlook it; for folly can scarcely deserve resentment, and malice is best punished by neglect.—Dr. Samuel Johnson.

The Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

You remember we set our goal this year at fifty thousand dollars, from all sources. We have always wanted our church offerings to reach $25,000.00 one time. We are hoping that this year will be that year. The offerings last year from churches and members of the church came very near reaching it. Let us put forth a little more effort and really reach it this year. Now that will be fine. I am tempted to challenge the churches that if they will raise $25,000.00, I will do my best to raise $25,000.00 from outside the church from friends and endowments and other sources. Now don't you think that is a real challenge?

During the months of January, February and March the weather was so bad that people could not get to church, and offerings have come in slow and small. The churches are right much behind of what they were this time last year. We hope as the weather turns warm and the sun shines that people will be in a more giving spirit.

So far this year we have received from the churches only $2,518.04 and the year nearly one-fourth gone (now April 22). We have received from outside sources the sum of $6,902.64, or a total of $9,420.68 to date. Let us see how this compares with last year. Last year up to this time, April 22, the church had sent in the sum of $3,903.66, and we had received from outside sources the sum of $7,133.85. You see how the two years compare up to April 22 of this year, and our goal is $50,000.

This year makes thirty-two years I have served as Superintendent of your orphanage. During these years the orphanage has come a long way from where it was thirty-two years ago. During these years we have set many goals to reach and you have always seen to it that I did reach and pass them. You have been good to me in this work of love. I feel that you will not let me down this year. I am anxious to make this year my "Banner Year" of the thirty-two years I have been here. I have faith you will push us up to the goal.

Please remember the orphanage in your prayers, and the workers and the Superintendent, too. This is a work of love, and we are all doing our best for these little children in our care.

SPRING TUITION FEES SOAR AS HIGH AS CN $2,000,000.

Because of spiraling inflation costs, tuition and other fees in most of the China Colleges were increased for the spring semester this year, according to recent reports received by the United Board.

Students at Fukien Christian University in Foochow this term had to pay $2,000,000 in Chinese currency for tuition alone. Total fees amounted to the staggering sum of CN $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 per student, and these fees were less than those charged by several of the other Christian Colleges. At Hua Chung University in Wuchang, for example, students had to pay fees totalling CN $7,600,000 for the spring semester.

HOW CAN WE FOSTER PERSONALITY GROWTH IN OUR CHILDREN.

[Address by Dr. Arthur W. Combs, assistant professor of clinical psychology, Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y., before the Children's Work Section, meeting of the International Council of Religious Education at Grand Rapids, Michigan.]

Many problems of childhood may be impossible for the child to solve because of lack of ability, lack of understanding or lack of control over the source of the problem with which he is faced. The problem of gaining acceptance in a group of children his own age may be important and constructive to the child's development and maturity. On the other hand, the child who is faced with the problem of dealing with parents on the brink of divorce or the child who feels rejected and unwanted because of his race, creed, or social position may find his problems completely beyond his ability to solve and the eventual effects upon his personality and adjustment may be destructive beyond measure.

In helping children to deal with their problems it is necessary for us as adults and teachers to know when to interfere and when to leave matters alone. While it is necessary for us to protect the youngster from those problems which are too much for him to handle, we need at the same time to avoid interfering with those he can handle. Most children can handle far more of their problems and much better than we think they can, providing they are given a chance.

To assist children to solve their problems we must see their behavior as symptoms of problems. To help them most we must seek out causes which produce the symptoms we see. But this is not always easy for grown-ups are not children and it is difficult to see things as children do. Most child problems are not simple. Indeed, they are often extremely complex and require great skill and practice in seeing behind what appears on the surface. The attempt pays dividends, however, and until an adult can do this he is likely to be unsuccessful in giving a child the assistance he needs.

When children misbehave it is because they need to act so in order to accomplish the objectives that are important to them. The child who needs attention and affection will find ways of getting these in one way or another, and it is important to remember that when a child cannot be the best child in class, being the worst can often gain him more attention anyway. Many a child is willing to risk the teacher's wrath for the glory he gains in the eyes of his classmates.

Those of us who are responsible for helping children to better adjustment or who hope to teach the child something which we consider to be important must find ways of assisting the child to satisfy his needs while learning the things we wish him to learn. To ignore these needs can only result in forcing the child to seek elsewhere for his satisfaction.

To the child who wants to feel important, who wants affection and attention, being forced to work in isolation or to learn about things that seem to him to have no relation to himself may only result in frustration and failure to learn at all. Somehow we must find ways of compromise in which the child's own needs can be satisfied while he is learning what is important for his growth and development. To blame the child for not wanting to learn is defeating our own purposes and makes any learning impossible.

Personality growth and development is something that happens in children. It is not something that is taught in a formal sense. The child will learn, will grow and develop no matter what we do. What he will learn, however, depends upon his needs. The child with a need for love, attention and affection is unlikely to be much concerned with learning dates, names and places. On the contrary, his time and efforts in class are more likely to be devoted to gaining satisfaction of his need, in one way or another, while the prescribed curriculum goes over his head.

Assisting children to find solutions to their problems requires of the parent, the teacher, or the psychotherapist as much of attitudes as action. It requires an understanding that it is the meanings that exist for the child that are important rather than the meanings we perceive as adults. It demands a willingness to subjugate self in the best interest of the child and an absolute respect for the integrity of the developing personality. Such attitudes are by no means easy to acquire. The dividends are well worth the effort.

SPRING TUITION FEES SOAR.

Cheeloo University administrators worked out a system whereby students paid their tuition fees with two fifty-pound bags of third-grade wheat flour. Two additional bags of flour, which now costs about CN $900,000 per bag, were needed to meet the cost of their dormitory and other fees.

Inflation is causing special hardships for students, many of whom come from families of the salaried classes. Parents, in many instances, are selling family heirlooms and other prized possessions to keep their children in college.

"I AM YOUR HOME."

I am your home.

I am a bundle of bricks, or stone, and some wood. I can be sold or bought in the market for a few thousands in money.

But I am more than these—I am

Thousands of years of human history with the long struggle of mankind for love and protection;

Sacrifice and great expectations;

Hope that endures and is patient and believes always that tomorrow will be bright;

Dreams and visions and aspirations;

Tears and struggle and disappointment that rend the soul apart;

A lull and a breathing space in the hot hard struggle of life;

Horny hands and self-discipline and laughter.

They say that I am held together by nails and cement and mortar.

FAMILY WEEK

By LELAND FOSTER WOOD

Family Week increasingly becomes an outstanding observance in the life of the year. Presidents have commended it. The major faiths observe it. Denominational offices of education center much attention upon it. Local churches, homes and communities make it a special feature.

So much has the family become a center of concern and a hope for rebuilding the shattered life of our time that a national rallying around the family is taking place. The chief evidence of this is that during Family Week, May 6-8, a national conference on family life is to be held at the White House, with more than 120 national organizations sponsoring it and taking part in it.

For the Protestant constituency the theme of Family Week this year is "Christ the Center of Home Life." Where life is Christian it centers in Christ whether in the home, the church or other relationships. This theme has no mythical out-of-the-world quality. It is intensely practical. Let us think what it means to put at the center of home life one who loved as no one else ever loved, who understood as no other ever understood and was effective as no other has ever been. One who has already swayed twenty centuries is practical in the fullest sense.

The memory of Him and the presence of Him give new strength and vitality at the center of home life. Families meet difficulties: He met more of them. In Him is the morale that families need. His spirit puts something creative into personal relationships beginning in the family and extending outward.

The Apostle Paul in his most inspiring words used Christ's love as an example of what married love ought to mean. What does it mean to love as Christ loved? (1) It denotes an appreciative love. Christ saw the good in persons more than any other ever did, and more than they themselves could see. Because of this they became more as He wanted them to be. (2) "As Christ loves" means to love unselfishly, giving not seeking, and at the same time inspiring others to be their best. (3) Christ's love was patient. He saw people as they could become. He depended upon growth as the farmer does, first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain. (4) Christ's love was understanding. He even understood the misunderstood. Understanding that can prevent misunderstanding is one of the greatest needs. (5) Christ's love was forgiving. Many marriages become blighted by a hard unforgiving spirit. But this never comes into a family if Christ is the center of its life. (6) To love as Christ loved means to love in an eternal set of values, to love God with all the heart, to love one's neighbor as one's self, and to love one's mate and children more than one's self.

Looking forward to Family Week we prepare to take its appeal into our own home life, appreciating our own family ties. For church observance we think of family-centered sermons, worship services and group meetings of all sorts, with discussion of what our family ties mean, dramatic presentation, pictures, hobby exhibits, family suppers in church and many other forms of observance.

As we think more deeply of the meaning of family ties we understand all other families better—families of other nations and races, families in need of food, shelter and also understanding. We sense the need of all families for peace and world fellowship to make the good life possible.

All good things, under God, have their roots in the family, but they do not become ingrown, they bear fruit for all of life. As we build families, families will build us and the world. As we realize that the family ties which mean so much to us are precious to others also we have one of the most fertile roots of world understanding and fellow feeling.

Family Week will be featured by special articles, radio programs, conferences and other observances. It will feature the joys, hopes and dreams of young and old, recognizing that marriage based on love is the dearest dream of youth and the richest fulfillment of maturity, that living in a home where members love one another is the greatest need of children, and that without good homes we could not even understand the great symbolisms such as fatherhood, brotherhood, love and fellowship which are at the heart of the Christian interpretation of life.

Guidance material for Family Week may be secured from denominational and interdenominational offices and from councils of churches. The basic leaflet of suggestion prepared jointly for this observance is put out this year from the office of the International Council of Religious Education. This and other material for Family Week can be secured from that office. It can also be secured from denominational offices and from the Federal Council of Churches.

Mothers Day Beatitudes

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

- 1—Blessed are the mothers of the past for they gave the world its leaders for today. The good and the great crown their memory with glory.
- 2—Blessed are the mothers of the present, for to them belongs the responsibility of giving the world its leaders for tomorrow. The destiny of nations is in their hands.
- 3—Blessed are the mothers of the future, for they have been destined to participate in humanity's final triumph under God, as their sons and daughters make the Kingdoms of this world to become the Kingdom of our Lord and His Christ.
- 4—Blessed are the mothers who dream dreams and see visions of the contribution their offspring shall make to humanity's progress, for they give to the world its prophets, its leaders, its heroes, and its heroines.
- 5—Blessed are the mothers who have pride as good home-makers, for home-making is woman's highest calling, and such mothers shall inspire their children to be neat and orderly in life.
- 6—Blessed are the mothers who rejoice in their lot, looking upon their task as a high and holy mission, for they shall be co-workers with God.
- 7—Blessed are the mothers who are easy to live with, for they shall bring joy and delight to their homes and to their communities.
- 8—Blessed are the mothers who think more about the welfare of their children, than of social pleasures and honors, for they shall not contribute to the problems of Juvenile delinquency.
- 9—Blessed are the mothers who read good books and good magazines, for they will grow intellectually along with their children.
- 10—Blessed are the mothers who think high and noble thoughts, for theirs is the glory of holy influence.
- 11—Blessed are the mothers who believe in God, for they shall train their children in the way in which they should go, and shall not be disappointed.
- 12—Blessed are the mothers who follow Christ with sincerity and devotion, for they shall lead their children into the fellowship of the King of kings and Lord of lords.

TO THE NORTH CAROLINA YOUNG PEOPLE.

For a long time you have said, "Why can't we have district rallies together? It's too far to go to a Conference young people's meeting sometimes—let's get together in 'neighborhoods!'"

Well, we've been able to arrange just that—and during May we'll be having these district rallies for fellowship for inspiration, and for information. You'll see that some of the areas overlap Conference boundaries—but for these meetings we aren't paying any attention to them! We've tried to group the churches which are near. Here is the schedule of rallies:

Are you from: Greensboro, Burlington, Reidsville, Danville, Lynchburg, etc., area? This area meets Sunday, May 9, at the Burlington Church, 3:00 p. m.

Are you from: Henderson, Ingram, Liberty, etc., area? This area meets Sunday, May 16, at the Henderson Church, 4:00 p. m.

Are you from: Raleigh, Sanford, Turner's Chapel, Christian Light, etc., area? This area meets Sunday, May 2, at the Sanford Church, 4:00 p. m.

Are you from: Albemarle, Asheboro, Liberty, Ramseur, Sophia, etc., area? This area meets Sunday, May 30, at the Sophia Church, 4:30 p. m.

What will the program be? Latest news about summer camps . . . Plans for coming months . . . Songs . . . Fellowship picnic supper (bring your own sandwiches—the church furnishes the drink) . . . Evening of inspiration and a fine film-strip . . . See you at the Rally! And we know a good time will be had by all Christian young people.

SOUTHERN CONVENTION LAYMEN.

The Laymen's Fellowship is really under way. The men of the Southern Convention churches had their first big affair on Wednesday evening of last week. It was the Laymen's Fellowship Supper, an added feature on the Southern Convention Program.

It is estimated that from 100 to 150 laymen with their ministers met in the gymnasium of the Epsom High School for an hour and a half of fellowship, and food for the body and mind. After a meal of barbecue, and ice cream and cake, a brief business session was held, at which time the men voted to accept the proposed Constitution and also the slate of officers for the Convention Fellowship and representatives to the Council.

The Honorable Thad Eure, Secretary of the State of North Carolina, the guest speaker, was introduced by Dr. L. E. Smith. The speaker endeavored to impress upon the men the importance of their assuming a share of the responsibility for bringing into local, state, and national government, the proper leaders. He mentioned the apparent lack of interest which exists, and has existed over a long period of time, among the citizens of North Carolina and Virginia, for their government. In order to protect the things we cherish—our way of life, our freedoms, our churches—the Christian laymen must be willing to take an active interest in the affairs of government.

During the Wednesday afternoon session, Chairman George Coleclough reported on the past activities of the laymen. Mr. Thomas L. Moose, chairman of the Evangelical and Reformed Brotherhood, entertained with a very witty oration on a serious subject, "Rise Up, O Men of God."

The officers of the Convention Fellowship and Representatives to the Laymen's Council, submitted by Mr. J. Robert Walker, chairman of the Nominating Committee, are as follows:

George D. Coleclough, chairman; Charles Heath, Jr., vice-chairman, Newport News; I. H. Vickery, secretary-treasurer, Henderson.

The following are Conference Representatives on the Council: A. H. McIver, Sanford (E. N. C.); Cyrus Shoffner, Liberty (W. N. C.); Harry W. Lee, Portsmouth (E. Va.); J. H. Rountree, Greensboro (N. C. & Va.); R. A. Larrick, Winchester (Valley).

The following are Representatives-at-Large on the Council: Sybrant Pell, Ramseur (W. N. C.); Rex Powell, Fuquay Springs (E. N. C.); K. T. Rothgeb, Luray (Valley); R. H. Holland, South Norfolk (E. Va.); Wayne Morton, Burlington (N. C. & Va.).

Rise Up, O Men of God

Message given at the Southern Convention by

THOS. L. MOOSE.

The Situation.

We need power today more than ever. We do not have the world in the proverbial bag as yet. The spirit of the Master is working day and night in the hearts of literally millions of souls, and yet its effectiveness has still to batter down the ramparts of evil in humanity. With all the accomplishments of Christianity since the birth of Christ lumped together in one bundle the victory of the Kingdom is still far, very far, away from the reach of our generation. Terror, horror, violence and despair are eating deep into the hearts of men, hunger and starvation are running unchecked in many lands with the best meat horse-flesh, the best eggs powdered and stale; people are standing in lines for black bread, living in cellars and ruins, downhearted, double-crossed and robbed. In such nations man is fast losing his character, his morals and his honesty. Lying is O.K., sexual restraint is thrown aside with boys and girls running together like wild animals, virtue is sacrificed for food and clothing with parental approval and prostitution is the major industry. Bonds, bank accounts and securities are gone. Disease, famine, pestilence, mangled bodies and warped souls are as common as rocks in the fields. Broken homes are too numerous to count.

If the good brother on the right would go to the window and listen, and had the power to discern it, he could hear the cry of terror from the lips of the daughters of many lands. He could hear the wail of despair from old men and women. He could hear horror in the faint mumblings of children pleading for a chance to live. If the good brother on the left, or the one in front, or the one behind were to do the same thing, and could discern it, each would hear the same pitiful cry. It is just what the devil ordered to win the Kingdom away from us, to take our birthright to God's Kingdom of truth, understanding, freedom from want, freedom of worship, freedom of speech and the peace and goodwill of that first Christmas. Can we not see and understand that this is the Devil's pattern, that the world is playing right into his hands? We are like the irresponsible lamb that plays on the mountainside away from the flock, only to be preyed upon by wild beasts. Yes, this is according to the Devil's plan. So far the brunt of the horrors and terrors have been in foreign lands, but what about America? is she next on the list earmarked for an equal downfall? How much longer can we keep up with our passion for style and madness for pleasure, wasting food, having unneeded clothes and being slaves to selfishness? In "Taking America for Granted" an editorial in Vogue magazine, February 1, 1948 we read "There was a time in this country when even a whole day was not taken for granted, much less water, shelter, a safe night's sleep. Now, by reason of an unequalled bountiful heritage we take for granted—too much. We assume, expect, insist. Nowhere else in the world is this possible." We the doing fine so far, taking for granted our heritage as Christians and as Americans, but who is there among us who can deny that we are unprepared for what lies immediately ahead of us?

Brotherhood Is the Need.

The men of our churches must Rise Up and band themselves together in the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. The harvest is ripe, ready for the sickle. Especially in our land do we have more power than ever before. These are Know How days.

The butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker have more and know more than ever before. We have blueprints, engineers and workmen who can design and build almost anything. We can cut out, fit and fasten things most pleasant to our eyes and feelings. Science is advanced to the

EDITOR'S REPORT TO SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

"What I have written, I have written." The successive issues of The Sun constitute my report to the Convention, are a report of my stewardship forever beyond my ability to add or detract. I feel like apologizing at the outset, serving as I do on a part-time relationship, lacking in time and ability, I am conscious of editorial sins of omission and commission, both of which have penalized our weekly publication.

Nevertheless, all of us effect some compromise with the ideal and work under conditions that are not completely satisfactory. The Christian Sun, a religious publication, has its secular aspects. The divine task has its human problems. Under these conditions we endeavor to do our best. If some people find it difficult or impossible to comply with a request for an occasional news report or article, they can with slight stretch of the imagination realize how difficult, yea impossible, it is for a pastor-editor to perform weekly editorial miracles.

Even under conditions of limited time, money and editorial personnel, the publication has made its regular appearance with some creditable features. An effort has been made to report the available news of the churches, publicize the program and needs of Convention enterprises, plan seasonal issues, secure a wide variety of educational and devotional material, and at the same time keep at least a little finger on the pulse of the Christian world. By virtue of our weekly publication it is possible for us to carry significant releases which cannot be found in any other publication of our denomination. Think of the many rural churches which are without active ministerial leadership two or three Sundays every month. The Sun serves as an assistant pastor in each of these churches, carrying essential announcements and a wealth of appropriate material for observance of great days in the church year. An official of the American Board wrote just recently: "All of us feel that the Southern Convention is doing the best piece of work as far as magazine material is concerned that is to be found any place in the denomination."

Let me enter here a word of gratitude for those who have accepted weekly assignments, who have enriched The Sun with their regular columns or pages, who have found the time to develop and assimilate their best thinking for our edification. This team of contributors provides a variety of material and gives diversified reader interest to the paper. It is a privilege to share in this cooperative enterprise.

A word of appreciation is due the Church to which I supposedly give full-time service. Thanks also to the Convention for the privilege of standing in this editorial succession. The Sun has been on my heart and over my head since that day in Greensboro when the lightning struck—that bolt out of the blue which left a paper on my front door! I have tried to keep the light of religious truth burning, in the happy realization that "the light shineth in darkness and the darkness has never put it out." And, please God, it never will!

I am no statistician and have no financial report to offer. The monthly allowance for editorial expense covers such items as postage, telegrams, long distance calls, travel, membership dues and attendance at the annual Church Press Conference, as well as secretarial help. I pose as no authority and claim no superior wisdom, but I have tried to keep in mind the words of Samuel M. Zwemer: "Only let us be sure that the printed page carries a true message and that we begin, continue and end this ministry of the printed word in prayer."

This period of inflation into which we come precipitates a crisis in publication. In order for us to balance our budget and provide minimum requirements it appears necessary to secure a modest amount of advertising and raise our subscription rate. We have many unmet needs. For instance, we need to have in the office of publication, ready for use on short notice, a cut of every church and minister in the Convention.

What are some of the problems which an editor must face? Let me share a few editorial headaches with you. A wise man once said: "These six things doth the Lord hate: Yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, a hearth that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among the brethren!"

Now this is strong language, too strong for an editor, although we are told on the same authority that God made man in his own image, subject therefore to the same feelings. The writer is moved to suggest that there are six things; yea, seven which an editor—what shall I say? What is the nearest civil appellation to an abomination?—to put it mildly, there are seven things which an editor finds it extremely difficult to tolerate with the expected if not the appropriate Christian meekness and grace.

1. Local News Enthusiasts. These people devour Page Two, but lose their enthusiasm immediately thereafter. To use the symbolic language of St. Paul, they feed on milk, but not meat. They cry out for more local news, but rarely use their own pens to supply the dearth. One is reminded of those people who pray very earnestly to God, but expect the answer to come without further effort on their part. They forget that God might use them in the answer to their own prayers. The mechanics if not the ethics of this old story is applicable. On the eve of Thanksgiving Uncle Mose prayed that the Lord would send him a turkey, but finally concluded by praying that the Lord would send him to a turkey. The prayer was answered forthwith.

The editor is in favor of publishing more local news and has made considerable effort to secure it. Any increase in the amount of local news published will be to our advantage, provided it does not lead to a deluge of trivia so that the church paper descends to the level of a flori-fied gossip sheet. It is altogether reasonable to believe that we can strengthen or improve this essential phase of our publication, but it can be done only if strategic persons play the game with us.

2. Conventionitis. The objection is sometimes voiced that too much extraneous or extra-Convention material is included. There may be a measure of truth in this assertion. The paper is financed largely by the Convention and should be devoted to the interests of the Convention. Nevertheless, when the deadline for publication is reached, we must find materials for the forms. Lacking news from within, we must look without. Moreover, should our journalism as well as our religion not include not only Jerusalem, but also Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth? Surely we are not content to be spiritual isolationists! It would seem that one of the most important services of an area paper would be that of supplying the larger perspective, the distant horizon. The religious press as well as the individual inquirer must seek an answer to the question, "Who is my neighbor?"

3. Belated news, or reports that are no longer news. Obituaries cannot be sent in advance. But the majority of important items could be announced in advance rather than reported subsequently, with equal value and far greater advantages. We need heralds as well as historians.

4. Axe-Grinding Contributions. It must be conceded from the outset that every writer has his pet theme to which he returns periodically. But it is exasperating to have contributors who could write a rich medley of themes, yet prefer to harp on one string; who never strum their journalistic guitar in but one monotonous key; who never grace the printed page without an ulterior and usually irritating motive. The Church Paper should be more than a propaganda sheet. Those who write should help make it "Catholic for every truth of God, Protestant against every error of man."

5. One-Sided Criticism. Everyone needs a critic. One may thank God for constructive critics, those generous and unpaid advisors, those unsolicited guardians of one's soul. "Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

One finally reaches the point of saturation or desperation, however, when a critic, like the hound of heaven, stalks with unrelenting and undeviating persistence. Oblivious to all the altruistic motives which prompt an editor to labor in season and out of season for the beloved paper, non cognizant of the fact that an editor has more duties, problems and irritation than even some of the ransomed ever knew, the critic continues his crusade to rib the editor. He overlooks the varied and spiritually nutritious menu which is placed regularly before him. He has no word of appreciation for the spiritual vitamins served on this journalistic platter. He has been incensed, incensed by an occasional serving of onions, and henceforth there can be no compromise with this unpardonable breach of etiquette.

For instance, we have had an issue devoted occasionally to race relations. The editor is immediately branded. Some show their colors by threatening discontinuance of subscriptions. Occasional discussion of this unavoidable problem is included because it is found in the fountain and model of all Christian journalism, the Bible. Pity, isn't it, that the Biblical writers were not properly coached so they would have avoided the error of writing on this unpleasant subject?

Frank, friendly, well-balanced criticism is appreciated. One-sided criticism defeats its own purpose.

6. Faint Praise. The adjective which usually accompanies this phrase is deleted. Faint praise, although appreciated at its face value, has little redemptive influence. Such statements as "You are doing a fine job," or "This is a pretty good issue" are merely so much uncritical twattle, minus constructive guidance, with only fractional value as morale builders.

Now get this straight. This particular editor doesn't object to praise or commendation, oral or written, direct or indirect. He can stand just about as much as the average mortal. But do not waste time and effort in offering inane, pointless remarks. The editor welcomes this kind of virile, helpful comment: "Your special issue was helpful. You have rendered a distinct service by making available such a wealth of material in one issue. Two quotations are included in my Sunday sermon. The issue goes into my files;" or "I did not like this issue. It is inferior in content and construction. There is more heat than light." Statements of this kind are constructive, provocative, redemptive.

7. (The perfect number!) Clamorers for Capsules. Criticisms usually fall into a few well-defined categories, or families. One group protests the inclusion of undigested and uncompressed article while another group bemoans the editor's sesquipedalian words and sentences. These people are constitutionally opposed to long articles, have the Reader's Digest complex, were brought up on the Shorter Catechism. They forget, or do not realize that many of the so-called long articles have been read or re-read in their entirety and the wordage reduced by 24 to 50 per cent before they appear in our publication.

This rule of thumb advocated by the capsule clamorers, if applied to the queen of all religious literature, the Bible, would reduce Job's epic to an uninspired synopsis, Isaiah's majestic prophecies to a series of communiques, the matchless yet superfluous parallelism of the Psalms would be eliminated and the content ruthlessly reduced by one half; Ezekiel would be denied his fantastic visions; Jeremiah would be forced to eat his words, dry his tears and abbreviate his Lamentations. This unimaginative rule of journalism would reduce the extended parables as recounted by Luke, the historical sequence as recorded so painstakingly by Matthew and the metaphysical periphrastics traced so lovingly by St. John—all these would be reduced to the brusque compactness and matter-of-factness found in St. Mark's reporting. The quietus would be put on the loquacious seer of Patmos and the already expurgated Biblical Canon would be exchanged for a vast pocket edition! Just as there are those who would reduce all sermons to sermonettes, just so there are those who would reduce all religious journals to religious digests. Their motto should be "My cup runneth over."

Now I must be done. As we sit here in this Convention, the editorial work for (Continued on page 13.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The 38th biennial session of the Southern Convention is history. It was well attended and most hospitably entertained. And it gave itself to great issues from early morninw to late at night. The delegates remained in their places remarkably well. There were differences of opinions, but unity of aim, and on most issues harmony of spirit.

The planning for the future of our conferences and churches evidenced progressive thinking, and great faith. About some of the plans one might well ask how can these things be! But if we are to grow, if we are to challenge some of the best leadership in all our local churches and our conferences, if we are going to do our share in a world making extraordinary demands upon the Church, we must be willing to venture for the Christ. The Christians nearest Jesus were the most adventurous of any in the records of the Church. Our times demand heroic faith and unshrinking consecration. Such a note was struck by several speakers. Such purpose was revealed in many reports. It is not a time for littleness, whether we be thinking of our part in Missions, or our College, or the need for young, consecrated ministers and Christian teachers, or the building of churches in new areas, or the development of the personal consecration of our more than thirty thousand members, or the children and youth of our Convention. It is a time demanding the finest and best there is within us. Only that can please Him now. Only that can really please us. Let us give our best and biggest selves in this shining hour to Him.

Laymen were there,—many laymen. They are putting their hands to the work of their Convention. They debated the issues, and oftentimes greatly enlivened the program. Their contribution will be increasing. Perhaps one of the most significant things about this Convention was the formation of the Laymen's Fellowship as a constituent part and auxiliary of the Convention. The women have set a pace for more than a generation. Their organization has helped them. May the men's organization prove to be as potent. Good and outstanding laymen have served in places of distinction offering invaluable leadership throughout the history of the Convention. But they are to greatly multiply their contributions of leadership by enlisting hundreds where once were tens.

In all phases of our work plans were made, resolutions were passed. In the spirit of men and women who devoutly love their Church, and who earnestly seek to do the will of their Lord, let us set forth daily to do conscientiously the firsthand tasks by which the far horizons are reached. Only by doing our duty and our best—to do our best is our duty—with the tasks right at home will we be able to achieve for others what we should. Let us see to it that through prayer we ourselves are prepared in pureness of personal living, patience in our fellowship with others, and in persistence for presenting the Gospel of Christ to a world much in need of its powers or redemption. We may not do all things as they could have been best done, but if our hearts are right God will see to it that the results are right.

AN ELON CARAVAN VISITS INGRAM CHURCH.

Sunday afternoon, April 25, at two o'clock, a group of the students started to Clyde Fields' church in Ingram, Va., to give a program. We call ourselves a caravan under the leadership of Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds. We have been giving our program at different churches around Elon, but last Sunday we took the afternoon off and made rather a lengthy trip.

The highway from Elon to Ingram must have reminded Jim Haley of his visit in the Merchant Marine because he started telling us of his sea-sickness. I don't know how it made anyone else feel, but as Jim started riding over the waves, the car bounced over all the hills and I felt as if I were also on the ocean. Moon Tolley was also sitting very quietly in the corner of the back seat.

We drove leisurely along at about fifty miles per hour; however, when we got to Ingram the other car was waiting for us. It was driven by Todd Ferneyhough, or should I say—frown! I understand that even Dr. Reynolds couldn't sleep during the trip, and have you noticed Jimmy Boon's finger nails?

Clyde took us on a sight-seeing tour. The Ingram Church is an example of what all churches should be and the new parsonage is certainly a beautiful home. We almost lost Dr. Reynolds.

We visited the Carlton home—the Carlton's that gave us our library building. It is a perfect country estate of 1,600 acres. It even made me want to live in the country. At the sides of the home is a lake. Todd started towards it and the only thing that kept him from sinking was his shoes.

The church gave us a picnic supper. The fried chicken, ham, biscuits, sandwiches, salads, all kinds of pies and cakes, and iced tea and coffee was out of this world. In fact, we were all so full that it was hard to give the program. I still don't see how Jean Abell sang her solo.

Despite too much food, the program was fine. Todd opened the service with the call to worship and Jimmy Boon had the scripture and pastoral prayer. Vera Williamson did a wonderful job of playing the piano. With Jean Abell's solo, the music was perfect. The sermon was given by Sara Foster, Moon Tolley, and Melva Foster. The theme was "Characteristics of Christianity." Jim Hailey gave us moral support from the back row.

A very impressive communion service was led by Dr. Reynolds.

After the program Dr. Reynolds told us that it was the best service we had given. That just proves that it's easier to preach on a full stomach.

Don't tell anyone, but the girls got to stay out until 11:30! It reminded me of the good old days when I lived at home. However, I really felt the loss of sleep Monday morning.

LOST IN FAITH . . .

At his first Sunday service in Boston, Gipsy Smith preached to an audience of fourteen thousand persons. At the conclusion of his service he was bombarded by reporters with questions about the youth of Amerca. The Watchman-Examiner quotes his reply:

"Your boys and girls have lost faith in their fathers and mothers. And why shouldn't they? Once their parents used to go to church every Sunday. Then they began to miss, and now they hardly ever go. The children know this. If the moral standards of youth are lower than when I was here six years ago, it is because of this. And how can children have moral standards in view of your cheap divorce laws?"

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

TWO MILLION DOLLARS FOR ELON COLLEGE.

Don't let this excite you. We don't have the two million dollars yet. A campaign to raise that amount has been authorized. Don't let this alarm you. It is not a compulsion. It is an opportunity. Don't be critical. Be complimentary. Be grateful that your church and your college have a vision and are willing to dare to follow that vision that needs of the College may be met, that its usefulness may be increased, and that its influence may be extended to the outer borders of human need for information and understanding.

In these days of mounting prices and increased demands for additional equipment, more inclusive curriculum, better faculties, and higher standards by our accrediting agencies, increased funds and multiplied sources for financial assistance are absolutely essential. All forces responsible for offering advantages in the field of education to present day young people should be grateful for the tremendous increase in emphasis on the need of and the program for education in this country. The Government has taken the lead. It has called attention to the alarming number of our young people without school advantages or who have been unable to take advantage of the opportunities for education offered them. Large sums of money have been appropriated for this purpose and much larger sums are in prospect. Practically all the Protestant denominations in this country have increased their askings of their supporting constituencies for education. Campaigns are being conducted in compliance with these askings and in serious efforts to meet these needs.

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches in biennial session at Henderson, North Carolina, April 27, 8, 29, passed the following resolution in substance: That the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches in conjunction with the Board of Trustees of Elon College initiate a campaign to raise $2,000,000 for the College and that an organization to make this campaign effective be formed as quickly as possible. The campaign to raise $1,000,000 now in progress is included in the $2,000,000 voted. This campaign is not to be conducted on the basis of the local church as a unit but approaches will be made to individuals — individuals within the membership of the Church and individuals outside the Church. Quotas are not to be assigned to churches, though where desired contributions may be given through the Church and the Church receive credit for unbudgeted gifts.

There was no expressed opposition to increasing the amount to be campaigned for, but opposition was expressed to the plan to have the Church authorize and participate in the campaign. The objectors contended that the Church should simply give its approval and that the College should conduct its own campaign. The Church, having founded the College, having supported it through the years, and having maintained certain controls over the College, it would seem that the Church would not only be interested in but responsible for the economic condition of the College and should from the fact of such a liability be responsible for and willing to conduct a campaign to improve the economic condition of its principle institution. No individual will be expected to contribute the full amount, but every individual will be expected to contribute to the extent of his ability.

People talked about the proposed campaign during the Convention. They will have occasion to talk about it in their local church and about their firesides. Your attitude back home will give direction to the campaign and have much to do with its success or failure.

Don't say that we have set our stakes too high. Don't say that we cannot raise this much money for the College. Put the responsibility on the ones who suggested it. Take for your responsibility what you are able and willing to contribute. No one will be expected to give more, but that much will be expected of everyone. If everyone will give what he can and is willing to give to the extent of his ability, there can be no question as to results. We are able if we are only willing. May God help us to be willing.

Victory is sweeter after a partial, or seeming, defeat.—Selected.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The present conference year is more than half gone. The Sunday schools and churches have contributed a little more than twenty-five per cent of the amount apportioned for the College. This is not discouraging. In fact it is encouraging. The contributions for this purpose total a little more than in any previous year. We have been falling short of the total apportionment for the College year after year. With cooperative efforts and a few churches and Sunday schools going "the second mile," we should raise the entire amount apportioned, $12,500, before the conference year is over. If every Sunday school and church will do its best, we shall exceed the amount apportioned.

We are grateful for all contributions that have been made and are thankful for what may be given later.

THE STRANGER in Virginia—or even the Virginian himself—seldom visits that part of the state known as the Peninsula without stopping at least briefly in historic Williamsburg. This picturesque town is widely known and carefully preserved as a monument to an important period in our history. Its significance is well annotated so that “he who runs may read.”

Few, however, who drive on down the Peninsula to Newport News are aware of another community which has contributed an important chapter to the social and economic history of the area. This community is an impressive monument to the vision, industry, and thrift of a group of twentieth century pioneers.

What Meets the Eye—Then and Now.

Fifty years ago last April two men of the Mennonite faith bought 1,200 acres of worn-out plantation land on the Warwick River. Its chief crops at that time were broomsedge and scrub pine. Existing buildings were for the most part, poor shacks and tumbled-down sheds or barns. One house that had seen better days is described as having had all porches, pillars, and other not purely utilitarian parts torn off for firewood. The people who lived there had become too tired and hopeless to do anything to better their condition.

Now that same area is a garden spot. Fifty years (puls hard work and scientific farming) have wrought an unbelievable transformation. There are acres of well-cared-for orchards—apples, pears, peaches, plums, cherries. There are beautiful, lush pastures with dairy herds of pure-bred cattle. The large painted barns are usually flanked by two, three, or four tall silos for winter feed for the herds. Neat, modern poultry houses dot the landscape, some of them two stories high. Dwellings are large and in good repair. Most of them are of twentieth-century construction and show little influence of the Virginia colonial architecture of the surrounding area.

The community is known locally as the Colony. Outside the Colony proper (the original 1,200 acres) other Mennonite families have bought farms totalling more than 2,000 acres. The county agent says the Colony “now owns fully half the commercial planting in this area.” Their farms can be quickly and easily “spotted” in a drive through the county. All are socially and spiritually as much a part of the Colony as are those who live on the original tract.

A Community B

The Denbigh Mennonite Colony is located on the historic Virginia Peninsula. From the foundation of the colony, the James and York Rivers. What is now the Mennonite Colony was once an old plantation that was abandoned and made their living from orchards.

Man-Made Wilderness.

Like westward pioneers, these people came to a land that was a wilderness. It was, moreover, a wilderness in which the very soil was worn out by three centuries of farming which had robbed it of all organic matter. Years of tobacco growing had left the soil too poor for profitable production of that crop even as long ago as the Revolutionary War. Everything had been taken out and nothing returned to the earth. Following the Revolution, tobacco growing had been discontinued and corn and wheat introduced “though the tobacco-exhausted soil did not yield above 10 bushels of wheat to the acre in many cases." By 1897, only a few Negroes who had no other choice continued the effort to get a living from general farming. Others in the area had turned to oystering, lumbering, and shipbuilding.

Assets to Overcome Liabilities.

Most of the new settlers came with limited means. There had been a depression in which they, like others, had suffered. They came to get cheap land and to build homes within their means. For the 1,200 acre tract, the original purchasers had paid $10 an acre. (Its value now ranges from $100 to $1000 an acre.) Though they brought little cash, they had other assets. Among these, perhaps the most important was a common religious faith in which the spirit of cooperative endeavor both within the family unit and among neighbors was basic. This supplemented but did not replace individual endeavor. Thus the Colony did not become a "Cooperative Community." It became a community in which friends and neighbors helped one another, while retaining their identity as individual farmers, each striving to pay for and build up his own land. The settlers came from many places, but all brought with them the conviction that general farming on family-sized farms could restore the exhausted soil to productivity. In addition to the spirit of cooperation, they brought good livestock and poultry for breeding, seed for the new crops, and a scientific approach to soil-building and farming practices.

A Scientific Approach.

Most of them were already familiar with available printed material dealing with agricultural matters. Some of them even were regular contributors to farm journals. All were experienced farmers with a faith in farming as the best way of life. This was no "back-to-the-farm" movement by tired city dwellers or visionary intellectuals. They did not depend on guesswork for determining the potentialities and needs of the soil. Local people were puzzled when the little vanguard of explorers appeared with shovels. But they soon discovered their purpose. The shovels turned up samples of the soil for analysis. One of the men who first visited the area reported in a letter to friends in the North:

"There is a variety of soil here, but it is generally of a rather dark, sandy loam with a clay subsoil and was originally very fertile and productive but much of it has been farmed without manure, fertilizer, or clover. . . . As a result of such treatment the land does not produce heavy crops but we think it is evidence of the strength and lasting qualities of the soil that it produces anything worth harvesting after such treatment. . . . and the soil yields very kindly and promptly to manure and good treatment. We saw this to be true where tried."

The newcomers had faith in deep plowing. They learned from discussion with local people that up to this time "only the surface had been tick-

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Dear Little Friends:

It's nearly Mother's Day. I hope that if you are planning to give your mother a present that you will either make it for her or give her a special gift of love and time: like doing the dishes for a week or month.

I want to write about the two mothers that I know best: my own, and my husband's mother. My mother whose name is Bessye Hyatte lives in Newport News with my father and grandmother. The best part of her life has been spent in the work of our Church. It is the only church to which she ever belonged. For years she worked with Christian Endeavor groups and was a Primary teacher. It is from her that I learned to love and to work diligently for the church. She coached me in my first public talk when I was five years old! She also taught me crafts and handwork and story telling. She was strict too, more exacting than mothers are apt to be these days, but I am glad that she was. If she had not taught me about prayer, the church and the Bible I doubt that I would have become a minister's wife. She is a mother of which I can be very proud.

My mother-in-law has always belonged to the same church too. Her husband's family and her own have gone to Pope's Chapel in North Carolina. Her father-in-law and her husband were deacons there, and one of her sons is today. I like for her to tell me tales of Pope's long ago and of the ministers she knew in her youth. Her name is Annie Lee House and she was named for the daughter of General Lee who spent her last days on the plantation of one of her relatives. She too taught her children about the church and its work. She was a school teacher and she taught my husband to read and write. Even now when she has been seen many years, she has an active interest in the denomination and reads THE SUN every week. I am proud of her.

Just because it is a special day and we wear flowers and remember our mother with presents, there is really no reason for being too excited about it. It is nice to remember them on a day of their own but it is nicer to remember that mothers are part of the family every day in the year.

Mothers can get tired, mothers can be bored and mothers need to have a little time of their own. It is not easy to believe but they usually know best. They can be wrong and when they are I hope they say so. Company manners may be very well but everyday manners with mother, daddy and brothers and sisters are the very nicest of all.

We all think our mother are the very best and that is good. Boys and girls should work hard to learn to be not only as good as their mothers and fathers but better for each new generation has advantages that the one before did not have. Bless all our mothers and praise to them!

CONSIDERING THE CHILD'S MOTIVE.

By JANNETTE STEVENSON MURRAY

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Most parents let their feelings govern them much too often," said a thoughtful mother, who, although she works hard to make a living, has in her leadership been an inspiration to her study group. "We should remember," she continued, "that children are people like ourselves. If we heard their side of the case, we should frequently find that what seemed naughtiness was really a lack of understanding on their part."

"I saw an illustration of that the other day," one of the group responded. "My next-door neighbor raises chickens, and last week one of her hens hatched a fine brood. My neighbor kept a heavy board across the front of the coop for a few days, to prevent the little chickens from getting out; then, this being no longer necessary, she stood the board up, leaning it against the coop. I thought, when I saw it, that it looked as if it might fall and I wondered why she had left it like that."

"Billy, her five-year-old boy, was fascinated with the chickens and spent hours about the coop. Saturday noon, he had just fed them their oatmeal when he saw the yellow cat sneaking up. Now this cat has a reputation for eating little chicks, so Billy ran to chase it away, but accidentally his foot hit the board. It fell, killing several chickens."

"The noise brought his mother. 'Oh, you naughty boy!' she cried. 'See what you've done!' She seized Billy and whipped him. He tried to tell her about the cat, but she was too angry to listen.

"The little fellow sobbed heart-brokenly for an hour; then he became sullen and resentful for the rest of the day. He felt badly treated—that his mother had been unfair. His only thought had been to protect the chickens. Had my neighbor put the board away when she had finished using it, or at least placed in flat upon the ground, the accident would not have occurred. Of course, I don't believe in whipping, but no child should be punished in any way without an investigation having first been made."

"I'll have to confess that I was at fault recently in much the same way," said another member of the group. "My little Jean always wants to help me wash the dishes. A few days ago she ran to the sink, filled the dishpan with water, and then somehow upset it on the floor. Being very tired at the time, I punished her. Afterwards I realized she had only been trying to help. Taking her in my arms, I told her I was sorry and that it had been wrong for me to be angry, since she had not meant to spill the water. The little dear appreciated my apology; she has been most considerate ever since."

"Our doctor told us a helpful story," contributed another mother. "This is about chickens, too. The doctor had bought a dozen pedigreed Buff Orphington chicks. The next day he found six of them in a pail of water—drowned by his three-year-old daughter, Ann! He was tempted to punish her, but, remembering a discussion he had heard on the importance of finding a child's motive before acting, he began to consider what her idea could have been."

"Then it came to his mind that, a few days before this, Ann and her mother had gone with him when he had made a call in the country. They had stayed out in the yard watching some fluffy yellow ducklings swimming in a big pan. Recalling this, he knew Ann had thought that the chickens, like ducks, could swim and that was what she was trying to make them do."

"The doctor did not punish Ann, but he explained very carefully that chickens must never be put in water, because they cannot swim, and, also, why ducks can swim. Ann understood, for later she repeated it all to her mother."

On United States coins are placed the motto: "In God We Trust." But this is not engraved upon any of our battleships or our bombs. Why?

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE PROPHET MALACHI.

By REV. ROBERT M. KIMBALL.

LESSON VII—MAY 16, 1948.

THEME: "Giving Our Best in Worship."

LESSON: Malachi 1:1, 6-9; 2:13-14; 3:7-12.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke 6:46.

The Man.

Who was Malachi? No one knows. The word Malachi is not a personal name. It means "My Messenger." We do not know what the real name of the author is, but his identity after all is not important. His message was the important thing then just as it is now. We may rest assured that he was a strong, vigorous, clear-cut personality who was strongly opposed to any person who treated the Temple and the things of the Spirit with indifference and carelessness.

The Times.

The Book appears to have been written after Nehemiah returned to Jerusalem to rebuild the walls that had been ruined. When this work had been completed Nehemiah returned to the Persian court. The people of Jerusalem found themselves in the midst of serious economic depression, crops were poor, parasites ruined the plants, the fruit was disappointing. The priests were so corrupt and immoral that a spirit of skepticism pervaded the land. The people complained against God, refused to pay their tithes and offerings, were guilty of social injustice. Divorce was common. Worship had degenerated into empty forms. It was a serious situation that called for a fearless servant of God. Malachi was God's man of the hour.

The Book.

When you study this lesson, read the entire Book of Malachi. It consists of four short chapters. You will discover that most of it is written in the form of a dialogue. It sounds as though the prophet was speaking for God and the priests and people who listened to him raised objections and asked questions.

The Message.

Malachi told the people that God's seeming indifference to them was due to their real indifference to Him. Neither priests nor people were doing as they should. Worship was supposed to be conducted according to the law. In Deuteronomy 15:21 we read that animals that were blemished were not to be offered in sacrifice. Malachi 1:8 accused the priests of doing this. Evidently the people were bringing animals to be sacrificed that were not perfect and the priests were accepting them. God, through the prophet, asks if they would bring such gifts to a Governor whose favor they desired.

In Malachi 1:13 the prophet condemns the priests for their indifference and half-hearted performance. In 2:17 Malachi says that God is tired of such service.

Deuteronomy 14:22 requires tithing. Malachi 3:8-10 says that the people are not doing this. They must stop robbing God. God's house and God's worship must be supported. The tithes and offerings must be brought to the Holy Sanctuary, and the hearts of men must be right so that the offerings may be accepted.

Malachi reminded them that a Holy God cannot accept offerings from the hands of those who live sinful lives and who are guilty of divorcing their wives and marrying heathen women. In God's sight it was an abominable practice. One living in open and wilful sin could not expect God to smile upon his sacrifice. Malachi sensed something of the sacredness of marriage and home life.

The message of Malachi was not designed to spare anyone's feelings. This prophet spoke out boldly and bluntly. He did not compromise at any point. He brought people face to face with their sins. He let them know what God thought of their attitudes and actions. There could be no doubt or misunderstanding on the part of anyone. God's children must worship Him in spirit and in truth they must present offerings to Him that were fitting and worthy, they must practice His teachings in everyday living. The people were not doing these things, but God expected them to.

The Message for Today.

Let us consider now whether we today are worshipping God in spirit and in truth. Worship is a word that grew from the word worth. When we worship God we acknowledge His worth to us. Forms of worship have no meaning unless the heart of the worshipper is right. Insincerity is highly offensive to God. When the minister prays, do we merely bow our heads as a matter of form or do we really enter into the spirit of prayer? Do we really pray the Lord's Prayer or just repeat the words? When we sing hymns do we sing words or do we mean what we are singing? Do the lines we read in the Responsive Reading express our feeling of praise to God, or once again are they just words? On Sunday morning do we "attend church" or do we enter into a real experience of worship?

As for the Tithe—do men rob God today? There is one fact that is irrefutable—God demands that those who would be numbered among His own give generously to His cause. However, facts show that we spend a great deal more each year for alcoholic beverages, tobacco, candy and cosmetics than we do for the Lord's work. Will a man rob God? Yes. If he did not there would never be any difficulty in meeting church budgets and all of our missionary enterprises would be supported and enlarged. There would be money available for every worthy cause if only Christians brought their gifts to God as they should. Bishop Ralph S. Cushman has said, "I profoundly believe that money which belongs by right to God but is held back from Him by His professed followers constitutes the greatest hindrance to vital spiritual life that there is in the world today."

In Conclusion.

One cannot read the words of Malachi without being impressed with one great truth, God was far more ready to forgive the sins of His people than they were to repent. "Return unto me and I will return unto you saith Jehovah of hosts." (Malachi 3:7.) Right in the midst of His condemnation He inserts this plea. Or again, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." God promised His people a great reward for faithful fulfillment of the things He expected of them.

How many of you tithe? You who do not won't you today begin availing yourself of his great source of blessing?

Read Malachi 3:15 and on through to the end of the book. Does it remind you of Jesus' discourse on the final judgment? After reading of the blessings and rewards to come from following the commandments of God, are you not inspired anew to try to live according to God's will?

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

A MESSAGE FROM REV RALPH SHRADER AFTER VISITING THE SOUTHER CONVENTION.

While I was your guest and speaker at the Spring Rallies, the Rev. Richard Jackson wrote to me: "The Southern Convention people are ideal friends to have in our supporting churches. Their interest, as evidenced by their prayers, generous support, letters, and gifts, makes us realize that it is both a privilege and a responsibility to represent them in China."

The Southern Convention is not only doing a magnificent piece of work in supporting the Shaowu Mission, it is also setting an example which is an inspiration to our total Congregational Christian fellowship.

As churches and individuals in the Southern Convention share in support of the total program of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, they strengthen the work which was begun in 1812 when the first missionaries sailed in faith on the Caravan from Salem, Mass., for Calcutta, India. The friendship bestowed, the good accomplished, the number of people who found new life in Christ as a result of our work abroad cannot be measured in full, but it is well for us to recall some of the blessings which the world enjoys as a result of modern missions.

Our missionaries have established churches in which the word of God has been proclaimed, opened schools to overcome ignorance and superstition, founded hospitals to heal the bodies of those who suffer, and, in hundreds of ways helped the people of many lands to help themselves. Working with missionaries of other Boards, they have created a community of understanding and good will which encircles the earth. This fellowship of Christians was not broken even by the war. It is one of the most hopeful signs—some would say the only hopeful sign—on the horizon of the world in which we and our children must live.

We also must think of the present. Today, our Congregational Christian fellowship has a total of about 412 missionaries. Among them are many brilliant young people who have won honors in church and school before going abroad. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson* are excellent examples of such young people. Other young couples who have been sent out by your board during the last few years include: Rev. and Mrs. David Stowe to North China, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Grant to Japan, Rev. and Mrs. Charles Heuser to Micronesia, Rev. and Mrs. Elton Brown* to the Philippines, and Rev. and Mrs. Robert Mueller* to India, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Harlow to the Near East, Rev. and Mrs. Lee Bergsman to South Africa, and Rev. and Mrs. Lawrence Stanton* to Mexico. These are but a few whom the Board has been able to send as a result of increased support from individuals and churches and with the help of the Postwar Emergency Program.

What of the future? The younger churches are asking for more than 180 missionaries. "Please send us teachers." "Help us find a doctor." "The young people of our country have lost faith in the old religions and we need student workers to help them discover a new religion." "Our churches are weak because some pastors lost their lives during the war, others have been forced by inflation to go into other lines of work which will enable them to support their families. Send us missionaries to help us train a new generation of Christian pastors." These are samples of the requests which continually come from missionaries.

The Southern Convention, through its churches and individuals, is helping us meet these urgent appeals for missionaries. My God bless you and continue to give you great joy in His service.

RALPH R. SHRADER,
Secretary America Board.

The Woman's Association of the Winston-Salem Congregational Christian Church will have Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds of Elon College to present our Bible study for this year at their regular meeting on Friday, May 7th.

Someone is always making the fatal error of believing that the United States is down to its last dollar's worth of manhood, and waking up to find out that it is the same old country with big biceps, a love of freedom and justice and plenty of self-respect. We may do a lot of things we ought not to do, but our ideals are still there and, in the pinch, the nation always measures up to them.

The shadow of the sword can only be blotted out by the shadow of the cross.—Selected.

degree that almost frightens us. The atomic age can make or destroy. On the other hand atomic energy can be just what God needs to advance better living standards if we would put it at His feet and devote it to His cause. Politics is a headache to us and so uncertain. Statesmen know more than ever, their knowledge is amazing. A good politician today can go up a tree naked and come down with a suit of clothes on every time. But the knowledge of politicians could be just what God needs today, if it is on His side.

Money—There is enough money in the United States alone to save the world if it could only be used to promote the Kingdom work. We get discouraged and critical when we talk money in our churches. We are inclined to think the church is more interested in the fleece than the flock. We may just as well become reconciled to the fact that all fleece-bearing animals get sheared regardless of who owns them. Since money is the fleece of the flock we are just naturally sheared whether we like it or not, regardless of who we are or what we do—so why not let the Good Master have it? He does not gap up our hides to get it. It would be unfair to Humanity to criticize these Know-how times with the power of Science, Politics and Money because these are the forces we need to build the Kingdom. The issue is not the Know-how nor the Power in itself, but with whom do the knowledge and the power lie. On God's side and in His hands they are an asset large enough to change the world overnight, so to speak. Let us not destroy our 1948 America, let us convert Her to God's plan.

This is where the Brotherhood, the laymen's fellowship comes in. In organization there is strength and power, the strength and power humanity needs today. We have enough good men in our world to save it if we pool our resources and pack a wallop. Prophets tell us it is now or never. If we do not prove our God now before men we may never have a chance again. If we do not champion a Christian democracy now and tell the world that the masses of mankind have not been born with saddles on their backs (neither are there a chosen few born with boots and spurs) Mankind will not believe us any more.

Let us examine a Brotherhood or Laymen's Fellowship for a moment and determine in what lies its power, or what does it do for a man to give him power. According to the Master's plan, in our textbook the Holy Bible, these are the things that make individuals, nations, churches and civic organizations effective and make the Kingdom immortal. It harnesses the manpower of the church; it makes for a manly church; it trains lay leaders; it undergirds the work of the Pastor; it develops loyalty and devotion to the church; it puts men behind the whole program of the church; it brings needed information to churchmen; it promotes church attendance and Bible study; it builds family altars; it brothers the boy in the church and community; it provides an open forum for churchmen, so sorely needed; it gets men behind the finances of the church, locally and denominationally; it makes for community betterment and world friendship; it guides an intelligent Christian social action; and it federates churchmen for greater cooperation in tasks of the Kingdom. The history of mankind has proved that these are the things that make a man, a nation or a church when every thing else fails. This is the house on the rock that stands immortal, long after the last wind has passed or the last cloud break of terror, horror or despair has spent its last effort.

As far as we are concerned this is the generation to turn the tide of battle to favor the King of kings. Our battle cry must be "Rise up O Men of God." They say His true and tested men are few in number, but this is no time to be faint-hearted. We must spread out in the darkness of our day, break the pitchers around our torches and let them out a mighty yell. Evil forces have been known to fight forces they thought bigger than themselves. It has worked before and it will work now, or else there may never be another chance.

Let us put on our armor of truth and right to meet the issue of the day. Let prove the power of our God by the strength of our endeavor. The Challenge is ours—Rise up, O men of God!

column 100, No. 18, April 29, 1948 has been done. The material has been written or selected, the type has been set, the forms made up and the paper is rolling from the press. It will soon be folded, stitched, addressed and mailed. But ere you get your copy tomorrow or Saturday, someone must begin to think, plan, write and dig up material for the next issue, or incur the wrath of the Managing Editor. So, you see, we face a stern and unrelenting schedule. It is no trifling matter.

Brethren, pray for your church paper, for all who prepare its contents and shape its destiny, whoever they may be. Pray that it may be representative in its presentation, thoroughly Christian in its impact, that it may continue throughout its second century with outreach both wide and deep.

Let us go forward in the Southern Convention in the realization that this is the great day for religious journalism. We have a notable heritage. Having put our hands to the plow, let us neither turn aside nor backward. Great events await "the seeing eye and the imparting pen." Great truths demand assertion and reassertion, without fear or favor. The recent decision of the Supreme Court concerning the teaching of religion in public schools imposes a new responsibility upon the religious press. Oh, how Protestantism needs to get its periodicals circulated and read. Ponder anew the words of Charles R. Watson: "No other agency can penetrate so deeply, abide so persistently, witness so daringly, and influence so irresistibly as the printed page." In this faith may we go forward.

WHERE IS HAPPINESS?

Not in Unbelief—

Voltaire was an infidel of the most pronounced type. He wrote: "I wish I had never been born."

Not in Pleasure—

Lord Byron lived a life of pleasure, if anyone did. He wrote: "The worm, the canker, and the grief are mine alone."

Not in Money—

Jay Gould, the American millionaire, had plenty of that. When dying he said: "I suppose I am the most miserable man on earth."

Not in Position and Fame—

Lord Beaconsfield enjoyed more than his share of both. He wrote: "Youth is a mistake; manhood, a struggle; old age, a regret."

Not in Military Glory—

Alexander the Great conquered the known world in his day. Having done so, he wept in his tent, because, he said, "there are no more worlds to conquer."

Where, Then, Is Happiness Found?

The answer is simple: In Christ alone. He said: "I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you."—Selected.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

We consider the spring season one of the most beautiful seasons of the year. During the winter season the trees are so bare and look so lifeless, and one does not hear the song of the birds. Also the weather is cold and bleak. Not so when the warm days come in the spring. The trees take on new life and the buds begin to swell, the robins come on the lawn, build their nest and raise their family, and the flowers begin to bloom. The cabbage plants begin to grow and look green, and the onions and garden peas look inviting. In fact, one can see the hand of God in everything. He has made a beautiful world for us to live in and has supplied it with everything for the need of man. He gave us these blessings to be used for a good purpose, but how unappreciative we mortals are?

Instead of living as Jesus taught us to live and showed us how to live, nations go to war with each other and fight and destroy what God has kindly give us. It's a great world, isn't it? The writer regrets to see destruction of anything.

Mr. Wagoner, our farmer, has been busy this week planting garden. We try to raise all the garden vegetables the children can eat. If the seasons are right we will have garden vegetables until frost this fall.

The good ladies are still sending us hens to put in our poultry house. We can use quite a lot more. We have a large poultry house and a large lot fenced in to take care of 250 hens. We now have 150, can still use 100 more. If you would like to send us a coop it will be appreciated.

led." They were sure lime must be added. It was not readily or cheaply available. But oystershells were. By burning these on stacks of wood, they got the lime the land needed. They planted legumes. Plowing these under furnished more nourishment for the hungry soil. Crop rotation was established. As quickly as pastures could be built dairy herds were increased. The manure was returned to the soil. More land was cleared of stumps and sedge and restored to fertility. It was hard and painstaking work, but in the brief span of fifty years it has yielded rich returns. The first soil analysis, according to a local soil technician, reported "organic matter: a trace." Now one of the largest dairy farms has a report of 5 per cent organic matter, and other Colony farms have 3 to 4 per cent. (Usually one must go to virgin forest soil to find so high a rating.)

Science Extenden to Livestock and Poultry.

But the scientific approach did not stop with soil building and crop rotation. It was extended to livestock and poultry breeding and husbandry. Herds and flocks were continually improved—and are still being. Most of the Colony dairy farmers belong to the Peninsula Artificial Breeding Association and many are members of the local Dairy Herd Improvement Association. They fought Bangs disease with vaccines, and "Texas fever" with fencing and spraying. As late as 1913 an epidemic of the fever wiped out a fine herd of 16 dairy cows. This incident aroused enough public sentiment to compel passage of a "fence law." The county and the state "cooperated in a program to eradicate the ticks which spread the fever. All cows in the county were sprayed or dipped every two weeks for the whole summer."

No settler brought more than one or two family cows into the Colony. The idea of commercial herds developed in answer to need in the area. First only surplus butter and cream were offered or sale in nearby Newport News. Now the production and distribution of milk "give employment to slightly more than one-third of our families." There are fifteen producing herds, the largest of which numbers about 150 cows. The Colony supplies more than half the milk used in the crowded Newport News area.

Equal care was given to poultry improvement. One farmer had brought to the Colony 250 "pure-bred Silver-Faced Wyandotte pullets" from the farm he left in Ohio. He had been breeding his "utility stock" since 1880. He sold to his neighbors hatching eggs and breeding stock. Other families experimented with other breeds.

"My father was one of these," reports one of the poultry men. "His interest in the subject led him to take a correspondence course from American School of Poultry Husbandry. This course along with information gleaned from poultry magazines and through experience proved to us the only possible way to maintain high egg production was to develop this quality through line-breeding from those individual birds that possessed that trait. . . . This required the keeping of many records and also made it necessary for us to provide hatching facilities." Here, as in other matters the colonists used all available resources—printed matter, agricultural extension specialists, experience of others. To this they added their own careful experimentation, shrewd observation, and unusual ingenuity.

Farms Are Mechanized.

The scientific approach included, likewise, mechanization of farms as rapidly as mechanical devices were available. Tractors, combines, trucks, milking machines are to be found everywhere. Only two farms in the Colony now use any horses. Dairy barns have up-to-date sanitary "milking parlors." Poultry houses have central heating, automatic water and feed carrier systems. the "chicken picker" has greatly increased the production of broilers for market. Even more recent developments in the poultry industry are radiant heat and germicidal, ultra-violet light.

"The latter," says a farmer, "has been used by some of our local producers with excellent results." This same man predicts a bright future for the Colony poultrymen "who will prepare for this work and apply themselves intelligently"

Young People Like the Community.

This considered acceptance and application of the scientific age has undoubtedly been largely responsible for the interest the young people have in remaining on the farms. They are an important part of a thriving and continuously growing business enterprise. Moreover the spirit of neighborliness persists. Social and recreational activities spring up spontaneously. Parties, fish fries, sailing on the Warwick in privately owned boats, fishing for fun, a community chorus, activities of the literary society, and continuous "ebb and flow" of visitors between this Colony and other parts of the country keep Jack from becoming the dull boy produced by "all work and no play." In recent years, privately owned planes have begun to play their part in keeping these colonists in touch with their friends in other parts of the country. The little bi-weekly publication of the Colony, the Warwick River Tide, reports these visits in its column "Ebb and Flow" in a vital style which must give the entire community a feeling of participation.

The influence of the Colony has extended far beyond its own people. According to the county agent, it "has played an important part in the agricultural economy not only of Warwick County but of the whole Peninsula." This has resulted not form any effort of the Colonists to force their ways on others, but rather from an eloquent demonstration of sound, progressive farm practices and of a way of life that is full and satisfying.—J. and J.

Toward a Christian Policy for American Agriculture

Much federal farm legislation currently in effect was enacted to meet the emergency conditions, first of deep depression and later of World War II. The time is ripe for its re-consideration. . . . It is our Christian conviction that a sound farm policy for America must establish as objectives and implement as programs the following goals for American agriculture:

1. Organized, sustained and realistic abundance in production that all people may be adequately and healthfully fed and clothed.

To this end we support federal programs of production and marketing research and extension service for the farmer. We favor the federal-state cooperative school lunch program and a federal program which will provide a minimum health diet for all the American people. We urge full American collaboration with the other nations of the world through the instruments of the U. N. Food and Agriculture Organization, the Council of F. A. O., the International Trade Organization, and the Reciprocal Trade Treaty program to the end that food and fibre may find its way readily to hungry, and ill-clad people wherever they dwell.

2. Conservation and restoration of the soil, water and forest resources of the nation.

We support a vigorous federal soil conservation program including general conservation education, technical conservation aid to farmers, and financial assistance to farmers for long-run conservation practices in the public interest. We favor the extension of the river valley authority plan (T.V.A.) to other river valleys of the nation as a sound method of land and water development, conservation and use.

3. Extension and preservation of the efficient owner-operated family farm as the normal and desirable pattern in American agriculture.

We support the retention of the 160-acre limitation in the Federal Reclamation Act. We support the tenant purchase and rehabilitation programs currently provided under the Farmers Home Administration and urge their extension on the principle of supervised credit. We call upon the Congress to enact legislation which will (a) facilitate the acquisition and possession of family-sized farm units by persons whose purpose is to reside on and operate the farm, (b) discourage acquisition and holding of farm lands by absentee owners and the acquisition and holding of acreages in excess of a family-sized unit by individuals or corporations.

4. Justice for the farmer.

We believe that the most important and practical road to income parity for farmers is a national program of full production, full employment and equitable distribution of purchasing power. This takes us beyond the realm of farm program, but we call upon government, industry and labor to join hands with agriculture in a program of abundance and fair distribution.

However, until it is demonstrated that America can keep the industrial-urban economy at full production with equitable distribution of wages, salaries and profits, we favor federal farm legislation which will provide farm people income security in the event of mass unemployment and drastic price deflation. Such legislation should place principal reliance upon a modernized parity formula, a price guaranteed and announced well in advance, and direct payments by the government to farmers to make up the difference where the actual price falls below the guaranteed price. The actual selling price of farm commodities should be freely determined by the market and government payments should be extended only for a limited period of years in order that needed adjustments in production may take place.

We urge Congress to investigate the practice of "future's trading" in agricultural commodities and to provide such regulation as shall protect both the farmer and the consuming public.

We are especially concerned that justice in terms of fair wages, working conditions and living standards be extended to agricultural migratory workers. To that end we urge federal legislation assuring to agricultural migrants collective bargaining rights, minimum wage guarantees, and social security. We believe that federal social security should be extended as well to cover farm owner-operators and tenants.

5. Freedom with responsibility on the part of the farmer.

Recognizing the necessity for federal farm programs, as outlined above, we nevertheless believe that a democratic society calls for a maximum freedom coupled with the acceptance of individual responsibility. We urge, therefore, that the federal program encourage the development of farm marketing and purchasing co-operatives and that it continue and extend democratic and cooperative methods of the type now represented by the Rural Electrification Administration, the Soil Conservation Service, the Farmers Home Administration and the Farm Credit Administration. We also strongly urge cooperation but no official ties of any legal or financial sort between the Agricultural Extension Service or any other branch of the Department of Agriculture and any privately organized farm organization.

We call upon the Senate and House Agriculture Committees, the Platform Committees of the 1948 National Conventions of the political parties, the national farm organization, and all other persons and groups concerned with federal farm policy to give study and support to these five major goals for American agriculture.

We call upon Christian people and churches to study these goals, to formulate and publicly to declare their formulation of a policy and program for American agriculture.—The Council for Social Action on recommendation of its Agricultural Relations Department.

Pentecost

By HENRY SMITH LEIPER

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." Thus the Book of Acts describes that meeting which Christians since have marked as the birth of the Christian Church. Its anniversary comes May 16 and on that day we shall be looking toward another meeting of Christians—the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches meeting at Amsterdam, Holland, August 22-September 4.

At Amsterdam, the World Council of Churches will finally and formally come into being as an expression of that great vision of Christian community that "ye may be one." At Amsterdam representatives of 135 Christian Churches from 39 countries will meet "with one accord, in one place." What is this one accord?

It is a tragedy that Christians are divided by cleavage of doctrine, faith, and social order and in their cleavages are denials of Christ's commandments. We are not one either in spirit or in organization, and it would be foolhardy to claim that at Amsterdam all conflict would be eradicated and all cleavages closed.

Yet there will be one accord at Amsterdam, one basic assertion upon which all representatives will agree. Today the Christian churches need more than ever before a "sound from heaven" such as came to that first tiny group in Jerusalem at Pentecost. They will come with a consciousness that despite all the strength which comes from the various confessions, there is needed in this day a still greater strength—of Christian community, of one encompassing Christian spirit that will fill Christians throughout the world as the Holy Spirit filled those who met at Pentecost. Only that strength can dispel fear, distrust, and lead Christians forward, where they now stand afraid.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Mrs Robert Lee House has recently been elected president of the Richmond Council of Church Women.

Dr. Warren H. Dennison spoke Monday, May 3, at Boston, Mass., before our Congregational Christian ministers of the Boston area on "The Minister's Place in Church and Kingdom Finance."

Dr. Archie H. Hook, Superintendent of the Washington State Congregational Christian Conference, attended on crutches his first meeting at the Regional Meeting recently held at Spokane, Washington. It was his first meeting since his accident last October from which he is recovering.

DELEGATES TO AMSTERDAM.

Selection of 137 representatives by 20 American Protestant denominations for the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches to be held in Amsterdam, Holland, August 22 to September 5, has been announced by Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Associate General Secretary of the Council.

Mr. John Foster Dulles, former U. S. delegate to the United Nations, will serve as consultant to the Assembly. Included among the delegates and alternates who will represent 23 million American Protestants are Professor Reinhold Niebuhr of Union Theological Seminary, Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of the Methodist Church, the Honorable Walter H. Judd, Congregational missionary and Congressman from Minnesota, Dr. John R. Mott, a president of the Provisional Committee for the World Council of Churches, and Charles P. Taft, President of the Federal Council of Churches.

In announcing the list of delegates, Dr. Leiper stated that "these representatives include the best leadership and most capable spokesmen American Protestantism has to offer."

"It is significant also that of the 137 delegates 36 of them are laymen. It is apparent that Protestant denominations here made their selection in order to insure an adequate representation of church laity at the Amsterdam meeting."

Congregational representatives include Dr. and Mrs. Douglas Horton, Ronald Bridges, Theodore A. Greene, Roswell P. Barnes, Walter M. Horton, Charles S. Johnson, Miss Rosemary Park, and Mrs. Robert G. Williams.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, President of the North Carolina Council of Churches announces the securing of Rev. Carl Rollen Key as Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Council of Churches to assume office on September 1, 1948.

AMONG THE 3,000.

Unknown to us, their names are written in the Book of Life. They were the charter members of the Christian Church. What a glorious company! Moved by the Holy Spirit and the preaching of St. Peter, they swelled the ranks of the believers. They came into the Church at a crucial time, just when they were needed, and supplied the essential personnel and leadership to send the new enterprise on its world compassing mission. What a privilege it was to be a member of that original, formative and determinative pilgrim band! How greatly we are indebted to them! They were spiritual pioneers. Thank God for that first 3,000 which came into the Church on the Day of Pentecost. They were the spiritual first fruits of Christ, the harbingers of a mighty concourse of converts from that day unto this.

What will happen on Pentecost, 1948? Will it find God's people in one place, with one accord, awaiting the promise of the Father? The ingathering of 3,000 members into our churches on this significant anniversary is an event devoutly to be desired. Our Church needs a new transfusion of spiritual power. And surely there are 3,000 men, women and children within our influence who need Christ and the Church. Pentecost should become their spiritual birthday.

We must grow, not only by union or annexation, but we must grow from within. Our depleted ranks must be filled. The need is great and the hour is crucial. Who will endeavor to secure one or more of this number? Who will decide now to become one of that glorious number? Let the invitation be given in every Church this Sunday. Pentecost and Membership Sunday may be one. Let us fulfill the conditions and God will give the results.

CHAPLAINS STAMP.

A new three cent stamp, of special delivery size, honoring the four chaplains who sacrificed their lives when the troopship, Dorchester, sank in the North Atlantic on February 3, 1943, will be placed on sale in Washington, D. C., on May 28, it was announced by Allyn P. Robinson, Area Director of the North Carolina Region of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

The four chaplains—a priest, two ministers and a rabbi—had given up their lifebelts to the soldiers aboard the torpedoed vessel and were last seen, standing with locked arms, each uttering his own prayer. Shown on the stamp are, left to right: The Rev. George L. Fox, of Cambridge, Va., a Methodist pastor, the Rev. Clark V. Poling, of Schenectady, N. Y.; the Rev. John P. Washington, formerly of St. Stephen's Catholic Church, of Arlington, N. J., and Rabbi Alexander Goode of Washington.

An original painting of the incident hangs in the New York offices of the National Conferences of Christians and Jews, at 381 Fourth Avenue. The Conference, which is dedicated to fostering understanding, amity; justice and cooperation among people of all faiths and nationalities, will sponsor a special cacheted cover for the "Four Chaplains" stamp, one picture actually showing the four clergymen as depicted on the stamp, the other a dramatic picturization taken from the original painting, showing the four chaplains standing on the deck, with locked arms as the ship is going down.

The first day covers will be available at 25 cents apiece or five for a dollar. Orders with remittance should be addressed to P. O. Box 302, Pleasantville, New York. Across the top of the stamp itself will be the inscription in Gothic, "These Immortal Chaplains." Also in white Gothic below will appear these words: "3c United States Postage 3c." The stamp will be 0.84 inches by 1.44 inches, arranged horizontally. The color will be announced later.

REFLECTIONS UPON THE ASCENSION AND EXALTATION OF JESUS CHRIST.

A Sermon

By BERNARD V. MUNGER,
Chapel Hill, N. C.

Any one can discover that the early Church made much of the fact of the ascension and exaltation of Jesus Christ. At least a dozen times in the Gospels, the Acts, and the Epistles, Jesus is spoken of as sitting at the right hand of God. The Church of the New Testament, from the sermon of Peter in the Acts, to the visions in the book of Revelation, proclaimed the exaltation of Jesus Christ. Furthermore, the Apostles' Creed is evidence that the Church in the century after the New Testament also believed that the exaltation of Jesus Christ was an article of Christian faith! Let us therefore consider what the early Christians meant when they said, "He ascended into heaven and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty."

In its simplest terms, the ascension story proclaims that there came a time when Jesus Christ was no longer known in a visible manner. It is a recognition that if Jesus Christ is to be known, it will be in an invisible, spiritual way! The Incarnate Lord is now gone from the earth as a bodily presence. That is the first meaning of the ascension story. But, the simple announcement, "He is gone," is not all.

The ascension story contains also the proclamation that now Jesus Christ could be known as present everywhere. The promise of the Christ who ascended is "Go into all the world, and lo, I am with you, always!" Christ who left a locality has gone where He is in reach of all men, for all time! That's the meaning of the ascension story. No more will space or time or bodily conditions limit Jesus Christ. With the ascension, a new relationship between Christ and His disciples was proclaimed. It was a relation whereby all men everywhere and in every time might know and receive Him, and be at the same time known and received by Him! The ascension story proclaimed this relationship, and it came to pass on the day called Pentecost.

Accompanying the promise of the ascending Christ He would be with His disciples, was the command that His disciples go into the uttermost parts of the earth to make disciples. Thus, at the ascension, the hope of a universal discipleship; a universal, timeless Church, was born. The ascension story is the story of the birthday of the hope of a discipleship that would reach into all the world, and throughout all ages. It was the day that the disciples received their explicit calling to evangelize the world!

Christ's going away in the ascension was the fulfilment of His promise to go to prepare a place for His own! His going away was that of which He had spoken, saying: "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am, you may be also." With the ascension, Christ leads the way to that transformation of human life into a new mode of being, immune from death, and unrestricted by the conditions of earthly life. As He led the way, He promised that such a way was opened for us! Into that world and that condition into which Christ ascended, it shall be our blessed privilege to enter. That, too is part of the meaning of the ascension story!

Further, with the story of the ascension, the early Christians always coupled the proclamation of Christ's exaltation. He didn't just disappear into a vague new life! He went into the glorious presence of God the Father Almighty and there He was received with favor and established as Lord of all. He was exalted to be the Lord of all reality, past, present, and future. He is established Lord of all.

OBSERVATIONS.

Sunday, the Day of Pentecost, will be a significant milestone in our Evangelistic Crusade. The ingathering of members throughout our churches should continue. The birthday of the Church should be the spiritual birthday of many souls. There is rich significance in the fact that Whitsunday was first "White"-Sunday, as those who were baptized wore white garments to the service. Let us continue the identity of Pentecost and Whitsunday.

People who are genuinely concerned about the fate of week-day religious education will welcome the clarifying and heartening statement of Dr. Minor C. Miller which appears in this issue. The outlook is not so dismal as we had feared.

The world's greatest news-gathering organization, the Associated Press, was organized one hundred years ago this May. This enormous organization which provides world-wide distribution of news to 3,900 newspapers and radio stations started with a membership of six newspapers in New York City. We salute this organization which gives a vast reading public many significant religious as well as secular releases.

Just as the Southern Convention at Liberty Church was voting unanimously in favor of union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church, the Associated Press issued a statement by William E. Lampe, secretary of the E. and R. Church. Fourteen of their thirty-four synods have voted for union. All fourteen voted favorably by large majorities and five approved unanimously. As soon as nine more synods have approved, the necessary two-thirds will have been obtained and the union will be assured as far as the E. and R. Church is concerned.

Coincident with our emphasis on laymen's work in the Convention comes the announcement that a prominent Congregational layman, Sir Oliver Franks, will succeed Lord Inverchapel as the British Ambassador in Washington. Ambassador Franks is a former professor of moral philosophy at Oxford and an expert in economics. An article in the New York Times magazine carries this statement: "Half of his exceptional powers and personality might be attributed to the Great School at Oxford, but the other half certainly derived from his upbringing as the son of a Congregationalist minister, who is himself the son of a minister. It is precisely this combination of clarity of mind and of heavy moral purpose which informs his personality and may explain his extraordinary career." We need more avowed Christian laymen of this calibre.

MOTHER'S DAY.

Mother's Day came as the culmination and climax of Christian Family Week, and was observed generally throughout our churches last Sunday. Someone could render a great and lasting service to Christendom by writing some creditable hymns and anthems for Mother's Day. . . .

The editor of the Richmond News Leader felt called upon to write a strong editorial setting forth the prevalence and danger of social drinking among mothers. It is significant when the secular press finds it necessary to preach temperance on Mother's Day. Mothers should be the agents rather than the objects of temperance education. . . .

Virginia Methodists were called upon for more than lip service this Mother's Day. A special offering was received for a Home for the Aged. The Methodists are to be commended for this tangible evidence of interest in aged and indigent mothers.

EXPENSIVE BEER.

Who would believe that a few beers might cost $12,500? Preposterous? Doubtless that is what a young sailor thought until he learned through bitter experience.

Michael E. Whitting, on liberty from a ship berthed in Norfolk, had been drinking "a few beers," according to his testimony. He broke into historic St. Paul's Church in Richmond and smashed priceless stained glass windows. The most costly damage was that done to the Robert E. Lee memorial window, English designed, which was installed in the church in 1892 in memory of the Confederate hero. "This man died," reads the inscription from Second Maccabees, in the Apocrypha, "leaving an example of a noble courage and a memorial of virtue, not only unto young men, but unto all his nation."

After being apprehended, the sailor admitted that it had been his custom to get drunk on beer whenever he had shore leave. While one suspects this is typical of many sailors, one is certain that beer drinking is limited by no means to the navy. No sensible person would claim that this is a typical result of beer drinking. On the other hand, no sensible person can drink beer without being conscious of its attendant dangers. Beer is costly in original investment, for many people spend so much for beer that they have nothing left for the church. Beer is expensive: in the taste it cultivates, the habit it formulates, the money it diverts from other essentials, and the multiplied evils and tragedies of drunkenness to which it contributes.

REPENT OF SIN ITSELF.

The Spartan lad was taught that there was no wrong in anything he did, but that the wrong was in being found out. Consequently, when one lad had stolen a white pet fox and hidden it under his tunic, he allowed the fox to gnaw into his very breast, and yet made no sign. The theft of the fox was nothing, but being found out was everything! Regret for the consequences of sin, or the exposure of sin, or the penalties of sin, is no real element of a godly repentance.—A. T. Pierson.

The World Council of Churches Assembly Scheduled

AMSTERDAM, 1948.

By DR. W. A. VISSER 'T HOOFT, Gen'l Sec'y, World Council of Churches, Geneva, Switz.

New and unprecedented approaches to old questions are almost bound to meet with misunderstanding. The plan to form a World Council of Churches is no exception. The remarkable element in the situation is rather that the overwhelming majority of the church bodies have shown their willingness to enter together upon this pilgrimage into virtually unknown territory.

The historical significance of this meeting does not, however, lie chiefly in its world-wide ecumenical character. "Amsterdam" will mean a new departure in the relationships of the churches to each other. What Archbishop Soderblom proposed first in 1919 and the Ecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople in 1920—namely that the churches should enter into real fellowship with each other—is now about to happen. Amsterdam will not only mean that another ecumenical conference is added to the series of such meetings. It stands for the beginning of a new process in church history.

These churches are not coming to Amsterdam with the thought of being absorbed in one single, unified World Church. They are not setting up a centralized organ to speak and act in their name. They are not planning to create an ecclesiastical parallel to the United Nations. What they intend to do is something much simpler, but no less important. They desire to enter into a continuing relationship to each other, so as to collaborate regularly in matters of common concern, to render a common witness whenever possible and to deal with the question of Christian unity in a Christian manner. They will meet in grateful recognition of the unity which already exists and will engage in frank discussion of their differences.

The emergence of a new historical development is never a smooth process—least of all in church history. Amsterdam will be the meeting place of churches—most of which have lived in isolation from each other. They differ from each other in all the ways in which institutions having grown up in different cultures and situations differ. They differ also in important points of faith, of church-order, of their attitude to the world. They will only slowly learn to enter into a truly creative discussion with each other. The critical observer at Amsterdam, therefore, will not find it difficult to discover evidence of very real disharmony.

But the great thing about Amsterdam is that none of these barriers to fellowship will be final. These churches will not be meeting alone. They will meet under the eyes of the one Lord to whom they all owe allegiance and whom they acknowledge "as God and Saviour." They may hope that in spite of their formidable differences, in spite of the great confusion resulting from the divided state of Christendom, they will discover unity behind the disunity, and will receive from the Head of the Church their common marching orders.

What will these delegates do at Amsterdam? The Assembly is a con-great pressing challenges which face the churches today, which are mainly four: Is the Church living up to its calling? Is it rendering a clear witness? Does it proclaim and exemplify the Lordship of Christ in society? Is it a force of justice and reconciliation in international life? These questions, to the study of which men and women in many countries have given much time and energy during the last two years, will be fully considered in the four sections of the Assembly and answered in the light of the insights given to the whole Christian family.

A fundamentally important part of the Assembly will be the common worship. In the hours of common listening to the Word of God and common intercession, in the hours also when delegates will participate in the Communion services of other confessions or simply attend these services in the fellowship of prayer, the deepest understanding will come to them of the gift of unity and the sorrow of disunity. We hope that in those hours many will learn to pray: "Lord, make me an instrument for the restoration of the unity of Thy Church."

The year 1948 is a unique date in church history. What an opportunity! Here can be seen at a glance the amazingly varied and richly diverse life of the world-wide church. What other body can compare with the Church in the life of all nations, all races, all cultures! Amsterdam may be an occasion to hear the true voice of the Christian Church as a whole—as it speaks when it rises above national or even confessional limitations.

But also what a risk! Will the Assembly be sufficiently humble and sufficiently expectant: can God's creative power work through this Assembly? Are the churches really ready for this great adventure? Is not the real danger of this whole undertaking that it is carried by churches with their inveterate tendency to clericalism and officialdom? May it not be that this new beginning will end as so many promising new beginnings in the Church and the world have ended—in mere organization?

It is possible that Amsterdam will have to be described in the words of Ezekiel: "The bones came together . . . but there was not breath in them." But God may grant that other words in the same vision may become true once again: "The breath came into them and they lived, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army."

The heart of the Netherlands, showing the Royal Palace (left) and the Nieuwe Kerk where the opening service of the Amsterdam Assembly will be held on August 22. stituent Assembly and will, necessarily, give considerable time to such questions as the constitution, the membership, the organization and the program of the World Council in the coming years. It is no small matter to set up an effective organ which is to serve churches in all parts of the world in such varied fields as reconstruction, youth work, ecumenical study, international relations, press, and many others. It is even more difficult to elaborate a form of organization which will ensure that the different areas and different traditions participate equally in the leadership of the Council.

Nevertheless the major emphasis of the Assembly will not be on these questions. An assembly of Churches of Christ—especially if it meets in the disrupted world of 1948—dare not content itself with matters of policy and organization. It must turn to the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The other night I made a speech at the Suffolk Kiwanis Club at the invitation of Mr. Henry I. Jaffe, chairman of the program committee. It was a special father and son affair and I made free use of some of my own verses relative to home and family, and was delightfully surprised when I sat down by the chairman of the program committee to be told that I would receive a check for Elon College. Perhaps hearing its product he thought they would be in special need of it! But the main reason for my surprise was the fact the Mr. Jaffe is a Jew and I did not know he knew about Elon. The following day I received his check for $25.00.

Since this is only a letter let me tell you that a few days before that I called on one of our members to give him the opportunity to make a donation to Elon. He was at first very loathe to accept the opportunity. He asked me if Elon did anything beyond what it was paid to do—which some of you may think was a sort of up-side-down question—and I told him, yes—that my own daughter, as a minister's daughter, received her tuition free as a scholarship, and that Elon gave still other scholarships, whereup he handed me his check-book and requested I make out a check for him to sin. He realized that Elon was his own church's college, training ministers and workers for his church. I let him do most of the talking, but only waited for the right opening to properly present the opportunity to give. If the good laymen of our churches understood the god motives and purposes back of our college, our orphanage, our missions, it would be a joy for them to make donations to them. When we understand it is different.

One of the most delightful occasions which I have attended lately was a dinner enjoyed by the Forward Movement Sunday school class of Oakland Church. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., president of our Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, is the much beloved teacher of the class, and one can see first-hand why his church and Nansemond County are proud of him. It is a very large class and the fellowship was most enjoyable. One could easily see also their appreciation and love for Dr. and Mr. I. W. Johnson, Dr. Johnson is rounding out his fiftieth year as their pastor.

Speaking of Sunday school classes, we had 178 present Sunday in our Suffolk Men's Class and a total in our Sunday school of 544. What a great responsibility rests upon Sunday school teachers, and they are measuring up to it. Their work is voluntarily done, and well done. They desire no price or praise, but we all should fully realize how much poorer our churches, communities, and country would be without these laymen and laywomen who faithfully prepare and enthusiastically present the message of the Master every Sunday in our Sunday school classrooms.

Let me close with just a mention of our annual Woman's Banquet held this past week with more than 225 women in attendance, presided over by Mrs. W. A. Daughtrey, president of the Woman's Missionary Society, and spoken to by Mr. W. R. Savage, principal of our high school and teacher of our men's class. Such a meeting and such a message were most inspirational.

THE ISSUES FOR AMSTERDAM.

One of the powerful contributing factors to the effectiveness of the Assembly is the process of preparatory study which has preceded it. Thirty-seven authors have been chosen, and four volumes have been prepared, but behind these facts stands a long period of intense consultation among the leading minds of the Protestant and Orthodox churches—a consultation which has clarified issues, brought persons closer together, and prepared a solid spiritual and intellectual foundation for genuine advance at the meeting of the Assembly at Amsterdam. This process has come to be known as that of ecumenical study: a kind of international school, carried on by conferences and correspondence, in which persons from different nations and churches advance a conviction, send it out in an article for criticism, and rewrite the original on the basis of constructive comments.

The ecumenical study leading up to the Assembly of the World Council of Churches has involved exactly this process, over a period of two years. Three meetings of leading Christian thinkers, drawn from different countries and churches, have been convened. First and second drafts, and in some cases third drafts, of the different chapters have been prepared, and subjected to the most intense criticism. In America alone, 500 people have been asked to comment—laymen, clergy, educators, theologians, church executives alike, so that a representative cross section of opinion might be gained.

The whole is thus far more than an interchange among professional theologians. It represents a genuine meeting of minds not always in agreement, indeed sometime in the sharpest disagreement. It is part, and a fundamental part, of the painful process by which the disunity with which we are beset in the body of Christ is fashioned into a recognizable unity.

Moreover, the process has helped greatly to clarify issues, and in some cases to locate answers, on the great themes with which the Assembly will be dealing. The general subject of the meeting is "Man's Disorder and God's Design," and the theme of each volume is as follows: The Universal Church in God's Design, God's Design and the Church's Witness, The Church and the Disorder of Society, The Church and International Affairs.

ROBT. S. BILHEIMER.

THE SOURCE OF GREATNESS.

When I look back on the processes of history, when I survey the genesis of America, I see this written in every page: That the nations are renewed from the bottom, not from the top; that the genius that springs up from the ranks of unknown men is the genius which renews the growth and energy of the people. Everything I know about history, every bit of experience and observation that has contributed to my thought has confirmed me in the conviction that the real wisdom of human life is compounded out of the experience of ordinary men. The utility, the vitality, the fruitage of life does not come from the top to the bottom; it comes like the natural growth of a great tree, from the soil up through the trunk into the branches to the foliage and the fruit. The great struggling unknown masses of the men who are the base of everything, are the dynamic force that is lifting the levels of society. A nation is as great and only as great, as her rank and file.

GENERAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

Jimmy Darden is completing his second year as secretary of the Elon College General Alumni Association. During these two years thirteen alumni chapters in different sections of the country extending from Atlanta, Georgia, to New York City have been organized. Eleven meetings have been held during the present college year with a total attendance of nearly 500. The presidents of these chapters with five appointed compose the Executive Committee of the General Alumni Association.

Jimmy's efforts have not been confined to visiting communities and organizing alumni chapters. In addition, he has conducted a very successful campaign for funds for the new gymnasium. The gymnasium will probably cost nearly $200,000. We have in cash and subscriptions more than $70,000. Plans have been drawn and approved. It is the purpose of the Building Committee to be ready to receive bids by the annual meeting of the Association on May 22, at 11:00 in the morning.

It has been the writer's privilege to attend the majority of the meetings of local chapters during the spring. It is gratifying to note the increased interest in the Association and in the College on the part of the alumni. These organizations and your interest spell a new day for Elon College. Next to the Church itself the alumni are in a position to make a contribution to the total progress of the College surpassed by none. There are more than 10,000 young men and young women who have been enrolled at the College for college work. These are not all graduates but many of our former students who did not graduate are enthusiastic supporters of the College and are constantly making contributions to its progress. If every alumnus could be reached and interested in his Alma Mater, success of our building program and goals set for endowment would be assured. It remains to be seen what 10,000 men and women, consecrated and dedicated to a single purpose, may really accomplish. The main trouble with the Congregational Christian Church in the South and the alumni of Elon College is not that they have goals too high for their college but that their vision has been too narrow. We have hesitated too long to challenge our ability with a program that would really test our financial strength. We should be determined to put our total strength behind the present Expansion Program and not slacken our efforts until the last building is erected and our endowment exceeds $1,000,000. This is entirely within the realm of possibility and certainly is probable if the Church, the alumni, and friends will unitedly adopt the program and cooperatively work and contribute for its realization.

The fifty-eighth annual commencement of Elon College will be held May 22, 23, and 24. May 22 is Alumni Day. The General Alumni Association will meet. At this meeting reports will be received from committees and definite plans will be laid for the beginning of the erection of the new gymnasium, and the completion of the campaign to raise necessary funds for the same.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

These weekly notes concerning the interest of the Sunday schools and the churches of our Convention in Elon College and concerning the College's needs may become a little monotonous. We should bear in mind, however, that expenses are regular and continuous, that statements for unpaid bills not only become monotonous but embarrassing. Increased support given the College by the Church is most encouraging. The College looks upon the churches as its friends and is always happy for a gesture of confidence and a contribution for support. The offering is not large this week but it encourages us to feel that it shall be larger next week. Your contributions are most helpful and are greatly appreciated.

MISSIONS DEPUTATION REPORT.

By WILLIAM CLEMES.

American churches have "the opportunity of the century" to develop mass education techniques in Asia and the Near East, provided they "mobilize an effective and realistic radio and audio-visual aid program," a three-man deputation team of the Foreign Missions Conference, reported on their return, May 3.

Pointing out that two-thirds of the world's population is illiterate, the Rev. S. Franklin Mack, deputation head, and chairman of the World Radio Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference told a New York press conference that "missions and churches have a chance to blaze trails in mass education, comparable to their past performances in medicine and formal education."

The Rev. Everett C. Parker, Congregational minister and director of the Joint Religious Radio Committee, along with Niklaus Hagmann, radio engineer, comprised the other two members of the team.

Summarizing the findings of their 35,000-mile round-the-world flight to Japan, China, the Philippines, Siam, Singapore, India, and the Near East, Mr. Mack stated that "governments everywhere are alert to the need for a program of mass education, and are willing to accept it from any politically disinterested source. They know that mass education is the only way they can make their people literate in a hurry."

"If foreign missions can lead the way to the development of these methods, they will be welcomed with open arms by any Asiatic government," he said.

Warning that Russia is doing a "fine job" of mass education, Mr. Parker urged that "radio programs, and films be developed to appeal to illiterates."

"The reason we can't do any effective job of mass education is because all of our materials are slanted at people who can read and write," he said. "No one has yet figured out the best way to capture the illiterate mind, and focus it on its immediate problems."

Mr. Parker suggested that scholarships be made available in this country for this work, and that technical teams be sent abroad to carry on education in radio and audio-visual aids.

He praised the work being done by the Christian Broadcasting Company in Shanghai, a cooperative missionary enterprise, started before World War II. Mr. Parker described its programming as offering a well-rounded theme of music, entertainment, education, and religion. For future planning in China, Mr. Parker suggested that missions purchase radio time on established stations, rather than buying additional stations of their own. "Audiences are larger on established commercial stations, than on stations affiliated with a particular religious group," he explained.

As an over-all policy for religious broadcasting, Mr. Parker urged that "we get away from the preacher-reading-a-sermon type of program, to one designed to lift the entire level of civilization. This kind of program would take into account the entire life and interests of an individual. It would represent religious education in its broadest sense."

CONCERNING ANOTHER FINE PROJECT FOR MISSIONS.

Do you remember that Dr. Ralph Schraeder, who was with us at our spring rallies, told us of a "different" project for Foochow, China? So many of you have asked about it that I thought the best place to write you a letter with all the details was to put it in THE SUN!

Allen Thompson, director of music in Wenshan School and in Foochow College, writes of the great need for band and orchestra instruments. Most of their musical equipment was lost or destroyed during the war, but the desire for the best of good western music is still in the hearts of the Chinese students.

"If we can't provide them with instruments on which they express their love for good music, cheap influences, via the gramophone and radio, will lower their ideals," says Mr. Thompson.

If you have a violin, a flute, or a clarinet in your attic, basement, or parlor not being used, won't you give it to these eager students in Foochow, China? Here is a list of their needs:

1. Violins . . . in unlimited numbers . . . good quality . . . extra violin bows, strings and resin.
2. Violas . . . one or two.
3. Cellos . . . two or three.
4. Bass violin . . . one or two . . . no better foundation for resonant orchestra tone.
5. Flutes . . . two good metal ones made by C. G. Conn, Buescher, Selmer, Haines, or John Powell Companies . . . should have the Boehm fingering system.
6. Clarinets . . . one or two are greatly needed . . . also with Boehm system.
7. French Horn . . . two or three are needed.
8. Trumpets . . . two to add brilliance and sparkle to the orchestra.
9. Two tenor trombones.
10. A Piccolo in C.
11. Two Oboes in C.
12. One Sousaphone in B flat.
13. Two sets of tympani.

Can you, or your missionary society, or your Sunday school, or one of the classes, or the church, provide one or more of these? (Of course, new ones will also be accepted!)

Please send them to: Mr. Harvey Meeken, American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Mass. He will ship your gifts to the schools in Foochow, China.

THE STATUS OF WOMEN IN THE CHURCH.

Church women are puzzled by some of the job restrictions imposed on them by their churches, and would like to be judged on the basis of their "ability, experience, and education," rather than on their sex, Mrs. Samuel M. Cavert, of the study department of the World Council of Churches declared in an address before fifty church women including the elected heads of women's organizations of nineteen major Protestant denominations, and representatives and observers from seven foreign countries. Mrs. Cavert stated that "leading Protestant and Orthodox church women are asking that the goal of their full citizenship in the Church shall be explicitly recognized in all quarters, and be self-consciously adopted and striven toward."

Mrs. Cavert's report to the church women was based on a survey being conducted by the study department of the World Council of Churches on the topic, "The Life and Work of Women in the Church." The study will be presented in final form at the first Assembly of the World Council of Churches in Amsterdam, Holland, this summer, and will include a detailed analysis of women's relation to the church in fifty-eight countries.

Mrs. Cavert said the survey showed that "some progress has been made to elevate the status of women in the church," but that many throughout the world who "have knocked at the doors of their churches seeking vocation, have found those doors were not opened except in a rather niggardly way."

"The result," she continued, "has been in too many quarters a caricature of the kind of women who 'does church work' and the kind of work which she is pictured as doing. It is these results which devoted and self-conscious church women are trying to overcome."

Turning to reports from specific countries, Mrs. Cavert said that in Denmark where a "considerable number" of trained women theologians who only lack ordination to accept pastorates, only one of Denmark's nine Bishops have "unequivocally stated his willingness to ordain a woman."

While not as rigidly opposed to women clergy as Denmark, churches in other European countries were pictured by Mrs. Cavert as practicing "various forms" of discrimination against women clergy. She quoted from a Swiss report which stated that "whenever a new post is created for a woman theologian or one is filled, the old doubts and objections are raised."

Mrs. Cavert emphasized, however, that women were not seeking to launch a "suffragette movement" for the ordination of women clergy, but were simply "trying to find the best means of serving the Church in whatever capacity their abilities and skills would merit."

While noting the growth in the number of women engaged in professional and volunteer church work, Mrs. Cavert's report showed that church workers, "especially those in local church work are apt to feel their status in the Church is low."

One report submitted by an American Protestant denomination expressed the view that "everything is expected of a pastor's woman assistant, from doing an incompetent janitor's job to pinch-hitting for those who fall by the way," Mrs. Cavert said.

Mrs. Cavert said that reports from Oriental countries stressed the "increasing difficulty" of keeping church women workers. Quoting from the Egyptian report Mrs. Cavert said: "It is getting harder all the time to secure professional church workers because of competition with government, armies, and business. A drastic change in salaries and pension scales is needed."

WOMEN AND PEACE.

A few days ago a group of Christian women were summoned to Washington to learn of the emergency to act now to avoid another war. The women of the Church have yet another chance to make their voices heard in this emergency to help offset war hysteria. There isn't a mother whose son or daughter went into the Service, nor a widow whose husband made the supreme sacrifice, nor a woman with whom you may talk, but feels that wars can be averted through the exercise of love and brotherhood.

The Christian women throughout our land are being urged to mobilize immediately for Peace. The United (Continued on page 14.)

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Walt felt badly. His insides were whirling around. Walt couldn't tell mother what the trouble was because he wasn't quite certain, but that turning-over feeling was there.

"Walt," said mother, "did you eat green plums?"

"No, Mummy, no, I didn't."

Mother looked very unhappy for she wanted to help Walt but he wasn't helping a bit. She stood by his bed and held his hand. Walt held her hand a little tighter and began to feel a little better.

After awhile mother laid his hand down gently, pulled the covers around him and started away. As soon as she did, the awful feeling in Walt's middle began churning again.

"O, Mummy," he cried. The tears began to flow. Mother came back. This time she looked very stern as she said, "Walt, I can't help you unless you tell me what troubles you. You have told me that you didn't eat anything to upset you. Did someone hurt your feelings?"

All the time Walt knew what the matter was. He hated to tell mother that he was afraid because he liked to think of being a "big boy." Walt didn't know that all boys and girls have fears and bad dreams, especially when one is only five. But he felt that he couldn't stand it another minute so he burst out saying, "Mummy, Mummy, I am afraid. I don't like the dark. I don't like scary things in the corners."

Mother nodded her head and looked very relieved. She took Walt out of the bed and held him on her lap. Quietly she began to talk to him. She told him about God's book, the Bible. She said, "The very first words tell us that God created the heaven and the earth. Next, we are told about God making light to be different from the dark. Then there was day and night. In the day we work and play, and in the night we rest and play sometime."

"But I still don't like the dark. Mike said something would come and gobble me up."

Mother laughed and said, "Your being afraid will 'gobble you up' for it will make you sicker and sicker. The night is the daytime shutting its eyes and resting some. Suppose you were always in bright, bright light and couldn't even blink your eyes. That would be uncomfortable."

Walt's mother talked next about Mike. "Mike wanted to tease you and perhaps he knew you were already a little bit afraid. Mike isn't afraid of the dark or he wouldn't have talked about it. He is older than you, remember."

Putting him down on the floor she walked with him to the raised window and lifted him up to see the dark night. It wasn't really dark. Hundreds and thousands of stars shone near and far. Mother reminded the little boy that sometimes the moon shines and that God has made all of the heavens and the earth.

"Mother, I feel better. . . . What happens when you can't see the stars?" Walt asked. "Well, that is when the clouds come to cover them." "Like a blanket?" "Like a blanket." Walt didn't stop being afraid all at once but he felt better and better. Sometimes when he went to bed he would say, "Sleep well, little stars under your cloud blankets."

FEAR AND ITS EFFECT UPON YOUNG CHILDREN.

By JANETTE STEVENSON MURRAY.
(American Mother for 1947.)

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I was in one of our parks last summer when my attention was attracted to a well-dressed woman with her two little boys. One was about three years old, and he kept running away. Finally, in exasperation his mother shook him, saying, "If you don't stay beside me I'll throw you into the bear's pit and the bear'll eat you up."

Another distraught mother, when in a big hotel, silenced her obstreperous son with, "Now, you make less noise or I'll go away and leave you here alone."

I was in a store one day when a woman, whom I knew to have had a good general education, came in with her three-year-old daughter. Soon the child began handling things on the counter. "Don't do that!" exclaimed the mother, "or the man will put you in the cellar."

Threats about the bogey man have, we hope and believe, gone out of fashion. These other threats, however, are still used, causing positive terror when the child first hears them; and the shock that ensues is never overcome—except in cases of a radical change in the mental outlook—even though he soon learns that his parents have no intention of doing as they say.

A child should never be punished by being shut in a closet or a dark room, never forced to do anything he greatly fears. As much as possible, fear should be kept out of the little child's thought. If he is afraid to go up to bed alone, attention should not be called to the fact, but someone should go with him through the dark hall and shadowy stairway, to encourage, befriend him, and make him happy, so that he will forget about his fears.

The use of fear in disciplining should be strenuously avoided. A frightened child is cramped and handicapped by lack of confidence, by chronic anxiety, and morbid dread. He has little desire to use his powers or to assert his ability.

Here is a notable instance. From the time Martha was three months old, she had been so severely punished by her mother that she had grown into a thin, nervous, secretive, fear-haunted child. She had always been restrained—never allowed to talk freely or to give vent to her feelings—so upon entering school she would not open her mouth. She knew how to read, but she would not read aloud. The teachers knew she could read, because they noted her interest in the printed page when she thought herself unobserved.

An aunt and a neighbor went to call on her teacher, who upon hearing the story of Martha's life, became especially interested in this pupil. Since then, persistent kindness and encouragement at school have helped the child to overcome some of her fear. She now reads aloud in class, and the teacher is planning to have her read before a visitor as soon as she is quite willing.

Another timid child became so frightened when spoken to by a rather stern teacher that he could not read. His mother went to see the teacher and told her that the boy was affected in somewhat the same way by his father's austere manner and gruff voice. The mother said, "Tom's throat fills up and he can't read. Try a little gentleness and praise; he will then get rid of his fear and be able to read." The teacher tried this. It worked out just as Tom's mother had said it would.

If we inspire children with a feeling of confidence, this will help them to develop naturally and to take the first steps towards the habitual desire to do the right things. Fear paralyzes; confidence bestows that freedom which is the foundation of success.

Eastern Virginia young people, who are planning to go to Camp Hanes this summer will be glad to know that we've been able to charter a bus to take about thirty-five young people from Suffolk (the best central starting point we know) and right to the Registration Desk at Camp Hanes for $8.00 per round trip! (Do you know how much the regular bus fare is, round trip? About $16.00!) Melvin Bunch, Box 537, Route No. 2, Suffolk, Virginia, will be the person to receive your bus fare. When you've sent it to him, you will be sure of your place on the bus. We're going to have to set a dead-line for the payment of your bus fare: July 31. After that time, we're sorry, but we shall have to let someone else have your place (if you have signed up for a seat but have not paid for it). Also, if you let Melvin Bunch know before July 31 that you have found out you can't go to camp, he will refund your money to you. We'll be glad to see all the Eastern Virginia young people come rolling in to Camp Hanes in August!

The Young Adults of the Southern Convention have been asking, "Why can't we have a summer camp for ourselves?" We've been wanting to give you an answer to that question—and we think we have it. The young adults of the Evangelical and Reformed Church of this area have been asking the same thing—and so we're answering both at the same time. The Evangelical and Reformed Church has a lovely camp site in the mountains of North Carolina which they've offered to share with us, August 8-15. We'll have the best of their leaders and of ours—for the first cooperative Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed summer camp in this area!

Your ministers, your adult counselors, and your presidents will be receiving blanks, letters, and further information about the summer camps and conferences. Plan now to attend one of the camps in your area, won't you?

BETTY CHICOINE,
Elon College, N. C.

AN OPEN LETTER.

DEAR BETTY:

I'm very sorry that I'm such a poor hand at writing and sorry that I haven't answered your letters. My young people and my other duties keep me so very busy that I never get time to sit down and write anything. How are things progressing toward camp? I know you are planning a great time for camp this year.

The young people's group I have in Sunday school has grown by leaps and bounds. Mr. James Hailey comes with Dr. Reynolds and teaches the Men's Bible Class. They did have the larger class, but I had twenty-five today and twenty-four last Sunday.

We have been working for the past week cleaning, painting, and fixing up our Hut where the class meets. The boys and girls have done wonderful things. We had supper in the Hut one night and worked until after eight o'clock.

This morning twenty-three members of my class went to Sunrise Service at Linwood Cemetery and came back to the Hut and had breakfast together.

We only put one coat of paint on the Hut last week, scrubbed the floors and washed windows. They hope to work on the rest soon.

I understand some of the young people from the college are coming down next Sunday night to hold a Service for us. Are you coming? Please do. I'd love to have you meet my young people and talk with us.

You know, it won't be long until Bible School time. I hope Dr. and Mrs. Reynolds will be able to help about that. I'm sure they will. They're really swell.

Another very important thing about our affairs this week. We had a very beautiful and inspiring Candlelight Service on Maundy Thursday and Billy Andrews, Fayne Welch, and Betty Adams, of my group, joined the church. We had a large basket of spirea on the center of the choir rail and two smaller ones on either side. A white satin cross was in the center of the stage with a spotlight thrown on it. There were two large seven-candle candelabra, one on each side of the cross and two large white vases of white carnations and gladiolus on pedestals on either side and two candles in each window. It was really beautiful and such a nice program.

I'm not sure I can attend the Rally this time. I have no car and have a difficult time going out where no bus runs. I certainly will be thinking of everyone there and hope it will be one of the best yet.

We are planning another bazaar soon. The ladies held the second cake sale (the first one on Wednesday before Thanksgiving and the last Friday before Easter). We made $75.00 in November, but I haven't heard how the last one came out.

I've been doing quite a bit of sewing lately. I made twenty-five blouses the past four weeks. I made Becky two and myself two, and everyone who saw those wanted me to make them one. Even Mrs. Reynolds has one of my specials.

Well, I have to plan for a class meeting this coming week, so I will close for now. Hope to see you soon.

THE TEMPLE IN THE NATION'S LIFE.

By REV. W. L. WOOD.

LESSON VIII—MAY 23, 1948.

MEMORY SELECTION: How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Jehovah of hosts!

LESSON TEXT: Ezra 3:10-13; 5:6-7; Psalm 84:1; Ezekiel 11:16; 37:26-28; 44:9-31; Zechariah 6:9-15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 96:1-9.

The Temple Through the Ages.

The world has come a long way since Israel laid the foundations of the first known temple dedicated to the worship of Jehovah. Since that memorable date (1012 BC) the world has survived many upheavals, and with the ushering in of each new era many traditions, laws and institutions were abandoned or destroyed; many kings and nations had their day; many new philosophies, systems and sects sprang up to attract the unvarying and gullible and they exerted immeasurable influence over their masses of converts, but through it all, this rising and falling, this change and decay, the temple of the living God has remained firm on its spiritual foundations; it has never abated its claims; it was never obscured by the upheavals of time. It is today as it was in the beginning, the articulate voice of religion.

The First Temple.

It was becoming that the Israelites should exchange their movable tabernacle for a temple, a fixed place of worship and a permanent resting place for the ark of the covenant. The ark was the material symbol of Divine Presence. Thus, to the Israelites the temple was the symbol of God's loving care of his chosen people. Their devotion to the temple is one of the most inspiring stories ever told; a devotion bordering on fanaticism but so deep and loyal that when the temple was destroyed the very heart of the nation stopped beating. Such was the esteem with which the Israelite regarded his temple.

Our Temple.

"We worship in the temple of the living Christ," so we say. Looking out over our broad land we can see these temples everywhere. Every city, village and hamlet has its house of worship. The temples of God are everywhere. What would the nation be were it not for these innumerable houses of worship? What would you be if you had never come under the influence of the church? In U. S. we cannot disregard the element of religion as we tell the story of its history. In the early settlements the house of worship was deemed as essential as the dwelling house. These founders of our country must have inherited some of their religious zeal from the early Israelites. Ours is truly a land of privilege—we need not travel far to find the house of God.

The Influence of the Temple on Our National Life.

The influence of the temple on our national life is immeasurable. The religious motive was supreme in the minds of America's best colonists. Our first settlers came as Christians and planted religious principals as the richest interest and for posterity. Now, destroy the temple and all it stands for in our land; counteract the influences which emanate from the sanctuary, bring to naught its influence on music, art and literature, and what have you? What did the Israelites have left when the temple was destroyed? True they still had God but the loss of the temple was demoralizing to the nation. Perhaps it would be well for us to take a lesson from this people who had lost their temple. Invading armies had crossed their borders, pillaged their homes, razed the walls of their beloved city, ravaged and destroyed the house of God. No invading army has set its foot on our soil since 1812; our lands, our villages and cities have not been pillaged and our temples have remained unmolested. Are we appreciative?

The Purpose of the Temple.

The first temple was not erected specifically for the purpose of worship. It was created primarily as a dwelling place for Jehovah. Ever since that time it has been the gathering place of God's people, a place set aside where the devout meet to pray, to praise God in song and testimony, to hear the scriptures read and the eternal truths of the scriptures expounded. What purpose does the temple serve in your life?

The devotion of the people deepened as they participated more and more in the service of worship. So will our devotion deepen as we participate in the service of worship. Participation will lead to appreciation. This leads us to the topic for today, "Our Need of Public Worship." Is public worship a necessity to a Christian? Can one not be just as good without attending church? Stand on the street corner and ask these questions to the people as they pass, but regardless of the answers we may receive, we know that with but few exceptions the people who maintain the highest Christian standards are the people who worship regularly in the temple.

The church has its shortcomings. It has faced foes from without and from within but it has survived while other institutions have died and it has always been persistent in preaching its gospel of love and righteousness and its influence on the moral and spiritual status of the nation is immeasurable.

SUN'S PULPIT.

Christ was given a position above all else, a name above every name. The preeminence of Christ in God's universe was established and Paul could declare that He is Lord, before Him every creature should bow, and the whole universe declare, "Crown Him, Lord of All."

At the same time, this exaltation of Christ was proclaimed as the establishment of the certain victory of Christ. It is God's good pleasure to give Him the victory! The early Church saw this certainty foretold in the Psalmist's words: "Jehovah said to my Lord, sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." These words entered into the abiding thought of Christians. With the exaltation of Jesus Christ to preeminence, God proclaimed the triumph of righteousness, and the certain establishment of the Kingdom!

These are reflections upon the ascension and exaltation of Jesus Christ. Why are they for the most part neglected in the faith and preaching of the church in our generation? Oh, to be sure, the modern church proclaims that conditions of space, time, or the physical body can not limit Jesus Christ. The modern church is glad to know that all men everywhere and in every time, can know and receive Christ. And when Pentecost comes around, the modern church does have this much to say about the truths proclaimed in the ascension story! But, what is the church in this generation saying about the other ascension and exaltation truths?

For instance, what did the church of just a few years past say about the ascension of Christ charting the way to that transformation of human life into a new mode of being, immune from death, and unrestricted by the conditions of earthly life? You and I know from experience that sermons on heaven are more and more rare. We know from experience that the funeral service is about the only occasion for such a message. The message of the modern church concerning the heavenly hope is very meagre!

Or, what did the church of the recent past say about Jesus Christ as Lord of all time and place, as Him toward which all creation moves, as the Name above every name? Well, in your generation you've heard much about a synthesis of all the world's religions. You and I have witnessed a day in which medical missions, agricultural missions, and social-service missions have received great impetus. But, the evangelistic missions have been looked upon with doubt, as if we were not certain that Jesus' Name was above all other names, and that Christ was Lord of all. We have lived through days so "liberal" that doubts and arguments followed upon the Madras proclamation that Jesus Christ is the only answer to the world's need. There are many in our generation who call themselves Christian but were not certain that God had given Jesus a Name above every name—for all!

Yet, many who were certain that Christ was Lord of all people, were not certain that He was Lord over all of life! This helped bring about the secularization of life. For, these churchmen knew Him as Lord of the religious life, but doubted that His Lordship could be acknowledged in the world of science, the world of business, or the world of social relations. Whenever any one would speak up for the Lordship of Christ over these areas of life, the cry would go up: "Stick to the Gospel!" Just as if the proclamation of Christ's Lordship were not part of the Gospel. Just as if God had never exalted Christ to be preeminent in all things. Just as if we were not living in the times when God Himself is seeking to put all enemies of Christ beneath Him. Just as if in the exaltation of Christ God had not proclaimed that every thought and word and deed should be brought into subjection to Him. Truly, then, the conservatives, and the liberals, have been feeding us upon a Christianity which has not taken seriously the truth of the exaltation of Jesus Christ.

We don't take the exaltation of Christ seriously when the possibility of atomic-bomb-destruction causes us to shake and tremble! When the preacher proclaims that God will not be forever frustrated, not even by the atomic destruction that will come upon us; that He will yet call unto His Name a people, repentant and willing to live after His righteous ways; that Christ's Victory shall yet be realized and His Kingdom shall come." Then the hearers say, "that isn't much to gain courage from!" Not much? Just God's own word for it when He exalted Jesus Christ above all and promised to put all enemies beneath His feet! Not much? Just the word of God in the Christ He exalted. Not much? The certainty of this victory, and the confident triumph of the Kingdom, gave hope to the early Church and was an essential in its life. This hope of the coming of His Kingdom and this confidence in the victory of righteousness, called forth from the early Christians a good stewardship toward God for the concerns and labors of their day-to-day existence. Not much? It was sufficient for them. They could live in hope: a hope that Paul called "saving!"

Why this contrast between the vibrance which the early Church gained from the message of the exalted Christ, and the meaninglessness with which that message falls upon our ears? Why this contrast in belief? What is back of this deficiency in our modern interpretation of the Christian faith?

I think that the answer can be reduced to this: Whereas the early Christians founded their belief on the witness of the apostles to Jesus Christ, the people of our times have shifted their foundations to "experience." That which we experience, is the basis of authority in matters of belief! We will have little to do with that in the Bible which can not be fitted into the pattern of our experience. And this is most evident right at the point of the exaltation of Jesus Christ. That's something we can not experience. A man can't experience the Lordship of Christ over the whole universe. We can't even experience the Lordship of Christ over all men. You and I can't experience the heavenly existence into which Christ ascended. We can't experience an existence in that mode of being into which Christ transformed at His ascension. We can not experience that final victory of Jesus Christ. The establishment of His Kingdom is not ours to experience. So, because ours is an age which has interpreted Christianity according to experience alone, these things have more and more fallen by the wayside as neglected articles of faith.

The Christian faith of the New Testament was of a different nature. Of course the Christian proclamation was to experience, but, it was also to faith and hope. Faith was even understood to be that which gave substance to those things hoped for. It was just such a faith that could appreciate the proclamation of the exaltation of Jesus Christ. Faith which is the substance of things hoped for, receives the proclamation of the exaltation of Jesus Christ with joy. For, if Christ be gone into heaven, then the hope of heaven is not in vain and life has a goal. If Christ be exalted above all, then trusting submission of all to Him is not foolish. It is the highest wisdom. If Christ be exalted above all things in the universe, then it is not unwise to bring every thought and word and deed into submission to Him. Rather, it is a reasonable service. And, if Christ be victor over all His enemies, it is not for us to be fearful or anxious about the future, or anxious concerning the fortunes of His Kingdom. Rather, it is ours to be confident, to have courage buoyed up by hope: the hope of sharing in that certain victory, the hope of realizing it in our lives, here, and in heaven. To God's Christ the victory already belongs. It is His good pleasure to give it to those who are His. There is cause for hope. And, when that proclamation is received in faith, that hope gains substance—"saving" substance.

So, we should understand that experience can't tell us all we need to know and believe. The Christian's "credo" can not be based on experience only. Faith and hope are still essentials. Faith and hope are still attitudes to be cultivated and prayed for. Remember that when you are next tempted to follow in the way of your generation and neglect those high truths proclaimed by the Bible: the truths that are bound up with the exaltation of Jesus Christ. With the exaltation of Jesus Christ, our highest and dearest hopes were given firm foundation! Take care, then, that in faith you receive the blessed proclamation "He ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty!"

Communist control of this country would mean the putting to death of probably millions of our people and the enslavement of tens of millions more. It must not happen.

The Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

The good women are always doing something nice for the Christian Orphanage. They never fail me when there is a need to be met and they are called upon to supply it.

Sometime before Easter we had ran short on dresses for the girls. We asked the good women of our churches to supply this need, and we were delighted with the large number of beautiful dresses sent in to supply the need. All the girls had a beautiful dress to wear on Easter Sunday.

Then we asked the good women to send us laying hens to go in our poultry house, which we had built this Spring to take care of 200 hens. We now have 150 hens in it.

Then on May 6 the District Home Club delegates held their meeting in Alamance County near here, and they served a bountiful lunch at the noon hour. They had lots of food left over and then the question came up as to what they could do with it. One good lady suggested that they bring it to the children at the Christian Orphanage. Several of the good women brought it to the Orphanage packed nicely in boxes, and what a treat it was—sandwiches of different kinds, fried chicken, cakes and pies, pickles, and many other things too numerous to mention. All the children had an excellent dinner that night. We were very grateful indeed for such kindness shown us.

All the children had a special invitation to attend the horse show, which is held in sight of the Orphanage at the Alamance County Saddle Club. Our good friend, Mr. O. F. Smith, of Norfolk, Va., who was attending the show, sent his big van over and loaded all the children in it, and carried them over, and after the show, brought them back. To see that nothing happened, he was in the van with them. He then made it possible for fifteen of the larger girls and boys to attend that night to see him ride his horse. All the children were enthusiastic for him to win the grand prize of a thousand dollars, which was offered. When it was announced that he had won, all of them shouted gleefully and were just as happy as Mr. Smith could have been. There was a large eating stand on the grounds, and after the show was over, the man who had charge of it found that he had a lot of fresh sandwiches left on his hands. They were nicely wrapped in celophane paper and he packed them in a box and brought them to the Orphanage for the children here. These gifts are highly appreciated.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

Council of Church Women is earnestly beseeching the denominational women's groups to cooperate at once by signing a Commitment card which states: "I will pray more and work harder for my church and the Church throughout the world. I will give courageous, intelligent, and prayerful support to the United Nations and Christian movements for World Order. I will seek to establish civil rights and brotherhood in my own community. I will pray that women of all countries may soon join in this crusade."

The goal is for every Christian woman to rededicate her life to Christ and to pledge to join with other women in a great crusade for Peace. It is hoped that one million signed Commitment cards will be ready by June 15 to present to the President and the State Department, also to our representatives in the United Nations by June 26, the anniversary of the signing of the Charter of the United Nations.

The presidents of all the women's groups of our denomination are urged to act quickly in ordering Commitment cards from the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y. The price is one half of a cent each.

May we not unite with the Christian women all over our land to help create public opinion that will turn the tide to peace? This such a little thing to ask for so great a cause—please act now!

MISSIONARY ATTENDS VIRGINIA WOMEN'S SPRING RALLY.

Miss Louise G. Bookwalter, missionary to Ceylon, was the guest speaker at the Valley Women's Spring Rallies which were recently held.

With an understanding of the Orient based upon years lived among its people, Miss Bookwalter, who is the principal of the Uduvil Girl's School, Uduvil, Ceylon, has a revealing story to tell as she speaks.

Not only has Miss Bookwalter been principal of Uduvil Girls' School, which includes both Christian and Hindu pupils, with grades from kindergarten to high school, but she has been supervisor of the Uduppidi Girls' Boarding School which teaches home arts with instruction in cooking, basketry, poultry raising, shop keeping and building; and trains the pupils to learn by doing.

Deeply interested in education in general, Miss Bookwalter was for a time on the Board of Education of the Government of Ceylon.

The place Miss Bookwalter holds in the hearts of the Ceylonese was shown when upon returning from her last furlough she was deluged with welcome meetings, greetings, ceremonies, garlands of flowers, rose water, and sandalwood.

Miss Bookwalter, who is under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, is a graduate of Smith College and Otterbein University. In 1919 she received her M. A. from Columbia.

KAGEY.

J. S. Kagey, age eighty-two, of Norfolk, Va., died December 1, 1947. Funeral services were conducted in Norfolk and burial was in Rockingham County, Va. He was a deacon in the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va. He is survived by a son, P. S. Kagey and a daughter, Miss Lula M. Kagey, both of Norfolk, Va.

He was a subscriber to The Christian Sun for over fifty years.

LARRICK.

David Lee Larrick was born in Hampshire County, W. Va., November 14, 1868, and died at the Maplewood Nursing Home in Winchester, where he had been a patient for several months, April 19 1948.

Early in life he united with the Timber Ridge Christian Church and for many years was a loyal and faithful member of that church. Twenty-five years ago he transferred his membership to the Winchester Church remaining a loyal member until death. He was instrumental in helping to build the Winchester Church. He was married to Miss Retta Oates who, with their four children, survive. Two daughters, Mrs. Nellie B. Cline of Petersburg, W. Va., and Mrs. Grace Dinkle, Romney, W. Va., and two sons, Roy A. and Albert L. Larrick of Winchester. The deceased was the last surviving member of a family of thirteen children.

Funeral services were conducted at the Jones Funeral Home by the pastor and the Rev. Roy D. Coulter, pastor of the Timber Ridge Church, April 21. Burial was in the family lot in Mount Hebron Cemetery.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

BLAND.

As quietly as she lived, on March 9, 1948, Mrs. J. B. Bland slipped away into eternity. She was a faithful member of the Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church, and was always present at our meetings as long as health permitted.

In recognition of her consecrated life, we offer the following resolutions of respect:

1. That the members of the Missionary Society wish to express our deep sense of loss and our gratitude for a beautiful life lived in our midst.

2. That we realize God doeth all things well. While we mourn the loss of one who has meant much to us, and others as well, we bow in humble submission to his divine will.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family who ministered to her so faithfully during her illness and commend them to our Heavenly Father for comfort and consolation in their sorrow.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, one sent to the family, and a copy be entered on the records of our Society.

Mrs. E. W. BEALE,
Mrs. LIZZIE B. TURNER,
Committee.

HOLLAND.

Softly and silently, sorrow and bereavement entered our community on the afternoon of February 17, 1948, at 2:00 o'clock when Mrs. Mina Pearce Holland, co-worker and friend, bade good-bye to her loved ones, and quietly passed from earth into the Great Beyond.

Therefore in view of the noble and beautiful characteristics of our beloved member and faithful worker, of her loving and helpful nature, her deep and abiding interest in the welfare of her church and community, we, themembers of the Ladies' Aid Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church, wish to express our grateful appreciation of her tireless efforts in behalf of the Kingdom of God and to emphasize our deep affection for her by adopting the following resolutions:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.

2. That while we shall miss her in the sweet fellowship of our work together, we will always cherish the memory of her friendship and faithful service.

3. That we extend to the grief stricken family our deepest sympathy in this sad and lonely hour, commending them to the great comforter who said, "Let not your heart be troubled."

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication and a copy be placed upon the minutes of the society.

Mrs. R. E. BRITTLE,
Mrs. WILLIE KNIGHT,

CASH.

On March 23, 1948, James Lee Cash, seventy-two, religious leader and businessman of Durham, passed away. Mr. Cash joined the Christian Church Sunday School on April 1, 1900, and attended Sunday school continuously every Sunday except three, when the class held its meeting at his bedside. Several years later he joined the present Congregational Christian Church. For twenty-seven years Mr. Cash served as treasurer of the Durham Congregational Christian Church and was a deacon for thirty-five years. On the Sunday prior to his death Mr. Cash was presented a medal for his continuous attendance at Sunday school for forty-eight years.

Mr. Cash was not only a faithful worker in the church but was active in the community. He regularly visited all sick members of the church; went weekly to the Durham Prison Camp and to the Durham County Home for the Aged. He received great joy and happiness from these visits and services.

Mr. Cash is sorely missed, but his influence and spirit of serving will live.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Durham Congregational Christian Church has lost an unusual, valuable, and devoted member.

2. That we keep in lasting remembrance the high Christian standards and ideals of service, kindness, unselfishness, and joyfulness which were in his daily living.

3. That we strive to emulate his exceptional example of Christian living.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his widow, a copy placed in the permanent record of the Durham Congregational Christian Church, and that a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

While pastor at Holland, Virginia, he was chairman of the Committee which inaugurated Week-Day Religious Education in Nansmond County. At Torrington, Connecticut, he was President of the local Council of Churches and, along with it, a member of the Youth Committee of the Connecticut Council of Churches. At Detroit he served as a member of the Board of Directors of the Church Federation. Since coming to his present position, he has assisted in the organization of a Council of Churches which includes the city of Akron and Summit County. Virginia Week-Day Schools will Continue

A General Statement by Minor C. Miller, Director
Department of Christian Education, Virginia Council of Churches

In several hundred communities throughout Virginia, groups of parents and church workers are making plans to continue and enlarge their program of week-day religious education. The general interest in the expansion and improvement of this work was never greater than at the present time.

The Supreme Court of the United States expressed its judgment on the particular plan of week-day religious education at Champaign, Illinois. It did not express a judgment upon systems of week-day religious education which are basically different from the system which was operated at Champaign.

In the separate opinion of Mr. Justice Frankfurter, with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Jackson, Mr. Justice Rutledge and Mr. Justice Burton, it is stated:

Of course, "released time" as a generalized conception, undefined by differentiating particularities, is not an issue for Constitutional adjudication. Local programs differ from each other in many and crucial aspects. . . .

At this point, a footnote on page fourteen of the official document, suggests ways in which programs differ:

Respects in which programs differ include, for example, the amount of supervision by the public school of attendance and performance in the religious class, of the course of study, of the selection of teachers; methods of enrollment and dismissal from the secular classes; the amount of school time devoted to operation of the program; the extent to which school property and administrative machinery are involved; the effect on the public school program of the introduction of "released time;" the proportion of students who seek to be excused; the effect of the program on non-participants; the amount and nature of the publicity for the program in the public schools.

The Virginia program is basically different from the program at Champaign. Among the points of difference are the following:

1. The Virginia system is non-sectarian. In the words of Mr. Justice Frankfurter, "it emphasizes democracy, unity and spiritual values not anchored in a particular creed."
2. The Virginia plan does not suggest or require that religious education teachers be approved by the public school authorities.
3. Public school officials do not supervise religious education teachers in Virginia.
4. Virginia religious education teachers do not report on attendance and absences to the public school authorities.
5. Virginia teachers are certified by the Virginia Council of Churches.
6. Reports to parents are made on a special report card and not on the public school report card.

The office of the Virginia Attorney General has expressed the opinion that "a released time plan divorced from the type of school supervision criticized in the Champaign case" would not be illegal. His statement is as follows:

. . . The mere use of public school buildings during regular school hours for non-sectarian, non-compulsory religious instruction, under a released time plan divorced from the type of school supervision criticized in the Champaign case, would not be forbidden by the McCollum decision, in my opinion.

In an effort to further divorce local programs from the Champaign plan, many Virginia communities will adopt the released time plans which have been followed in New York, Massachusetts, and many other states, and transfer classes to churches or non-public buildings. In view of the fact that the Virginia system has always been divorced from the type of school supervision criticized in the Champaign case, certain communities will continue to use the public school buildings. From one end of Virginia to the other, local councils of churches are making detailed plans for the school session, 1948-49.

The next three years he spent at Princeton, graduating with the Th. B. degree in 1923. Following seminary he served five years as pastor of the First Christian Church, Norfolk; five years at First Church, Dayton, Ohio, and is serving his fifteenth year in Suffolk. THE SAINTS EXCELLING.

A Sermon

By REV. JAMES R. CLINTON.

The word "saint" is one of the many great words in the language that goes wrong. This is a great New Testament word that needs re-minting and resoration to its original meaning, and put into daily circulation again!

The "Saint" is difficult to define and describe. The modern psychologist, of course, has no difficulty.

He takes the saints to pieces
And labels all the parts
And tabulates the secrets
Of loyal loving hearts
He probes the selfless passion
And shows exactly why
The martyr goes out singing
To suffer and to die.

When we talk about saints in these days, we either think of our Holy dead and sing, "for all the saints who from their labor rest," or we picture some very pious and unattractive person who is never known to smile, or we think of one who impresses us by harmlessness and lack of interest in the vital things of life.

Now all these people may, or may not be "saints" but they do not represent all for which this glorious New Testament word stands. The truth is, there is something in a saint which cannot be analyzed or catalogued. There is no anatomy of Glory!

In the great days of apostolic life the saints were the simple, sincere and forceful disciples and lovers of Jesus. They were the very salt of society, preserving it from corruption and keeping it sweet, wholesome and good. No other word in the English language so needs and waits, for redemption to its initial meaning—its eternal meaning.

The following do not suggest all, but simply the least that is required or present in the genuine saint. There are ten Commandments, seven Beatitudes and three other Graces. What more doth the Lord require?

The Saints are the Lord's People.

They are ordinary people, limited, apt to stumble, fallible, foolish—nothing (Cor. 1:28), but they are dedicated to Christ, sealed with His name, saved by His Grace, kept in His Power, identified with Him in purpose and available at all times and used by Him in the work of world-redemption.

The Saints are Not of This World.

The first mark of a saint either in the first or twentieth century is separation from the evil that is in the world. To put it quite plainly, there are some things the saint cannot do, places he cannot go and company he cannot keep. The saint is distinctive in all his ways, intelligently holy in heart and life. He is known as a citizen of heaven and his heavenly communion distinguishes him.

Now this separation from the world is not that of any superiority over his fellows, nor of social exclusiveness. No indeed! He brings the heavenly type into the earthly commonplace. I have seen the summer flower, white and blue and gold creep down the roughest railroad cuttings or slopes until they kissed the iron rails and turned the track into a path of beauty. So it is with the saints. "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us" in the daily round or the common task.

The Saints Serve the Present Age.

They are "called to be saints" in Ephesus and Philippi, in Russia and America, in Palestine and Peru, in your small corner and mine . . . mingling with the life of the man—the temptations, the sorrows and corruptions of the world. There are some people so heavenly minded that they are no earthly good! They are impractical.

It is not in retreats and convent cells, ministers' parsonages and holiness conventions—but in the streets, the markets, the governments of the

Our Principles.

McGUFFEY ANNIVERSARY.

Have you ever heard of the Rev. William Holmes McGuffey? Children of the last generation were almost brought up on McGuffey's Readers. This noted author-clergyman died 75 years ago this month in Charlottesville. He had occupied the chair of moral philosophy in the University of Virginia for 28 years. He has been described as "one of the fountain-heads of our folk ways . . . whose readers were absorbed by generations of American children who, in turn, bequeathed us a common stock of stories, legends, allusions, poems and moral precepts." Virginia and the nation have ample reason to be proud of this Presbyterian preacher who taught millions of children to read, reason and resolve.

CHURCH UNION—WHY NOT NOW?

Dr. John Scotford's new book, reviewed elsewhere in this issue, is a frank discussion and lively presentation of the current trends toward a united Protestantism. It is the essence of timeliness, for no ecclesiastical problem takes precedence today over that of church union. The author's thesis is that "there are evils in our present denominational system which the exercise of denominational cooperation will not cure, and there are spiritual gains to be achieved through organic union which can be had in no other way."

This cursory analysis of contemporary Protestantism, 124 pages, will attract many lay as well as ministerial readers. Although it may incur the charge of oversimplification, nevertheless this handbook on church union will serve a hitherto unmet need for all who want to know the latest developments in this field and the techniques by which union is being realized.

HOPE FOR THE MENTALLY DEFICIENT.

Greater concern for the care and education of mentally deficient persons is being urged by the Federal Council of Churches, in a statement released by its executive committee. The statement says, in part:

"Believing that Christian education, appropriately and expertly carried out is as much a right of these persons as of others with greater capacity of intellect, we commend jointly to the churches and to experts on deficiency the continued study and exploration of the best means that can be found to bring the resources of religious faith to mentally deficient persons."

The statement also noted the need for more and better institutional facilities to care for the mentally deficient, and stated that at least three or four times the present one hundred thousand persons now in such institutions could profit from special care. The church organization commended the holding of the first International Congress on Mental Deficiency which is being held in Boston this week, and expressed gratitude that the place of religion in the care and welfare of the mentally deficient is to be given consideration at the conference. May God's richest blessings be upon this humanitarian effort.

METHODIST QUADRENNIAL CONFERENCE.

"For Christ and His Church" will be the theme of the Methodist program for the next four years. The 1948 session of the Methodist General Conference was concluded in Boston on May 8. Reports of the conference carry many pronouncements of general interest.

Dr. F. Brown Harris, pastor of Foundry Methodist Church in Washington made this severe indictment: "Protestantism's appalling weakness, is a vast army of those who will recite the Apostles' Creed, pray the Lord's Prayer, go to church if they feel like it and nothing else interferes, a great host who at holy altars have taken solemn vows and yet who have no zeal, no enthusiasm, no burning devotion, and who are not harnessed in any practical way to the most vital and exciting enterprise in all the earth, namely making a Christian world."

The keynote of Christian unity was struck in no uncertain terms by New York's Bishop Garfield Bromley Oxnam in the Episcopal address. The Episcopal address, prepared and delivered by one bishop, but edited and initialed by all of them, indicates the general position of the church's leaders and the trend of the church's movement.

"United action in many fields would follow rapidly," the bishop predicted. "Our foreign or overseas mission could become one within the world organization and fellowship. We could have a common hymnal. There could be a Protestant daily paper. With what strength we could take up the modern media of radio and television, and use them both for the glory of God! Visual education would cease to be the sorry attempt of amateurs and enter a field calling for the highest art. A united Protestantism could summon the talents of the greatest artists of the earth and from the screen would come the message of our Lord. There could be a united system of higher education, unitedly supported, in which we would train the lay leadership of our church, the teachers of our colleges and universities, and, in united theological seminaries, the ministers of the church. The union of American Christianity would electrify the world and accelerate the trends toward union in every continent."

While we may deplore the tendency of some Methodists to quote Wesley more frequently than Jesus (the title of the Episcopal Address was: "A Man Named Wesley Passed This Way"), we may thank God that in the Methodist Church we have a formidable ally in the promotion of temperance, social service, Christian education, church union and world missions.

REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT TO THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

By W. M. T. SCOTT.

I began my services as Superintendent of the Convention on July 1, 1946. It would consume too much of your time for me to give a detailed account of all activities during these past twenty-one months. However, detailed narrative and financial reports have been submitted to the Executive Board semi-annually. I, therefore, give you at this time simply a summary of those reports from July 1, 1946 to March 31, 1948.

I have made 207 visits to churches (to 117 different churches), 94 such visits having to do with assisting churches to obtain pastoral leadership; held or participated in 328 group conferences with churches, committees, boards, etc.; had 538 interviews with individual pastors; had 1,137 interviews and conferences with individual lay people regarding the work of our churches; preached 97 sermons; delivered 94 addresses; traveled 46,778 miles. Expenses paid by the Convention, $2,011.99.

I have endeavored to promote all the interests of the Convention, seeking to be of service where possible to institutions, boards, conferences, committees and local churches. One having never been Superintendent of the Convention cannot quite comprehend all the details falling upon such an officer. One's work is never done—personal conferences, churches to be visited over these two large states of North Carolina and Virginia, more than fifty stated meetings to attend annually, details of office work and letter writing, writing for THE SUN, preparing copy for The Annual and Yearbook, special task as Executive Secretary of The Mission Board, apportionment promotion, preparation for one or more sermon or address each week; and numerous other duties which simply cannot be catalogued.

Coming to the Convention Office we had no office secretary, no bookkeeper, no treasurer. A plan was devised with the Executive Board for receiving, receipting and disbursing funds for apportionment, other benevolent and missionary causes, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN. THE SUN subscription list became a specific responsibility of the Office, and we are gratified to report upward to 600 increased subscribers.* It consumes far more time to keep THE SUN subscription list than one would imagine who had never had that responsibility! It was necessary for us at the beginning of our work to re-organize the Convention Office with new and inexperienced assistance. On September 1, 1946, we obtained the services of Miss Elizabeth Chicoine, Field Worker, whose specific duties have to do with the young people's work and the work assigned through the Board of Christian Education. Miss Chicoine has also been of service to the Woman's Missionary Convention.

Some progress has been made in the Convention during the past biennium. I take no special credit for this progress, and yet I rejoice that it has been my honor to work as a comrade with my fellow ministers, the women, the laymen, and the youth for the building of the church of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. I wish especially to express my gratitude to President Smith and Elon College for their assistance in many ways given to us.

Some Evidences of Progress.

The financial report of the Convention Office as receiving treasury shows that—exclusive of special funds raised for Elon College from the churches—the churches raised and sent through the Office during the biennium (April 1, 1946 - March 31, 1948) for benevolent, educational and missionary causes the sum of $212,410.26. This represents a substantial increase over any previous biennium, with the possible exception of the "Men and Millions" forward movement in the 1920's. Since the Convention Office was not set up until July 1, 1944, the only comparative figures available are the following:

Received:

July 1, 1944 - March 31, 1946—$149,368.21

July 1, 1946 - March 31, 1948—$188,592.12

Home Expenses of local churches increased from $361,947.00 in 1944 to $550,368.00 in 1947. The 1946-47 conference reports from the churches showed that during the past year 103 churches made improvements on their property. There was only $56,574.00 indebtedness reported by all the churches. The total local church property value reported was $2,208,170.00. During the past year the churches and women's societies raised and sent through the Convention Office $92,171.00 for denominational benevolent, missionary and educational causes.

During the biennium three new churches and two educational buildings were erected or are now under construction. Substantial building funds have been raised by several churches anticipating building in the near future. New buildings—Asheboro, Bethlehem (NCVA), Damascus (EVA), Newport News, Tryon. Fifteen parsonages were erected or purchased during the biennium: Asheville, Asheville, Bethel (VVA), High Point, Hines Chapel, Haw River, Little Creek, Lynchburg, Pleasant Hill (WNC), Pleasant Grove and Ingram, Portsmouth, "First," Shallow Ford, Shallow Well, Timber Ridge, Union (So.).

The women of our churches continue their strong and vital work. The youth work is growing in effectiveness. The Laymen's Fellowship enlisting leadership of more than 400 men in local churches and conferences during the biennium offers great hope of developing a strength and effectiveness among the more than 10,000 laymen of the Convention. Elon College has made great progress both in building improvements and in increased student enrollment. The Orphanage has made extensive improvement on its property and is fitted to serve more effectively today than ever before in its history. The Mission Board report will show the increased giving and work on our missionary responsibilities. We commend most heartily the Christian Missionary Associations of the conferences for their good work. The joint School of Missions and Pastors' School held at Elon College in the summer of 1947 and their plans for another in 1948 offers encouragement for better leadership.

Some Discouraging Trends.

At the end of the Conference year 1945-46 the Convention had a membership of 33,513, with a net gain of 703 members for that year. In 1946-47 our churches reported a membership of 53,539, with a net gain of only 26 members for that year. To be sure—some of the losses may be charged to revision of rolls by churches, but even so our evangelism record is discouraging—only 1,369 total received (789 on Confession) for the whole year! The Evangelistic Crusade launched in February at an inspiring meeting attending by 50 pastors at Elon College promises a new emphasis upon the primary business of the Church—the winning of disciples to Jesus Christ. Our record in evangelism during the past few years is not good! The Sunday school, long considered the primary source of recruiting membership for the Church, is not measuring up to its responsibility.

*The report of the Board of Publications for the past biennium gives the number of "paid up" subscriptions at the beginning of the biennium as 1,625, and adds: "At the present time we have 2,226 subscribers and 61 exchanges . . . an increase of 662." Note should be taken, however, that there were on this list about 425 that were not "paid up," which together with the 61 exchanges, would reduce the net paid increase to approximately 175.—Mgr. Ed.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It was a pleasure to carry out a request of the Southern Convention in asking the First Congregational Christian Church, Richmond, Va., if they would grant their pastor, the Rev. Robert Lee House, permission to divide his time with THE CHRISTIAN SUN as its editor. Mr. House, realizing that the work of the Richmond Church was strenuous and strategic, and knowing, too, that it took both time and attention to edit our church paper refused to accept the election to editorship of the paper without the consent of his church. The Convention appreciated the situation, and voted that the president of the Convention contact the church with the request that Mr. House's election be given its approval.

Having made due appointment with the pastor I met with their board of deacons on Monday night, May 17, and laid the matter before them. Mr. House has been editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for six years. It is the feeling of many that he has grown in wisdom and understanding—and the use of big words—quite considerably during that time. He has done a good job. His board of deacons realize that theirs is a strategic church, in the heart of one of America's great cities, both historically and geographically, and that the work of their pastor is heavy. However, on the other hand, they also felt that the editorship of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was an avenue of increasing growth and development of the abilities and talents of their pastor, and that it had been of value to the church in several ways. Therefore, they voted unanimously to approve the Convention's reelection of their pastor as THE SUN's editor.

In this way I wish to restate for the Convention and for myself the thanks of the Convention and THE CHRISTIAN SUN family to the First Church, Richmond, and their talented pastor, for the faithful work which he is doing as editor. It is a real contribution which both the church and pastor making. It is their chance to "go the second mile" and do something extra for the church, and the Convention. As one of them said, the Convention has in time past helped them, and they are glad to be able to do this in return. However, I reminded them that the Convention had been glad to do whatever it had done and had only done its duty, and that we did not desire them to feel especially obligated on account of what had been done for them through the Mission Board. Speaking both for myself and the Convention I thanked also Deacon John T. Kernodle in the presence of his fello deacons for his faithfulness to His Convention and THE CHRISTIAN SUN as managing editor and publisher.

One more word, please (now isn't that like a preacher)! Let us bear

I KNOW SOMETHING GOOD ABOUT YOU.

Wouldn't this old world be better
If folks we meet would say,
"I know something good about you!"
And then treat us that way?

Wouldn't it be fine and dandy,
If each handclasp warm and true
Carried with it this assurance,
"I know something good about you!"

Wouldn't life be lots more happy,
If the good that's in us all
Were the only thing about us
That folks bothered to recall?

Wouldn't life be lots more happy,
If we praised the good we see?
For there's such a lot of goodness
In the worst of you and me.

Wouldn't it be fine to practice
That fine way of thinking, too?
You know something good about me!
I know something good about you!

with Editor House. Let us encourage him, help him both in his place as a good pastor and preacher, and in his place as our editor. It was a joy to be in his home, in his lovely family circle. We can be proud of Mrs. House as a homemaker, and for the signal honor which she has received in being elected president of the Richmond Council of Church Women. And we can be proud of the Richmond Church and the loyal, progressive members that help to make it a good success.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

ROSEMONT.

Rosemont is closing a week of Evangelistic Visitation in preparation for the revival which is to begin May 17th and last for two weeks, with Rev. Roy S. Hulan (formerly a Chaplain in the U. S. Navy) of Jacksonville, Illinois, being the guest speaker, and Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk leading the singing.

This Visitation Week which was begun by the pastor, Rev. Herbert G. Council, who had previously spent much time and thought on making plans and working out schedules and finally calling for a group of volunteers, has proven to be a wonderful success.

Mr. Council held three call meetings for the Volunteers and gave instructions as to how this work was to be done. When he asked for forty Volunteers, the response, which at first seemed hopeless, has proven to be an overwhelming success, and the pastor, himself, has been agreeably surprised at the cooperation he is receiving from the group of workers.

Each evening at 6:15 supper is served at church for forty workers. Mr. Council has a short devotional service and outlines the work for that night. The workers go out by two's—all leaving the church at 7:00 p. m. and returning to the church at 9:00 p. m., when the pastor marks up the bulletin board, and shows the result of that evening's work.

There are nineteen groups of two each, and a young people's group which is sponsored by Mrs. T. F. Liverman and which is doing a splendid work.

It is an inspiring sight to see how eager each one is to be there each night and participate in doing his or her bit for the Master's work. The fellowship at these supper meetings is really doing something for the church members and they are a most enthusiastic group of workers. The pastor's heart must be unduly warmed at the response he is getting from his flock of church members.

In view of all the work and prayers of Visitation Week, we feel sure the revival, which has already begun in the church, must be a successful one.

The pastor has been ably assisted by the Chairman of the Board of Deacons, Mr. D. D. Johnson, who has worked so untiringly and given of his time and talents.

At the close of tonight's meeting, a total of 302 visits were reported.

More news later, as to the result of the revival.

MRS. ELLIE K. MORRISON,
Reporter.

A woman who was asked by the new curate what she thought of his sermon, replied: "Very good, indeed, sir; so instructive. In fact, we didn't know what sin really was until you came here."

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

EAST DORMITORY.

I am East Dormitory. I was born in the architect's mind in 1890. I was constructed by the hand of the builder in the self-same year. I am standing on Elon College campus. I have stood here in the same place through all these years. I was intimately acquainted with the first president, Dr. W. S. Long. I admired Dr. Long and he admired me. I saw the first student body come to Elon College. I took the girls to my heart. I sheltered them. I protected them from the winter's cold and the summer's heat. I gathered them in at nightfall and gave them my blessing until the break of day. I welcomed the young men as they called and cautioned them as to speech and conduct. I listened to their serenades and cheered them at the end of their program.

I have not always housed young ladies. On different occasions I have given quarters to young men. Indeed I am housing young men, but I prefer young ladies. They are gentler, more considerate of my interest and my feelings. They take better care of me. They do not break my rest by keeping me awake into the dead hours of the night. Of course, the young ladies have their secrets. I know them. They have confided in me. I have promised never to reveal them and I won't. I have instructed my rooms, my halls, and my porches never to talk. My girls know that I won't talk so they are not afraid.

I am not only aware of what goes on within me but I have watched the campus and know something of what has gone on through the years. I have stood here with chin up and eyes open. I have been a keen observer. I have known every president, his weak points and his strong ones, his successes, his failure, his joys, his sorrows, his pleasures, and his heartaches. I have seen faculties come and go. In the main they have been efficient, faithful, and loyal. They have given the students their blessings, and the students have gone out to labor and to serve. Today they rise up to call their instructors blessed.

I have also observed every student body that has come to my campus since 1890, a fine lot of youngsters they have been—young, gay, happy, ambitious, bent as much on having a good time as on having well prepared lessons. They have not all been saints but they have been good at heart and have meant well. At every commencement a few of them trek back to visit the haunts of other years and to refresh the memories of the happenings of other days. I wish that they would all come back for one commencement—for this commencement. I want so much to see them again.

I have seen every other building that stands on my campus erected, save one, the old administrative building. It left us one night in January, 1922. It was an exciting experience as well as an irreparable loss. It came into being the same year that I did. It had been my bosom companion for more than thirty years. On that fateful night I saw the smoke bursting through the crevices. Then the flames flared up. I thought that help would never come. When it did come it was too late, leaving behind only ashes and charred brick. It was a sad day. But soon other buildings began to rise to take its place. So that the last estate of my campus is preferable to the first. On that night I thought surely that I would go, but the wise Maker spared me. I am still here to serve. But even so I know that the hand of fate is upon me and I am marked for ashes or ruins. Until then I shall continue to serve. Won't you join me? There is plenty for us all to do.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is good that our college is not self-supporting. If it were not dependent upon the Church for support, it would not consider itself obligated to serve the Church and carry out its wishes. For the College to put itself on a self-supporting basis, it would be compelled to charge students tuition at a rate that would make it prohibitive for the greater part of the young people of the homes of our church to attend. Due to the support of the church and the general public the College is able to proceed with its program of education with a minimum charge of $225 for tuition and fees. In addition it is able to give free scholarships to ministerial students and full-time Christian workers and other considerations to needy students. It means a great deal to the church and to the public in general to have our young people receive education under moral and religious influence. The church should consider it a privilege and be proud of the fact that it is able to give its support to its college of Christian higher education and thus enable the average student with limited financial resources to obtain an education.

Sometimes it seems that the church's support is meager and almost meaningless. Our contribution this week is $5. We have many weeks that are better and so from week to week we live in hopes and with increasing expectations.

We are grateful for the cooperation and support of our church.

FAULTY BUT FAITHFUL.

A great minister, who was noted for his Christ-like spirit, as well as for his consecrated ability, dreamed that he had died and stood at the gate of heaven knocking for admission. He gave his name, only to be told that his name did not appear upon the books. At last, after earnest entreaty he was bidden to enter and was told he would have the privilege of appearing before the judge of all the earth, and if he could stand his test he might abide in heaven forever. Standing before the throne he gave his name, and the following questions were put to him: "Have you led a righteous life?" And he said: "No." "Have you always been kind and forgiving to those who have been around you?" "Alas, no, I have failed miserably here." "Have you always been honest and just?" And he answered, "I fear not." As question after question was put to him by the judge, his case seemed more and more hopeless. The last question was asked him, and to that, too, he was obliged to give the same negative reply. Just when he seemed to be in despair the brightness about the throne became brighter, and suddenly he heard a voice sweeter than a mother's voice. The speaker said: "Father, I know this man. It is true that he was weak in many ways, but he stood for me in the world, and I take his place before Thee." Just as the last words of the sentence were spoken, the dream was over, and the man awoke; but he had his lesson, and it is a lesson for us all. We have in ourselves no standing before God. It must be in Christ.—J. Wilbur Chapman.

FRANCES WHITAKER WRITES FROM SHAOWU HOSPITAL.

Shaowu, Fukien, China,
April, 1948.

DEAR FRIENDS:

As I sit here at my desk, I have been trying to think of some way of drawing a picture of our little mission so that you could be here for a visit. When I say little, I mean little, for there are just two of us here now—Dick and Dorothy Jackson have gone to Foochow, where Dorothy delivered a brand new son to Dick—Lewis Byer Jackson. So Dr. Ed Riggs and I are holding the fort till they return.

I guess the best way to tell you about things is just to tell you about the highlights of the week as I would my mother and father.

First of all we gave baths for the first time this week, as a routine every day procedure to hospitalized patients. This seems like a queer thing to mention but to me it is hard to believe for it is something that I have been working toward ever since I had arrived. The trouble was two-fold. We are interior enough so that most of our patients are uneducated. They don't believe in baths, especially in the winter because it causes illness. Then our nursing staff was short, and they hadn't been giving baths before, so why now, especially when it made good paying patients mad. I personally had nightmares about teaching student nurses for three years without giving baths. We, here in Shaowu, are trying to do things as much under Chinese leadership as possible and so we couldn't as foreigners say you've got to give baths . . . though it seemed like a "got to" matter to me. We asked Dr. Chu, our Superintendent, if we might have a room equipped for admittance baths and ask each patient if he would please wash when he entered our hospital. Not having entered, we had more control over our patients. I think both the Superintendent of Nurses, Mrs. Kao, and I were surprised to find that even in the coldest weather, using this method that almost every patient submitted to baths. Some of the deep-country folks were pretty skeptical. We have been doing this for almost three months. After talking, thinking and dreaming baths for so long, at last this week, just as if we had been always giving baths, routine bed baths were begun. As I walked through the wards and watched the students stripping beds I had a feeling of deep contentment. It was not only we foreigners that felt baths must be given, but the Chinese staff. Warm weather is just around the corner so the patients no longer object. The true test will come next winter.

THE TEST OF DISCIPLESHIP.

By Guy H. Veazey.

"Simon Peter, son of Jonas,
Do you love me more than these?"
"Feed my lambs, for they are hungry,
If my Father you would please."

"Simon Peter, do you love me?"
Said the Master, by the deep.
"If you do, leave off this fishing;
Go, and feed my hungry sheep."

"If you love me, Simon Peter,
You will my commandments keep;
You will be a faithful shepherd
For my lonely scattered sheep."

If we love Him, we must prove it
By the kindness that we share.
We will render faithful service
To those trusted to our care.

By that time there will be enough of a routine so that I think all the nurses will throw their energies into convincing the patients that baths help—not harm them. Our next big problem is to build a clothes cupboard so that we can lock up the patients' clothes. Right now the clothes are put into the bedside stand and when the patient takes a notion he can reach down and put on his clothes, drop our hospital things on the floor, and climb back to bed, dirt and all, much happier in his native garb.

Oh, yes, this week Dr. Ed handed me a China Weekly News. It was full of news about your side of the world. Not very good news—about Russian and American disputes, unrest, and starvation, but it was news and we once again felt we were part of your world. Ever since Dick left with the radio we have been without news so we did a lot of catching up.

This magazine will be coming regularly from now on.

Last evening, I was over at my Chinese teacher's home playing rook. After a long and pleasant evening together, she and I walked out on her porch. There over the pathway was an arbor covered with white roses. The night air was warm and my teacher, Yo Hua, looked especially beautiful by lamplight and roses. I left her to make a routine check at the hospital. I found Dr. Ed washing the wound of a soldier that had been shot in the shoulder by a bandit that day. It was the first case of that sort that we have had. Tomorrow will be another full day so I returned soon to the nurses home. As I went to bed, I thought to myself—I was surely a lucky person to be working in this beautiful country, with some of the finest friends I have ever known, in a Christian hospital, and privileged to help start a new station. Here to be able to heal, and teach and love . . . its really fun to be a missionary . . . believe it or not.

The Catholic Church bell is ringing so I must close for supper.

Sincerely,

FRANCES WHITAKER.

Dr. Lorimer once asked a man if he supported missions. "No," said the man. "The dying thief did not help missions, and wasn't he saved?" "Yes," said Dr. Lorimer, "I suppose he was, but you must remember that he was a dying thief, whereas you are a living one."—The Christian Herald.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

LARRY AND CONNIE STANTON.

Here is the first letter in our series of letters from missionaries sponsored by the Southern Convention women. Larry and Connie Stanton are our missionaries in Mexico, and they are from our own Southern Convention:

"To the Women's Societies of the
The Southern Convention:

To greet you and tell you of our part in the evangelical work in Mexico is a pleasure for us. It does not seem possible that we have been here three full years and have started on our fourth. In this short time we have become very much at home here. Our two children, Elizabeth (two and one-half years) and Paul (eight months) were born here. Our home in Mazatlan is one of the most beautiful sites in all of Mexico. We are on a cliff overlooking the Pacific Ocean with the constant sound of the waves beating on the rocks below and the beautiful view of the setting sun from our front porch and living room. We wish you could share with us our moments of meditation each day with this view to inspire us.

"While our home is at times quiet and set apart, it is also a center for activity that goes beyond its limits, at times even beyond the city in which we live. Just across the playground is our school, Colegio El Pacifico. It is a beautiful modern building out on a point in the ocean. Every classroom looks out in two directions to the sea. It has an enrollement of over a hundred in the six-year primary department, and about seventy-five pupils in the three-year commercial course. While neither of us have any definite teaching responsibility in the school, we help with the maintenance problems of the building and what is more important we try to link the school with the churches in the city, since Mexican law will not permit religious teaching in any school.

"Larry has been named Director of the youth work of our churches and part of his job is to unite the Christian Endeavor of the ten organized churches into a growing fellowship, to help find young people who are willing to dedicate their lives to Christian service for the ongoing life of the churches and a future evangelistic program. When we first came here three years ago there was one small camp for the children of the Guadalajara Church. Since that time there are two camps for the same church, one for intermediates and the other for young people. Besides these there are to be camps in the northern part of the west coast and here in Mazatlan. Larry directs and promotes these camps. The youth work brings him into contacts with the United Protestant Seminary students in Mexico City and with the young people of the Disciples and Methodists as well as through the United Protestant Youth Alliance. Larry is the editor of a young people's bi-monthly magazine, published here with the help of three of our own national leaders of youth. Besides this there are institutes for training leaders for Vacation Bible Schools as a part of his program. All of this activity is carried on in different parts of our field. It means that Larry is away from home as much as a month at a time and sometimes longer. It also means that he travels more than 500 miles north of Mazatlan and more than 500 miles south.

"Connie's important job is in the home. She is busy with the children and household. There have been many adjustments to new ways of house-keeping. We feel that the kind of home that we have plays an important part in the work we are doing.

"If any of you would be interested in receiving the letters which we send out periodically we would be glad to put you on our mailing list. Ours is only a small part of the work in this rapidly developing field. Every prayer and every contribution adds to the fulfilment of the plan which God has for this part of His Kingdom.

Very truly yours,
Larry & Connie Stanton."

In a personal letter to Virginia Brinkley, our Missionary News Chairman, the Stantons mention something we might do to help them. A paragraph from this letter reads:

"You spoke of letting you know how you can help us. There is very little that can be done there to be sent us in the way of hand-work, because of the very high duty on imported things to this country. But money can buy needed supplies for our schools and churches and social center. Right now I'm thinking of a badly needed set of dishes for the dining room here in the Mazatlan School. A set would cost between $30.00 and $40.00. Our youth camp program is expanding and we are in need of kitchen utensils and table service, all of which costs a great deal. Any amount would be helpful.

PALM STREET, GREENSBORO.

A new circle of young women (business women and young mothers) was organized at Palm Street Church on May 3. The pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese; the President of the Woman's Society, Mrs. Pearl Hall; and Mrs. W. E. Wiseman met with the twelve young women at this organizational meeting. Mrs. Carl Wallace, 2504 Spring Garden Street, Greensboro, was elected president of this circle, which will become a part of the Woman's Society. Mrs. Hall was elected as sponsor for the group. Already this new group has begun to work—and they are cooperating with the older women in planning for the Family Night picnic and program on May 15.

REMEMBER THE SCHOOL OF MISSIONS—JULY 12-16— AT ELON COLLEGE.

Some of those on the program are: Dr. A. D. Stauffacher, Guy H. Black, Dr. Martin Goslin, Mrs. Roland Cross and Mrs. Judson Fiebigler.

The total cost for the week is $13.00—including room and board. Women's societies should be making plans now to pay part of the expenses of one or more persons from their church.

HURTS.

Prudence fell out a tree. Prudence skinned her knee and her elbow. Because she knew that her mother and daddy didn't want her to climb trees she was afraid to tell about her fall.

When Prue came in the house she tried to keep mother from seeing that she had been hurt. Finally mother's sharp eye saw the blood-stained knee.

"Little girl," she asked, "what happened to your knee?" Prudence hid her face in her arms forgetting that her elbow would show. Mother exclaimed, "O, Prue, you hurt your arm, too."

The little girl nodded and two tears began to spill down her face. Mother held her arms wide and said, "Come here, my dear, come to mother. You know that we don't like for you to climb trees and very high things but we love you more than that. Our love means that we think tree-climbing for such a little girl is not altogether safe but we go right on loving you whether you climb or not."

Then mother carried Prue into the bathroom and washed the raw, scraped places very gently and patted on some soothing medicine.

When it was nap time Prudence lay in her bed and thought about what mother had said. The way she said it made her feel better. She wanted to do as mother and daddy thought she should. She closed her eyes and said aloud, "Thank you, God, for my Mummy and Daddy!" Then she slept and her sore spots began to heal.

Billy cut his finger. He sliced the top with mother's sharpest paring knife. To reach the knife Billy had climbed on a footstool on top of a chair. That was dangerous by itself. After he cut himself he began to cry very loudly. The sight of the red blood flowing out made him feel very sick and weak and unhappy. Mother came hurrying to see what had happened.

"Billy, Billy," mother repeated, "you have cut yourself." Billy knew that and he wanted help. Mother did just that. She helped him down from his high place and held a firm hand around the cut finger to stop the blood, but Billy was still very much afraid. Mother talked quietly to him, "When we handle sharp things without being careful we do get cut. Look at the blod, it is running out freely. That is good, it will clean the cut."

Soon the blood stopped and mother put a bandage on it. Billy was surprised that mother hadn't acted afraid, too. It helped him to learn not to be afraid when he was hurt. It helped him remember to be careful with sharp things.

TANTRUMS—O DEAR!

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Little George, his mother, and I were walking quietly and happily across Boston Common, when suddenly, because his mother said to him, "No, you can't have that," George lay down on the ground in his clean white suit and screamed, "I'll roll in the dirt!"

His mother, who was a close friend of mine, looked to me for help, so I, who lectured to mothers and was supposed to know all the answers (!) said to the little four-year-old, "Well, roll in the dirt if you wish; your mother and I do not care to do that." Then we walked on. It worked; he got up and followed us. And since his tantrum had ended so abruptly, he had not rolled in the dirt, and we were able to continue our walk.

Later, we went into St. Clair's for ice cream. My friend ordered for us all, but when the treat came little four-year-old George refused to eat his; it was not the kind he wanted just then! Again we had the beginning of a tantrum. To George's surprise, we paid no attention to him but divided his cream and ate it. As he sat there without any, he became quiet and thoughtful.

But, of course, these noisy uncontrolled reactions cannot always be quieted so quickly. There is a little girl named Fredda, almost four years old, whom we take riding in our car very often. We are extremely fond of her, and she has always responded to our love in happy ways. A few days ago, however, my daughter took her into a store where she helped herself to a spool of thread from the counter. When told she could not have it, she immediately, and I think for the first time in her life, lay down on the floor, crying out loudly and kicking vigorously. The noise drew the attention of curious shoppers, and they stood around waiting to see "the show." My daughters looked at each other, and then, simultaneously, they stooped down, each took one of her hands, pulled her up and walked her out of the store—no doubt disappointing the expectant group of on-lookers. We said nothing in the car, and gradually, with occasional sobs, our little friend worked back to normal.

The next time one of my daughters did an errand, little Fredda was not allowed to go with her. This was a real punishment, for she dearly loved to do errands.

When later my daughter had to do another errand, she said to Fredda, "Do you wish to go into the store with me, or do you wish to play 'Drive to California'?"

Quickly came the answer, "I want to go with you."

"Then listen to me," my daughter said. "I cannot pick you up if you lie down and scream. If you will be a good girl, you may come with me. You must not take anything from the store except what I buy, and you must keep close to me. Do you understand?"

When they came back to the car, little Fredda's face was aglow. She was carrying a bundle, and she was holding tight to my daughter's coat, happy as a lark.

It has been my experience that some mothers expect to see and rather enjoy seeing children—not their own—disciplined. I remember, on this point, answering a friend who was criticizing me for not disciplining my child in public. I believe that public discipline is most unwise.

Froebel said, "Let us live with our children." This, I think, does not merely mean entering into their plays intelligently. It also means having the understanding heart, ready to meet every child-experience thoughtfully and prayerfully. Living with our children is an all-time job, and it is a glorious one if it is carried through in the spirit of sacrificial love.

There are many lines dividing this congregation tonight—some are rich and some are poor, some are young and some are old, some are learned and some are ignorant—but when the great ocean of eternity shall break upon these sands of time all these lines will be forever washed away. But there is one line that is the line that will never be erased, and that is the line that divides those who serve God from those who serve Him not. Are you on God's side? Do you want to be? Will you be tonight?—B. Fay Mills.

CHURCH UNION—WHY NOT? John R. Scottford. Pilgrim Press. $2.

John Scottford has written a worthwhile little book on a subject very much in the public mind, and one concerning which there is much uncertainty and confusion. It makes clear that the expected benefits of the uniting of churches have their price. This is an aspect of this subject frequently minimized or overlooked: but every good has its price.

The book has come out of many years of study, experience and advocacy of church mergers. It shows maturity of thought, careful observance of facts and trends, and with it all a saving sense of humor in appraising the ironic elements in church attitudes towards mergers. Mr. Scottford rightly states the state of mind of some advocates of church mergers to be, "We are all right, and if you believe in church union why don't you unite with us?" And he characterizes this attitude with considerable skill.

The descriptions of some of the denominations will not be accepted in toto by all their adherents. It will be thought by some that the book takes a cavalier attitude toward some "precious inheritances," and by others that the approach to the whole question is to a degree secular with scant reverence for age or tradition. The deeply religious significance of Christian unity has been taken for granted. He is an activist, living in the midst of today's events, and wants action now. It would appear that perhaps historic considerations are entitled to more attention. There is an abundance of evidence on the truth that there is far too much time and thought given to denominational slogans and other minor differences that characterize the various church bodies—differences which for the most part, while of significance in the past, are of far less validity in this crucial day.

Again, one might wish that in a discussion of Church Union—Why Not? more attention had been given to a question naturally taking precedence, Church Union—Why? One might venture the opinion that to the question he has set himself to answer he has not given as specific an answer as the present era requires. Many elements of the answer are in the book by inference.

The book with its facts and emphases will set many persons to serious thought and be of aid to those working in this field. It will have special value for officials of church councils on the city and state levels, who will find much information of value to them, in addition to the light the discussion throws on the main topic.

We can not have too many books in this field for it is one in which much spadework has yet to be done. This book will aid us all to understand a little better the task we face. It will also help us to understand that organic union of churches is not as easy or as simple as some of its advocates would have us believe.

PERSONAL RELIGION. Henry C. Alleman. Muhlenberg Press, Philadelphia. 1947. 124 pp. $1.75.

Dr. Alleman served as professor of Old and New Testament and Theology at Gettysburg Seminary. In 1940 he became Professor Emeritus. These twenty-four addresses were given in a series of chapel talks before the students of the college. They range from "Personal Religion," and "The Church," to "Eternal Life." Based in Scripture, always, they yet manifest a wide knowledge of general literature as well as deep insight into the life of men and the times. Each is, in fact, a complete and wise homily. And, in Americanese, they are "interesting" no less.

THE ETERNAL WAY. Dr. Ludwig Feuerbringer. Concordia Publishing House. St. Louis. 1947. 104 pp. $1.50.

The author finished a fruitful course with joy as the President of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis. This book is a fine exegesis of Habakkuk. Deeply versed in Old Testament Scriptures, the author analyzes the problem of God's justice in the course of His dealings with Israel at the hands of the even more wicked Chaldeans. He evinces a thorough familiarity with Luther's translation and theology and thereby adds to the value of the book. Our own generation, which is witness of the breakdown of the morality of nations and the inevitable judgment of God, finds the parallel in Habakkuk. "The mills of God grind slowly," but they do grind fine the human grain, meting out justice until God exalts Himself in righteousness.

RELIGION THROUGH THE AGES. An Anthology. Assembled by Hermon F. Bell. Edited and Interpreted by Charles S. MacFarland. Philosophical Library, N. Y. 1948.

From Cleanthes, Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius to Carlyle and Geo. Eliot, from John Calvin and Immanuel Kant to Goethe, Cowper and Victor Hugo, from John Milton and Jonathan Edwards to Wordsworth, Tennyson, Browning, to John G. Whittier and Oliver Wendell Holmes, with many in between, this Anthology gathers the essenced wisdom of the centuries, set in excerpts from these writers organized with great skill into philosophies giving lifelong guidance to an earnest soul, and that offer to many of us a mine of unexpected wealth.

The experience of Hermon F. Bell, since as a senior in Yale Divinity School he came to Dr. Macfarland for consultation in 1905, has been a peculiar and a notable one. Finding himself, with sharp disappointment, barred from ordination by lack of certain beliefs, he finally entered commercial life, where he prospered in a firm of accountancy, while yet retaining his devotion to theology and writing a volume, The Philosophical Basis of Theology.

Those were peculiarly times of misfit, as this writer felt them, much as Bell felt them. Ritchlianism was rife, substituting felt values for historic facts which alone gave the values—"the grin without the cat." This pectoral theology was at war with metaphysics, and Bell as a disciple of Garman at Amherst had a quenchless thirst for metaphysics.

We cannot follow Macfarland's biographical interpretation of Bell, an astonishing and charming feat of sympathetic skill, yet checking on the defects in the views which involved lifelong disappointment. We can only note the salient features in this landscape through which a life has kept a firm if too narrow pathway of vigilant faith. The career was typical for many in its point of decision, and a noble lesson in intellectual fidelity and mental clarity.

For Bell held on to God supremely, as, finding difficulties in history, he let history go. This only intensified his faith in the Eternal Deity. I call his God a transcendent God predominantly, and do not see as much immanence in it as I gather Macfarland does. It is true there is a literary or poetic immanence all through these writers he lived with, and graciously, at Macfarland's instance, now offers

DANIEL STANDS BY HIS CONVICTIONS.

By W. B. TRUITT.

LESSON IX—MAY 30, 1948.

LESSON TEXT: Daniel 1.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Tim. 6:11-16.

MEMORY SELECTION: Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's dainties, nor with the wine which he drank.—Daniel 1:8.

The story of Daniel is so familiar to all Bible students that it would seem unnecessary in the space which can be devoted in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to repeat the story here. It seems reasonable, however, to make a few brief historical references in order that the reader may more completely understand the setting of the story.

Several of the last kings of Judah during their brief reigns, were evil minded and disobedient to the words of God as spoken to them by the prophets of the day. Rather than obey God, they chose to try to make alliances with other nations and with disastrous results. Incidentally, all history proves that human alliances fail and that nations which depend on such are but hoping in vain.

We are told it was during the third year of the reign of King Jehoiakim that Nebuchadnezzah came to Jerusalem and besieged it, and that the Lord gave Jehoiakim, King of Judah, into his hand, with a part of the vessels of the house of God. Jerusalem was not destroyed at this time but in its weakened condition, could not be expected to endure for more than a few years longer. Evidently, at this time, quite a few captives were carried away into Babylon, including some of the king's seed and some of the princes. King Nebuchadnezzah decided that he would take a number of these children of Israel and educate them for a period of three years in the learning and tongue of the Chaldeans. Among these young men four are mentioned, namely: Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah. As in all cases where a few people are gathered, one will become the leader and this leadership fell to Daniel. The king commanded that these young men should be specially nourished, his idea being that they should be given rich food, but Daniel "pur-posed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank." After considerable argument with the master of the eunuchs under whose care these young princes had been placed, he prevailed on him to give the four of them ten days' trial. Ashpenaz, the master of the eunuchs, took a considerable chance, or at least he thought he was taking a long chance, in permitting the experiment, but Daniel had a strong purpose which always goes a long way in any argument. The experiment was a success for "at the end of ten days their countenance appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat." When at the end of three years, these four young men were given an audience with the king, he found them unusually fine graduates. He gave them an examination and we are told that "in all matters of wisdom and understanding, that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm."

If we should continue the story of Daniel, we would find the record of a successful and long life, and that indeed he stood not before one king but before at least one king of Persia after the Babylonian Empire had fallen.

The applications of this fine lesson today are all too apparent, but may be emphasized in a few brief paragraphs:

One of the most inspiring things of life, is to see an up and coming young man who seems headed for success. He has been a diligent student, has mastered his preliminary education and is starting out in life. He is not a loafer, but determination is written in his face. He gets his first job, thinking little of present remuneration, but rather knowing in his heart that he can advance himself through hard work. Watching such a young man, we can see that he has a purpose in life, and certainly this is the foundation of success. He will not be found wandering about the streets of his town or city, and with no purpose whatsoever, but will be found in good company, seeking wholesome entertainment, or perchance, studiously pursuing his life's education by reading and studying at night. He has a purpose in his life and has the ability to say: "No."

We have to admit that these are trying days for young people. Temptations are certainly multiplied. Many news stories, lurid magazine pictures, enticing advertisements, and companionship with other young people who have no purpose in life, may be chosen. The majority of young people at least occasionally go to the movies, and all too many of these present temptations in an enticing manner. Furthermore, if a young person associates with the crowd, sooner or later he will get a sneer unless he goes along with the crowd.

It is encouraging, however, to remember that there are thousands of fine young men and women today, and who are starting out toward success. They have real purposes and convictions, and in these convictions, they have the ability to say: "No." The young person of today who successfully meets the conditions which prevail, will be a stronger and a better man or woman than his parents or grandparents who faced no such multiplied temptations.

The Church is challenged as never before for it is a sad fact that home life has broken down. All too many parents neglect the religious training due the child, to say nothing of the thousands of broken homes. Unless the Church recovers its evangelistic spirit and our Sunday schools go out and gather in the young people, many lives which might be successful will be lost to society, to the nation and to God.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

At the end of the 1946-47 Conference year our Sunday schools reported a total enrollment of 20,808 as against the church membership of 33,539. Thus we have only about two-thirds as many pupils in our Sunday schools as we have members of the churches.

We have established no new churches during the biennium. In fact, during the war years we have established no new church, despite the greatest migration and population shift in the history of our country. Literally scores of new communities have grown up in North Carolina and Virginia. Our people have gone to those new communities in hundreds. Other denominations have established new churches. We have not! Our fathers in the churches of the Convention planted churches well in the rural areas. We have in recent years become more and more urban. Our people are on the move. We must establish new churches or die! This work of Church Extension rests primarily upon pastors and lay people in our established churches. They must take the initiative, lend a hand. No paid "starter of churches" alone can or will do the job. Signs of promise in Church Extension at the present are Beverly Hills in Burlington, Burch Ridge section near Glen Raven (NC), and a point near the site of the former "Providence Church" in the Norfolk area.

One of the most discouraging prospects facing us is the grave shortage of pastors. At the present time we need 10 pastors to fill 18 vacant churches and to supply yoked churches ready to launch full time programs. We have been encouraged to have five new men come to our Convention during the past year from other sections. The immediate prospect is not bright for pastors to fill our needs from within the Convention. We have a group of splendid young men in training both in college and seminary, most of whom are serving as student pastors. Our homes and churches must place upon the hearts and minds of our best youth the call of Christ for full time Christian service. To save our churches from remaining pastorless we must bring men into our area from other sections, provided we can offer sufficient financial support. The salary scale of the ministry generally in our area, however, is far too low to enable us to secure the type of men we need. We would challenge the Laymen's Fellowship with the job of increasing the scale of salary of the ministry. Pastors cannot do this. The laymen can do it!

Elon College has made progress under great difficulties. President L. E. Smith and his colleagues are to be commended for their labors, but the church's college faces serious days ahead. Education is rapidly becoming secular! Elon is our church's answer to this threat in this area. If Elon is to perform her task in Christian higher education in the future as she has done so well in the past, she must have greater endowment funds and needed physical equipment. We may well be encouraged by what Elon has done with what she has had, but she must have more adequate support. Unless somehow the church can supply the necessary funds to increase her endowment substantially, the outlook is not encouraging.

The Merger.

The churches, conferences, and the Convention are requested to register their opinion upon the proposed merger between the Congregational

Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Church. The record of the voting as of April 22, 1948, in the churches and conferences is as follows:

Resolution No. One—Churches voting, 125: 94 for, with 3,204 votes; 30 against, with 1,323 votes. Conferences voting, 5: All for, with 208 votes (58 negative votes).

Resolution No. Two—Churches voting, 119: 103 for, with 3,345 votes; 16 against, with 661 votes. Conferences voting, 5: All for, with 227 votes (27 negative votes).

* * *

The Principles and Government of the Christian Church, under which this Convention was organized and has operated for so many years, speaks in definite words on the subject of Christian Union: "The Saviour came into the world to establish one church . . ."; "All the redeemed are brethren" and "members one of another (of the Church)"; The Church is spoken of in the scriptures as a family of which God is the father, and as a household, which should not be divided against itself.

"Its mission (that is, the mission of the Christian Church—said our Christian Church fathers—) will be consummated in the conversion of the world, the union of all the followers of Christ, and His reign in human society."

* * *

God is deeply disturbing the conscience of the Christian community concerning its divisions; the Church is so divided that it cannot speak the word of life with power; the disunity of the Church hinders the witness we are commissioned to make; our disunity conceals the true nature of the Church—so say many of the Christian leaders of our day.

The matters of name, statement of belief, and polity cause sincere people amongst us to fear this proposed union. As we view the matter—in the final analysis the real issues before us are not name, mere statement of belief, or polity, rather the real issues are—

1. What is the will of Christ for us? We should unite, if we do, not merely because a convention or council may vote it, "but because the Lord hath spoken it by His spirit."
2. Are we willing to make necessary adjustments of our way of doing things that Christ's will may be done? No polity can constitute the Church; only the grace of God in the midst of the fellowship can make the Church.

3. Are we—Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed—determined by His spirit to engage in a ministry larger than that which both communions can perform separately?

Looking to the Future.

The Christian must look forward. We need to look backward that we may take inventory but such an inventory ought to result in a girding of ourselves for tomorrow. "It is a strange and terrifying prospect that confronts humanity today. Here we stand at the point of civilization's farthest advance, yet the whole world is haunted by dark forebodings. The frightful power of the material instruments that we have created has set us to wondering uneasily whether men have character enough to be trusted with them. The Church today is called upon to live and give life in a world shaken to its foundations. The outward confusion of man's life reflects, and is reflected in, the confusion of men's hearts and minds." A day of opportunity and crisis is upon us.

Jesus Christ holds the one answer for the recovery of our one world. "Men would have no reason to fear in a Christ-dominated world." We are his answer in word and in deed. The Church must either make its impact upon the secular, warring world of today and win it for Christ, or the secular and hostile world will increasingly encroach upon the life of mankind, ultimately destroying life.

Our denomination is entering a Program of Advance along with the other major denominations of America, that our Christian Mission may go forward. Holding the line is not sufficient to stem the tide of evil which threatens to engulf the world. It is my earnest hope that the Convention will at this session adopt the resolution to be presented for the launching of a Program of Advance under which we will mobilize our human, spiritual and financial resources, committing them to be directed of Christ that we may have a real Forward Movement. Such a program of advance will require us to give our time, our talents, and our treasures as we have never given them before. Such an advance equal to our commissions in Christ will not be possible with half-hearted allegiance, the fragments or incidentals! We must give ourselves, our all! Let us go forward to meet our God entrusted stewardship with a Christ-like faithfulness! Are we able? Yes, we are able! Are we willing? That is the question we shall have to answer! Now!

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

Dear Friends:

On Wednesday, May 12, we had a very nice rain, a beautiful season. We had been very dry for several weeks and the ground was too hard to plow, and had delayed us in planting gardens. We have five thousand tomato plants to plant and this splendid rain will enable us to get that done.

Some weeks ago we had the misfortune to have a fire that destroyed a large frame house, which we bought several years ago. It threw four families out of any place to live, and among them was the Orphanage dairyman. In order to take care of the situation we went down to Camp Butner and bought a splendid building, 96 x 30 feet, two stories high, which had been constructed for a hospital but was never opened. We paid so little for it that we would be ashamed to tell. We have had a group of men, first-class carpenters, down there taking the building down carefully, and we are trucking the lumber up here on our grounds and expect to build two six-room cottages out of the lumber. We hope to do this out of the insurance money we got out of the house that was burned. If we can, we will be better off than we were in the beginning. Sometimes what we think is a great misfortune proves to be a blessing in disguise.

Our goal for the year is $50,000. We are depending on the church people to raise $25,000 and we will do our best to raise $25,000 outside the church. Up to May 20, the churches have sent in so far this year the sum of $3,625.36. This is $1,351.05 less than we had this time last year. We have received from outside our church the sum of $7,961.08. This is $640.18 less than we had this time last year, and we are anxious to make this a banner year, too. We noticed in Charity and Children, the Baptist Orphanage paper, they have received from the Baptist churches for their Orphanage the sum of $110,659.76 so far this year. This does not include special offerings. They are seven times as large as we are in orphanage work, at what a difference income in comparison!

The Christian Orphanage has borrowed money for a great many of our girls and boys to defray their college expenses. We let them give their note to be paid back as soon as they get a job and begin to draw a salary. The last one that we borrowed money for was a very fine girl. When she finished her commercial course at the college she got a job with the Federal Bank, Richmond, Va., and a few days ago she mailed me a check for payment in full of her note. Of all of them, not one has failed me. I think this is a good record.

SUN'S PULPIT.

world; not in cloisters but on the hearth.

Passionate devotion to God, pure love to all mankind, practical righteousness which all men feel and know. This is true saintliness. People who are just as refined and heavenly as St. Francis of Assisi or St. Bernard or St. Paul. We are all "called to be saints."

To serve the present age
My calling to fulfill
O may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will.

The Saints are Loyal in Scorn of Consequences.

The saint would rather suffer than betray. The saint is irrelevant to all practical politics. He is not of this world in the sense of trimming and tacking into and through all popular currents. The Christ-like life is a judgment where sin abounds. He will choose to "suffer affliction with the people of God, considering obloquy with the Messiah to be richer wealth than Egypt's treasures." He will save others though himself he may not save.

The Saints Never Seek or Expect to be Noticed.

The fact is most of the saints are unnoticed and unrecorded. It was said of Brother Lawrence the saint of Paris kitchens that "he studied to avoid the gaze of men" and he pretty nearly succeeded, for it was not until his death at eighty that the true nature of this glorious life shone forth. He had written a few letters which were collected and printed, and the eyes of the church and the world were opened to the superb qualities of this holy man. His kitchen became the ante chamber of Heaven. To cook was to pray; to serve tables was to have fellowship with God. So was it with Jesus "the Carpenter of Nazareth who made common things for God."

The Saints Never Know How Good They Are.

Moses did not know that his face shone as he came down from the Mount, but all Israel knew, which was what really mattered.

The saint unconsciously makes it possible for other people to believe in the love of God. Think this over! Does your life and mine make it possible for those who know us best to believe in the God of love and peace? It just means that the saint is good through and through in every chamber of his being. More and more I feel that the exceeding value of such goodness is its effortless delicacy. Here is a very beautiful and complete description of a saintly lady—"She was intellectual without learning, regal without vanity, saintly without ritual, capable without fussiness, witty without venom, humorous without malice, and merry without frivolity—a typical saint of the back streets, not a whit behind the stately choice of the Great Saintdom." Think this through and remember:

Blest are the humble souls that see
Their emptiness and poverty
Treasures of Grace to them are given
And crowns of Joy laid up in Heaven.

The Future is with the Saints of the Lord.

"The saints shall judge the world" and share the sovereignty of Christ.

The trouble with the church is that there are not enough saints to go round. The wheels of the church drag heavily because the members are not saintly enough. Religion will revive outside the church when it revives inside the church. When the saints are captured the sinners will be collared. Listen! all those who have their "place in THE SUN," what would happen to a letter addressed "To the saints at Norfolk or New York, Moscow or London, or Maine, the General Council or Washington, D. C."? Would it be returned not know or left in the dead letter office?

"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." Seven things to the "seven"!

us. But, in addition to his lack of social interest, I should say that the whole of the meaning of developing science in the Creativity of God escaped explicit recognition.

Carlyle is quoted as setting forth this, as did Tennyson, in vast poetic rhythms: "Understand it well, the Thing thou beholdest, that Thing is an Action, the product and expression of exerted Force: the All of Things is an infinite conjugation of the verb to do. Shoreless Fountain—Ocean of Force, of power to do; where Force rolls and circles, billowing, many-streamed, harmonious; wide as Immensity, deep as Eternity; beautiful and terrible, not to be comprehended: this is what man names Existence and Universe—reflex—of One Unnameable, dwelling in inaccessible Light! From beyond the Star-galaxies, from before the Beginning of Days, it billows and rolls—round thee, nay thyself art of it, in this point of space where thou now standest, in this moment which thy clock measures." Men dismissed this as noble poetry till came the Atom Bomb. It is not surprising that it escaped theology. Bell lived it—many didn't. It now opens to Thought.

Niagara stopped once! Owing to an ice dam thrown across the river, the river, the waters failed, the rainbow melted, the vast music was hushed. But there has been no moment in which the love of God has failed toward the rational universe, when its eternal music has been broken, or the rainbow has ceased to span the throne. There never will be such a moment. The crystal tide flows richly, and flows forever.—Watkinson.

THE WORLD'S SHORTEST, WISEST CREED

By ALBERT W. PALMER

We need a short, definite, believable, personal creed for daily living in times like these. It ought to be brief enough to be easily remembered, and yet comprehensive enough to box the compass of the Christian faith. It ought to be so transparently clear that anyone could understand it; beautiful, capable of being used in the ritual of our worship. It ought to be venerable, containing well-loved truths that have helped and comforted generations of men and women down across the ages. And it ought to be authoratative—a statement that would bind all sorts of Christians in a true ecumenical fellowship.

We have such a creed! It has only sixty-six words in its longest form. And you all know it by heart. It is the Lord's Prayer! "But the Lord's Prayer is a prayer, not a creed," you say. Yes, but behind it and within it there is an implied faith, an inner creed, for there are certain things which you must believe as you pray the Lord's Prayer with insight and sincerity.

Article I

The prayer begins, "Our Father who art in Heaven." "Stop," you say, "heaven is an unreal world. It suggests golden streets and gates of pearl, as depicted in Revelation." But Jesus had never read the book of Revelation—it hadn't been written in his day! What he really said, according to the Greek text was: "Our Father, who art in the heavens." What he had in mind was evidently the whole creation, the cosmic process. As one of our students put it in leading chapel, Jesus meant "Our Father, who art in the Universe"! That makes the prayer meaningful for modern man, doesn't it? For we do believe that there is a creative and sustaining Power at the heart of the universe. Why not put down, then as Article I of your creed: "I believe that the God who by his power and wisdom has created and upholds the universe is my father."

Article II

"Hallowed be thy name." It means more than "Don't swear, avoid profanity." It recognizes the deep need of the human soul to come into harmony with God through worship and communion. Put it down, then, as Article II: "I believe in prayer and worship, in the sacred and mystical experiences of life through which I come into harmony with God."

Article III

"Thy Kingdom come." Another oldfashioned word? Perhaps if Jesus were teaching in our streets today he would say not "the Kingdom of God" but the "Republic of God." Or even closer to our daily speech, why not "God's Social Order"? There is something to think about! A social order in harmony with God's revelation in Christ—think what that might be. A health department with the Great Physician as commissioner of health. A school system with the Great Teacher as the head. A police department with Jesus as Chief of Police! Does it shock you? Or challenge your imagination? Dare you write down, as Article III: "I believe in a Social Order in harmony with the teachings of Jesus." If you can't, why pray, "Thy Kingdom come"?

Article IV

"Thy will be done." Sometimes we say this in hours shadowed by tragedy. Unable to explain or understand the mystery of defeat and suffering, we simply have to trust the greater wisdom and far horizons of the will of God. But what Jesus meant here in this prayer was something positive and triumphant. There is a will of God, and that will is for truth and love and beauty, for honor, for kindness and cooperation. Let's write in our creed, Article IV: "I believe in the holy and creative will of God and dedicate myself to seek it and obey it."

Article V

Now the three great petitions of the prayer. First, "Give us this day our daily bread." Surely Jesus meant more than the wheaten loaf. He meant all the basic economic necessities of life: food, clothing, shelter, a job to earn these things, a school for the children and a home on a decent street. And note the mighty plural; you cannot pray for these things selfishly. You must reach out and include all other men—the victims of war and industrial oppression, the refugees on the high-roads of the world, the evacuees in concentration camps. Put them all in your creed and say, Article V, "I believe God wants decent living conditions for every man of every race and nation."

Article VI

"Forgive us . . . as we forgive." Jesus knew that you might solve all of man's economic problems, and yet leave mankind utterly miserable. Forgiveness is the heart and touchstone of love, for "love is but the soul's immortal thirst to be completely known and all forgiven." Write it down quickly then: Article VI, "I believe in love that suffers long and is kind and forgives." It is vastly needed in our war-intoxicated world with its propaganda of prejudice, pride and hatred.

Article VII

"Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Here is the inner citadel of life—a man's own personal character. Alas for the man who loses out here, who becomes morally color-blind so that he calls good evil and evil good. What can you do for a man who has perverted his sense of right and wrong? No wonder Jesus made this the climax of the prayer. Article VII, then, "I believe in the supreme importance of personal integrity. I must be straight and clean and true."

But someone says, "Where does Christ come into your creed?" The answer is: This is the creed of Christ! He spoke these words, lived them, taught them, went to the cross for the truths they teach. To live in their light is to know him as the Lord and Master of your soul.

VOLUME C.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1948.

NUMBER 22.

Do You Believe In the Holy Christian Church?

If you believe in the Holy Christian Church, you should express your belief by going to church. Going, not simply when you happen to feel like it, or when it is convenient, or when there is no other place you would rather go, or if there is nothing more appealing or pressing but go to church consistently, make it the habit of your life. It gives a moral tone to the household where its members accept the time of service on Sunday morning as belonging to God, and fulfill their obligation to Him by worshipping with others.

If you believe in the Holy Christian Church, you should express your belief by inviting others to attend church with you. People do this with other things in life they count of value. Why not with the church? Every member should be a committee of one to tell others about his church and invite them to come to its services. One of the greatest things which could happen to any church would be for its members to be in their places at its services and bring others to share in its worship.

If you believe in the Holy Christian Church you should be informed concerning its ideals, its objectives and achievements. The story of the church is more gripping than any novel ever written. There are happenings in the church, locally, at home and abroad that are fascinating in the extreme. Every member should be informed, and by so doing become a propagandist for the greatest cause on earth.

If you believe in the Holy Christian Church you should pay your share for its support. We read in the Bible that where your treasure is there will your heart be also. One reason for the negligible interest some members have in their church is because of the very limited financial investment they have made in it. Without exception the people who have the deepest interest in the church are those who consistently put their money into it. Were the members of any church all to be tithers, that church would have no financial problems. The genius of the Christian religion is giving, not getting, and this applies to finances as well as to other phases of life.

Go to church, invite others to church, be informed about the church, pay for the church and pray for the church. By so doing you will help to advance immeasurably the cause of Christ here on the earth.—Dr. Nelson C. Drier, Superintendent of Congregational Christian Churches of Southern California.

A REPUBLIC NOT A DEMOCRACY.

No word in the English language has been dealt with more carelessly or interpreted more loosely than the word democracy.

The fact is we do not have a democracy in America. We never have had. Ours is a republic, as set forth by the Constitution of the United States. The two forms of government are not consistent with each other. They are not compatible. In a democracy the people govern themselves without representatives. In a republic they are governed by elected representatives, as we, in America, have been ever since 1776.

Democracy is defined by the Standard Dictionary as "the political system in which government is directly exercised or controlled by the people collectively; government by the people." The same authority defines a republic as "a state where the sovereign resides in the people and the administration is lodged in officers elected by and representing the people."

It is interesting to note that the word democracy does not appear in the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution of the United States.

It is difficult to visualize a government under a pure democracy. It is not clear that there are any governments extant of this nature, where the people rule directly and without representation. It would be interesting to learn if there is any sovereignty which actually employs such rule. It would be even more interesting to know how, in detail, it is operated.

AN OPEN LETTER TO PREMIER ALCIDE DE GASPERI.

Editorial in Christian Herald
By DANIEL A. POLING, Editor.

To His Excellency, Premier Alcide de Gasperi, Rome Italy—

Honorable Sir:

Christian Herald, the most widely circulated Protestant journal, congratulates you and the Italian people on a great victory won—a victory not only for Italy, but for all free peoples and for those who would be free. Without regard for race, fath or color, all Americans—Catholics, Jews and Protestants—have added such strength as they could to your memorable struggle.

In the hour of triumph we are enheartened by your forthright words of April 21, pledging your administration to “freedom of political parties, freedom of assembly and freedom of labor.” Your declaration that though the Italian people “are attached to the Catholic Church, they are politically independent of the Vatican,” carries assurance to democratic peoples everywhere. Such expressions are a timely answer to editorials in the Manchester Guardian, the London Times and the New York Times which expressed the hope that your government would affirm its loyalty to those freedoms and reforms that Communism charges our democratic governments with neglecting or abridging at home while rendering them lip service abroad.

As Protestants, we give you our support when you stigmatize the scurrilous propaganda attacks made against the Vatican and the Pope. We do not overlook the fact that these attacks are directed also against our faith, for Communism is equally an anti-God and an anti-democratic ideology. As Protestants we further recognize the unique place of the Roman Catholic Church in the tradition and life of the Italian people. At the hour of victory, the eloquent plea of Pope Pius XII for social reforms strengthens freedom everywhere.

As you proceed now to implement the broad principles outlined in your address, your Government will take from the enemies of freedom their principal propaganda material and set a brave example for the nations of the West.

Particularly, the American people rejoice in freedom of religion. In the Italian Peace Treaty signed on February 10, 1947, this freedom is recognized in these historic words: “To take the necessary steps in order to insure to any person . . . irrespective of race, sex, language, religion, the exercise of the rights of man and the fundamental liberties including . . . freedom of religion.” Though in your message we missed specific references to this freedom, we are sure that you included it in your thinking.

We voice now the earnest hope of more than 110 millions of Americans who are not Roman Catholics that, in the hour of your triumph, you will move to implement more fully “freedom of religion” for our fellow Protestants in Italy and for all other religious minorities. Though few in numbers, theirs is an honored history and they have pledged and given their loyalty to your valiant struggle against Communism.

At this point we recognize that the Lateran Pacts present problems to your administration. But these problems may—and we believe will—be solved with justice to our fellow Protestants, to the Jews and to all other minority groups whom present Italian relations between church and state may deprive of some liberties which your constitution guarantees and which we believe you support.

While the overwhelming majority of all American citizens are not Roman Catholics, our Protestant majority is not more free than the weakest minority among us. In the spirit of this, our basic liberty, we appeal to you now on behalf of our fellow-Protestants and all other minority groups in Italy. Surely a minister of a minority sect, in order to preach and practice, should not be required to obtain the approval of secular authorities if a priest of the majority religion is not so required. Surely he should not be compelled to obtain permission of the local Prefect if called by his church to a new parish in another community. Surely our bro-

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

FOR ALL THE SAINTS.

Congregations innumerable will assemble on the next Lord's Day in appropriate services of worship "For all the saints who from their labors rest, who Thee by faith before the world confessed, Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blest."

Memorial Day should be a great day in all our churches. Our real wealth or poverty may be gauged by our memories. As countless sons and daughters repair to their ancestral houses of worship let memory irrigate the spirit with its healing stream. Lip service and flowers for our beloved dead are in order, but inadequate. Offerings for the cause near and dear to them should be generous. Nothing less than a complete rededication of life is an adequate tribute to our beloved dead.

"And when the strife is fierce, the warfare long, steals on the ear the distant triumph song, and hearts are brave again, and arms are strong."

MORE CORNERSTONES.

The laying of a church cornerstone is a historic and prophetic act. It marks the consummation of a dream, the embodiment of a vision. It crowns the faith, labors and sacrifices of a people with success. It binds up the sacred aspirations of a congregation and gives to them the strength, beauty and endurance of stone. It enables a God-fearing and God-serving people to see the travail of their souls and be satisfied. It is at once the substance of things long hoped for and the evidence of things not yet seen. It marks the translation of the dollar into the deed, the accolade into architecture, the timely into the timeless.

The cornerstone laying is not only a commemoration, it is a commencement. It is the genesis of many holy influences. It gives rise to a new train of Christian worship, stewardship and evangelism. A new era of corporate life and fellowship is inaugurated. An additional unit in the Kingdom of God is given local habitation and a name. New life and redemptive influences are liberated. A bridge is built to reach generations unborn with Christian teaching.

Services of cornerstone laying, May 16 at Bethlehem (N. C. & Va. Conf.) and at Asheboro (W. N. C. Conf.) at 3:00 p. m., May 30, are important dates on the Church Calendar of our Convention. Bethlehem is erecting a new and more adequate structure while Asheboro has just completed its first sanctuary. Both are to be commended. Given the proper support, encouragement and leadership, assuredly there are other such services throughout the Convention in the offing. Strategic areas still cry for new churches. We need more ecclesiastical cornerstones.

THE BERRIES.

The berries are strawberries. But the name is inadequate. Who would guess that the lowly strawberry, that enlarged pulpy receptacle bearing many achenes, constituting the fruit of this rosaceous herb, could become the delectable queen of all desserts, strawberry shortcake?

Strawberries test the skill and reward the ingenuity of the farmer. Agricultural experts state that the average farmer will realize 3,500 quarts per acre, while the progressive farmer will raise up to 8,000 or 10,000 quarts, with a net income ranging from $500 to $1,000 per acre. This fact is a powerful incentive to discover improved methods of farming. "By their fruits . . ."

The farmer enjoys the extra cash from his strawberry patch at this season of the year. City children are fascinated by the visit of the highly vocal "strawberry man." And thanks to the freezing industry, we now enjoy the flavor and fruit of this colorful berry the year around. The very mention of strawberry ice cream sets up a salivary chain reaction, the excessive liberation of the diastatic enzyme ptyalin which incapacitates one in the delivery of an appropriate encomium.

God gives his best to us in many ways. Indeed, "This is my Father's World." By all the tests of sight, smell and taste, the strawberry is worthy of our highest praise.

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON FAMILY LIFE.

Many conferences are held at the White House; but an unprecedented one was held there May 5-8—the National Conference on Family Life, sponsored by one hundred twenty-five national organizations, attended by nine hundred delegates and thirty visitors from foreign lands. President Truman extended to the Conference the courtesy of the White House and addressed a special session. "Government itself is ultimately based on families," said the President. "Education and religion are mightily advanced if family life is sound and creative and are greatly hampered if family life is unsatisfactory. When homes crumble the social, moral, economic and governmental structures of the nation are weakened."

There is, happily, a growing concern for this basic structure of our national life. This is a great age for the Christian family. New knowledge, techniques and resources are available to the mentally and spiritually alert.

Dr. L. Foster Wood summarized the White House Conference as follows:

"The Conference in its various sections gave attention to the various needs of beginning families, growing families and families in the more mature years when their children are setting up homes of their own. Plenary sessions brought out the gist of those findings and of the studies made by various committees in preparation for the conference.

"It was an aim of the conference that it should survey the total scene in which families now live, and should work toward a national policy in which every aspect of our life would be directed toward the good of families. Housing, economic factors, education, social and health services and governmental acts and policies must all be scrutinized in terms of what they do to families. All the forces of the nation must do their part in maintaining the vitality of our fundamental unit, the home.

"Extended reports of this Conference will be given in the Survey Graphic for June. Other reports will be published in various ways. Effects and findings of these sessions will enter into the programs and activities of the organizations which sponsored the conference and of other bodies. Thus its influence will go on into the coming years.

"Such a national conference is a tremendous challenge to the churches to gear their programs more and more definitely to the spiritual and other needs of families and to build families as local units of God's reign and nurture centers for the life of God in human personalities. A national conference of church leaders to consider the meaning for church programs of the White House Conference and the whole family life movement is being planned."

The Greatest Letters Ever Written

By FRANCIS C. STIFLER, D. D., Sec'y American Bible Society

Most people, I have discovered, do not like to write letters but everybody likes to read them. Personal letters, not written for publication, are the clearest reflection of the writer's mind and heart and are the most trustworthy kind of historical evidence. There is something peculiarly precious about a personal letter from one you love. And when, as it happens now and then, some one becomes famous and his biography is being written, his letters prove invaluable for they let us into the very inner chambers of the great man's soul.

The New Testament is rich in original letters—letters that were, for the most part, written with not the slightest idea of their every being published. Letters comprising almost one-fourth of the New Testament came from the pen of one man, the Apostle Paul. A recent writer has described him as a human tornado. He wrote with veritable gusts of argument and passion; he travelled with a feverish zeal that brought upon him enough calamity to have killed a dozen men; he challenged the current religious cults of his time with a courage that seemed foolhardy. He was a frail man with chronic limitation but he drove on to accomplish maybe more than any other man who ever gave himself in complete surrender to the Lordship of Christ.

This vivid spirit left us thirteen of his personal letters, long for letters but for the most part constituting the shorter books of the Bible. It is not an exaggeration to say that these spontaneous, informal writings have had more to do with the shaping of human history than any other writings, except the four Gospels, that have ever been penned. Paul's are not light reading, but they are so important that an honest man ought to make a special effort to master them as he does the technical books he studies to gain his livelihood.

Here are two suggestions that will help anyone. First read at one sitting the Book of Acts, especially from the beginning of the eighth chapter. This much of the book comprises only about fifty pages of ordinary size and gives you the picture of the beginnings of the Christian movement with Paul as the chief actor. You can read these chapters in about an hour.

My other suggestion is that you invest in what is called the Parallel New Testament. There are two books with this title, alike in that they present on each page in one column the familiar King James text, and in the other, one of the modern English versions. My point is this—that not a few of the difficulties you have with Paul lie in the archaic English of the King James version—and by looking across the column the modern translation may clear up your difficulty.

But whether you read Paul's letters in modern English or not, you will find yourself reading them to immense profit if you will be on the lookout for his great thoughts which keep recurring again and again.

Look for Paul's confident affirmations of faith. Paul was sure of himself because he was sure of Christ. He did not just drift into his surrender to Christ. For him it came only after a major battle. You cannot read anywhere in Paul's letters for half an hour without feeling that Jesus Christ was to him really alive—the same yesterday, today and forever; that nothing has ever touched or altered, or can touch or altar the person of Christ.

Paul keeps saying in one way or another that in Christ we are more than conquerors. To him the overpowering idea is that Christ lives. The inexhaustible source of such conviction is Paul's experience on the Damascus road. Luke tells the story in his ninth chapter and reports Paul's telling it twice more, once in Jerusalem where he spoke in Hebrew, and again before the Roman King Agrippa at Caesarea, where he spoke in Greek.

For us the conversion of Paul is one of the greatest facts in history. Let the psychologist call it whatever he wants to. We must judge it by its results. From that moment on one of the most brilliant well-balanced scholars in history drove himself back and forth over the Roman Empire, determined to know nothing but Christ crucified as his emancipator. If Paul had been some deranged neurotic that would have been the end of the story—but see what has come of it. Out of this liberation of Paul's spirit came the Book of Galatians, which has rightly been called the Charter of Freedom and the basis of real democracy. Out of Paul's conversion came the Book of Romans which gave us both the Reformation under Luther and the Great Revival under Wesley. The day Paul met Christ on the Damascus road was Emancipation Day for every Christian. So I say read Paul looking for his great affirmation.

Then, read him for one other thing. Look for this toward the close of most of his letters.

In these concluding exhortations he invariably exhorts his readers to lead good lives. He out-does himself in this, not only in the matchless 13th of First Corinthians, but in the 12th to the 15th chapters of Romans. Get out your Bible and read the 12th chapter of Romans and as you read it, remember that these few words have had more to do with making your world a better one than Paul's was than possibly any words ever written. As you read them, too, just consider their timeliness, and do one more thing—check your own life against them and resolve that beginning today, you will not be overcome with evil but will overcome evil with good.

There are many forms of triumph, but there is no other success that in any shape or way approaches that which is open to the men and women who have the right ideals. These are the men and women who see that it is the intimate and homely things that count most. They are the men and women who have the courage to strive for the happiness which comes only with labor, effort and self-sacrifice, and only to those whose joy in life springs in part from power of work and sense of duty.—Chas. R. Wiers.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is not right that we should give up preaching the word of God to serve tables. We will devote ourselves to prayer and to the ministry of the word. Quotation marks belong about the above lines, but they have been left without to emphasize the fact that the church and the world are greatly in need today of thousands and tens of thousands of people who will do just that. The disciples, now appointed by the Lord to be apostles, hadn't gotten as far as the sixth chapter of Acts, before they learned that the church increased with their preaching the word, and that it lagged when they "served tables." They were certain that to keep a fresh and open line of communication with the Christ through prayer was something that was absolutely necessary. Two things made inescapable demands upon them: Prayer, and the Ministry of the World!

The mind and spirit of the minister who devotes—that word will bear study—himself to prayer and the ministry of the word grow. His knowledge of God's word increases, and with that knowledge his spirit of loving understanding and patient delivery of it in message and work ripens. He by his constant prayer becomes not a fanatic but a warm and understanding friend, a minister of Jesus Christ. That is what every pulpit and every pastorate in our Convention needs.

But how is the minister in a complex community life, of which he is a part, going to keep from "serving tables"? Well, if he feels about prayer as I do, he will have a daily, on-the-spot answer to that question whenever it is needed. He is in constant communication with the Lord and if that be so some of the things he may think is "serving tables" may turn out to be serving the Lord, who more than once served enough food to feed thousands. The word will be ministered in more ways than we may realize if we keep close to Him in prayer and devote ourselves to its ministry. But let us not for once overstep and make that an excuse for doing what we please outside of "preaching the word." In our complex community life the pastor who comes daily from a place of fellowship with his Lord is needed. The less he advertises the "praying in secret," however, the better—for if advertised, how can it be secret! But the pastor who prays in secret shall be rewarded openly—even though in his humility he might prefer that the promise stop with the word "rewarded" and the "openly" be omitted.

It was that kind of preaching with such a spirit of devotion to the ministry of the word and prayer which carried on the Pentecost so well that it fulfilled its mission of establishing the church in the world. Such devotion to the ministry of the word, and such an understanding and use of prayer today would greatly help to heal the hurt of nations and fix the spirit of the Kingdom of God in the earth.

ELK SPUR.

Spring of the year surely has come here in the mountains—the laurel and ivy, and other flowers can be seen over the hills for miles in their beautiful colors. Even though I have lived in these mountains all of my life, I have never gotten used to the beauty of them. When we look over them and see how beautiful they are, it should make all of us realize that no one except God can create such beauty.

In the dear old church on the hill God is truly blessing us in our Sunday school. We began on Easter Sunday, and we are having an average of seventy-five. We have a truck which brings in some of the folks for about five miles around. It takes right much work for the people here to carry on Sunday school and church without some help, but it surely can be done. We forget all about the trouble and worry when we see about forty children of different ages, some with flowers, and all with happy smiles. Without our Sunday school, these children would be deprived of going to church on Sunday. The greatest thing we have in our church is our children and their singing. We invite all our friends to visit us this summer.

PRAYER.

By REV. R. C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Our Heavenly Father, Thou God of the ages past, of the present, and of all time to come, Thou God of all peoples and of all races of men, we pause in united praise and prayer to Thee.

We thank Thee for the privilege of living in Thy world. We thank Thee for our nation and for our heritage of freedom. We thank Thee for the unselfish, forward-looking, noble minded men and women of the past whose chief purpose in life was to serve their generation and posterity. Grant, O God, that we, too, may be numbered among those who are motivated by the sublime desire to reverence and honor Thee and to be a blessing to our fellow men.

Above all others we thank Thee for the life of Jesus Christ who was the personification of all that is good and beautiful and great in human life—the embodiment of Thine own divine nature.

We today would renew our allegiance to him and to the church that bears his name. Baptize each of us, who profess to be his disciples, with Thy divine concern for Thy world and its needs. Baptize us with Thy Holy Spirit—the spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour, that we like him may not count our lives dear unto ourselves, but rich with the high privilege of service to our day and generation.

In the consciousness that though we are here today, we, too, may be gone tomorrow, and that no one can tell what a day may bring forth, may we each one be inspired this day most sincerely to resolve to set our lives in order before Thee—to repent of our sins, to seek Thy divine forgiveness, and to consecrate our lives—our talents and all with which Thou hast blessed us—in the service of Thy Church and Thy Kingdom.

We pray for the members of all the churches and for all the churches throughout the world that all may be specially blessed of Thee in response to their fuller consecration to Thee. Give power to Thy Church Universal, O God, that the light of its faith may burn with steady brightness midst the tumult and darkness of our times.

Bathe our souls with Thy Holy Presence, calm our spirits, illumine our minds, and make stronger our faith in the ultimate triumph of all that is true and good and right.

In the name of our Lord Christ. Amen.

The Fun 'n Fellowship and the Pilgrim Stewards groups of the Greensboro, First Church, held their annual Spring Retreat at Camp Hanes on the week-end of May 22 and 23. These few hours of "getting away" from all the hurry of every-day life gave us a chance to stand back and look at our lives and what we have done, are doing, and need to do. Our Retreat this spring was very informal, with a good bit of free time. We had several very well planned and inspiring services. We came to the conclusion this year that most of us are living in too big of a hurry and we need to slow down and get a better look at life.

THINGS ARE POPPIN'!

May 2 was an important date for young people of the newly established district in Eastern North Carolina. Several churches were represented at this first rally. If interest were a yardstick of success, we might say that this district will become very active in coming months.

The meeting opened at 4:30 with Baxter Twiddy presiding. Evelyne Moore led the group in the opening services of worship. Following was a period of "getting acquainted." General aspects of youth activity were discussed, being interspersed with some of the well-liked folk songs—"Patrick Farland," "Rejoice, Rejoice," and "I'm a Little Prairie Flower." Camp information was given later in the program. Youth Outreach was introduced and some discussion followed on it. Sanford and Hope Mills gave encouraging reports on what they both had been doing in their churches. Two projects undertaken by Sanford were raising money for an outdoor bulletin board and for hymnals to be used in the church worship services. Lee Smith, president of the Hope Mills Youth Fellowship, told about projects of his group. Although only organized in December, there are now forty young people in the group. Church World Service, a Christmas fund, and raising money for a new roof on the church have been a part of the program at Hope Mills. The afternoon session closed at 5:30 for our fellowship supper and a period of folk songs.

The evening program opened with a worship service conducted by Baxter Twiddy. Slides from Camp Hanes constituted the highlight of the rally. Baxter Twiddy and Evelyne Moore were narrators, and Warren Beale, from Franklin, Va., was the slide operator.

This is the second district to begin meeting—Forsyth County being the first. A desire to continue to meet was expressed at Sanford. We hope that this new venture may be a beginning of more fellowship for all young people in our churches and a step toward youth groups of greater strength in Christian character, faith, and service.

This series of Spring District Rallies was continued Sunday, May 9, when the young people of the Greensboro-Burlington-Lynchburg area met at the Burlington Church for their meeting. The same general procedure was followed as at the Sanford Rally. The rally opened at 3:00 p. m. with Betty Chicoine presiding and leading in the opening worship. Baxter Twiddy led the group in several folk songs. Youth Outreach was presented to the group and discussed. Camp dates were given and a set of slides made at Camp Hanes was shown. The group enjoyed this very much because they recognized many faces in the pictures. At 6:00 we adjourned to the church lawn for our picnic supper and then returned for the closing worship service.

One group attending this rally deserves special recognition—the group from Lynchburg. They had 21 members present and drove 125 miles to Burlington and then had to drive back in order to attend the rally. We think they are swell!

Sanford District . . . Burlington District . . . Henderson District . . . All of these areas have had fine meetings during the past three Sundays. We met young people we hadn't known before; we sang the hymns and songs familiar and dear to campers; we enjoyed picnic suppers; we had fun with stunt songs, games, and talent shows; we went to camp for a day through colored slides—we all attended a "little Camp Hanes." And the host churches (even though we hadn't suggested it) were bountiful in providing "extras" for the picnic supper!

These district meetings are an experiment for some parts of the Con-

WE KEEP EASTER IN HAITIEN.

(Late Easter Day . . . my second Easter back in Yenching—in Peking after the years of exile in Cheng Tu and the long health furlough. Getting to be one of the seniors and a bit lazy about writing . . . but in times to come I shall like to remember this Easter in the village church. I have belonged to for over twenty years. So here it is . . .)

Bitter weather just before our Festival Day. The trees have been bowed in chilly winds from the Gobi, and their buds, showing green points have kept close within their grown sepals. Under the Lenten moon I have watched my Western Hills lying in mist-like rime. But this morning the air was mild. The sun shone in glory. The life which has been creeping about rather shiveringly in the cold (including the toes of a not-so-young missionary) has now released.

The children were at the gates of our Church Compound before seven o'clock, which is a very exacting hour for Pastor Ch'i whose Lenten duties have been heavy. However, he and his family made ready last night for the onslaught of young Haitien as I found when I arrived. The beautiful great geranium plants which Mrs. Ch'i has nursed all winter are heavy with blooms—white, red and rose, and they make a brave offering of flowery freshness in the church chancel. Standing by itself was one calla lily given long ago in less inflationary days when I could offer such things to our Easter service in memory of father and mother. This single plant has survived, and it made me think of the linen cloth folded apart by itself. This year I had cut branches of Forsythia from my garden shrubs and forced them for our altar vases. So when the children streamed in through our open gates, there was evidence of the fresh life waiting for them, and they filled the church benches, a jostling, whispering, goggling little mob, until Pastor Ch'i came down the aisle with his Bible and hymnbook when peace was suddenly in our midst. (Children learn manners under Pastor Ch'i!)

At the organ was the oldest daughter of the Ch'i household—a young woman with a sweet and well trained voice. Yu Chen was married over two years ago to a young instructor in a neighboring university, but every Sunday finds her in her place at the organ to help her father in the service. (In fact, it seems rather a striking thing about the numerous children in the Ch'i household, that no one seems to be needing to express himself in revolt. The young people quite simply love their father and try to help him, but in this day and generation this seems little short of a miracle! So now, at half past seven on Easter morning, Yu Chen sat and played, and led in the singing of "Christ the Lord is Risen Today." The children shouted happily, coming in very strong on Allelulia.

I sat at the back and in between my own worship I indulged in wonderings. What is it that this time and place may mean to these three hundred and more little people? I deal every day with students in Yenching who feel that religion has nothing to offer the masses. I know that this may very well be the last Easter before the Red Occupation of North China. What will that mean to the congregation of the morning? This is a little church begun thirty or more years ago by our American Board Mission. We bought the land and built the first street chapel and paid Pastor Ch'i, then newly graduated from the Yenching School of Religion. Under his devoted care the tiny group increased. A small number of solid Haitien citizens became the core of the group. Some of the junior university families living in the town rather than on the campus (which has its own religious organization) were added. Slowly the Board of Trustees became able to assume items of the budget. As emergencies like famine and war swept across the face of North China, the center for relief and refugee work in Haitien was invariably the church. A school was added. A health service to the families of the children was set up. There was cooperation with other good citizen efforts which sprouted in Haitien from time to time. And in season and out of season, the Word was preached. And so, shortly before the Japanese Occupation the American Board made over to the Haitien Board of Trustees the property, which by that time had a dignified church edifice—and Haitien Church was self-supporting. And I was thinking of all this as I looked at the children and asked myself what does this labor of love mean to them?

Some things are concrete enough. For one thing, the church means space. Most of them live with the whole of a numerous family in one small room. It must be good to come into the high and spaciousness of the church building. Also, it means cleanliness and order. Every child on Easter morning had washed his face and hands and put on the most seemly clothes he could get together. And surely the church means all these little folks can know of beauty . . . flowers, music, pictures (not many of those) and the poetry of hymn and psalm. It means friendly human relations, of which they may or may not have other experience. It certainly means high holiday and fun. The church playground is full of children whenever the gates are open, which is most of the days. And then it means the teachings of Christ, so familiar to me that I grow dulled I sometimes fear to their tremendous sweetness and significance. But to
